TO THE READER.

A GENERAL view of the various public and private sources of information which form the basis of the present work, will more appropriately accompany the termination of the author's labours; whilst, by presenting the leading outline of his plan with the first portion, the expectations of his readers will be regulated, and he may escape much censure for having omitted what he never intended to supply. The rapid accumulation of his materials from continued research in the public offices, and the freedom of access so liberally afforded him to valuable manuscript collections and private evidences, rendered compression a necessary but increasingly difficult task; and he could with infinitely more ease, and, paradoxical as it may appear, in much less time, have swelled his work to double the size, than have reduced it within its present limits. In the disposition of his matter he has pursued the order which after mature deliberation seemed most natural and convenient, and by an undeviating adherence to this systematic uniformity, a facility of reference is produced which will supersede any parochial index beyond a list of the places described.

The etymology of a parish is the first object of inquiry: the most obvious or probable derivations are suggested with diffidence, but he disclaims the talents, had he the space for etymological disquisition.

On the present state of a parish, whether open or enclosed, its extent, principal proprietors, boundaries, soil, and all other points of local information, he has been guided by, and spared no assiduity in procuring the best resident authorities, but for the uniform accuracy of the statements he ought not perhaps to be held personally responsible. In the summary of landed proprietors he has fixed the minimum at 100 acres, and when the aggregate number of acres in a parish exceeds those given in detail, the residue is distributed in smaller estates.

Natural history, though not strictly within his province, has not been altogether excluded, and he has incorporated the most interesting parochial notices in Morton as they respectively arise. The lists of scarce plants, fossils, and birds, where no particular reference is made, are contributed by his sister, who is the constant companion of his topographical excursions, and feels an interest in his undertaking no less keen than his own. The professed naturalist would require a more rigid selection, but it is presumed some latitude is due to the gratification of local feeling.

In the deduction of manorial property—one of the most important branches of county history—he has studied to combine perspicuity with brevity. Many parishes were originally composed of different fees, and much confusion and error have arisen from the paramount and mesne interests being blended together in the same narrative. He has endeavoured therefore to keep them perfectly distinct, and has pursued each fee separately in succession from domesday to the present time; or till merging in others it ceased to be necessary; or being alienated in parcels, it ceased to be practicable. The heading prefixed serves not only as an index to the domesday lord, but to the intermediate seignories which grew out of successive subinfeudations. Though the paramouncy lost its beneficial value on the abolition of the feudal system, and, of the numerous privileges of the superior lord, scarcely any now remain beyond the barren suit and service of a court leet; yet to the county historian its descent is still of the utmost importance, as the tenure frequently furnishes a correct, and indeed the only clue, to the appropriation of the different coexistent manors in a parish. The information exclusively derived from his predecessor Bridges he has copied verbatim, and, deprecating invidious comparison, or the imputation of controversy, he has silently corrected evident inaccuracies, and unless allusion was imperiously required has abstained from noticing the opposite conclusions to which they have sometimes been led on points open to difference of opinion. The places selected for the genealogical accounts of the principal families are printed in capitals, and referred to only in treating of their other possessions, whereby useless repetitions are avoided, and considerable space will be saved in the progress of the work.

His restricted limits have not permitted him to attempt more than satisfactorily to trace a manor into and out of a family; nor perhaps is it to be regretted, for the line of blood through which it descended, especially if combined with the collateral ramifications, may be exhibited much more clearly in a genealogical table, than by verbal narrative, and the technical references to the escheats or inquisitions post mortem, introduced to verify the descents, remove in a great measure the necessity for abstracting them. The pedigrees have relieved the text also from the dry details of dates, matrimonial alliances, and honorable appointments. The leading authorities are placed at the head of each, but the author has taken nothing on trust which he had the means of subjecting to the test of public or private documents. Numerous as the pedigrees will be found, none unconnected with manorial property have been admitted, or the number might easily have been augmented, to an almost indefinite extent, from heraldic visitations, and families of respectability possessed of impropriations, advowsons, and other estates.

The monastic establishments, and possessions of the religious houses, follow the manorial history; for, though ecclesiastical in their origin, yet having been converted into lay property by the dissolution, this seemed the most natural arrangement.

In describing the pictorial embellishments of the manor houses and mansions, the portraits may be thought to engage a disproportionate attention, but it should be remembered that they not only command a strong local and family interest, but are the frequent objects of inquiry to the amateur and collector for the purposes of topographical and biographical illustration.

The history of a parochial benefice naturally suggests three divisions:—by whom founded and to whom the patronage belongs; of what it consists; and by whom held. Where the impropriate rectory and advowson of a vicarage have been severed, the descent of each is separately deduced from the crown grantee, or the period of separation. Their ancient and modern state are also distinctly treated. A brief explanation of the ecclesiastical taxations and surveys is introduced under Abington, the first parish. In the general summary of each benefice, the easter offerings and surplice fees are always implied, though omitted; and where the rectorial and vicarial rights have been regulated under acts of inclosure, the official allotment of the land has been adopted, which in many cases is several acres less than the modern measurement.

The series of Incumbents down to the middle of the sixteenth century—is with occasional additions—copied from Bridges, on the authority of the Lincoln registers; and continued to the present time from a transcript which the author has been kindly permitted to make from the episcopal registers at Peterborough.

Though far from completing Fawsley Hundred in this portion, he has considerably exceeded the quantity of matter contemplated in his original estimate. He has not only adopted a much smaller type than the other county histories now in progress; but, in order as much as possible to economise space, has printed the incumbents and epitaphs (where practicable) in columns, and the pedigrees in a still smaller type, and in the most condensed form. He knows not whether it will be right or prudent to enlist this plea in palliation of his embellishments not being either so numerous or highly finished as he could have wished, but at least he can safely affirm that he has gone to the extreme boundary which a due regard to prudential considerations would warrant. Most of the vignettes and two of the plates are drawn and etched by his sister; they do not pretend to challenge competition with professional productions, but as the first efforts of one unaided by instruction, he trusts they will be received with candour, if not with approbation. To the unsolicited liberality of Earl Spencer he is indebted for the two very interesting views of the Brington monuments.

In submitting the first portion of his work to the public, he has not the vanity to anticipate unqualified approbation; nor is he apprehensive of falling further below the ideal standard of others, than of his own. He has aimed fairly to apportion the relative claims of the different branches of his subject, but he is fully aware that every department will in turn be charged with undue preponderance or meagre deficiency, according to the varying tastes of his readers; and though correctness of statement has been his primary and invariable aim, he cannot hope to have always elicited truth unmixed with error from a mass of complex and frequently discordant materials.

The author's personal obligations during the progress of the work it will be his pleasing duty to record at the close, but he might be deemed deficient in gratitude were he now to omit his general, but warmest acknowledgments to the resident landed proprietors and clergy, for the local assistance and kind hospitality with which he has been hitherto uniformly honored; and to the gentlemen connected with public offices, for their prompt and friendly attention to his enquiries.

Spelho Hundred.

"SPELHOH,"

The saxon orthography of this hundred, presents an obvious and characteristic etymology. Spel including in its widest acceptation any species of oral address or written document, and hoh denoting a hill or elevated site, form when combined, a complete illustration of the original hundred courts, which "in the olden time," were convened in the open air, on some conspicuous well-known spot selected for the general convenience of the inhabitants: and hence most of the hundreds were primarily denominated, not from the principal town within the district, but from places of rendezvous, the very names of which have in many instances sunk into oblivion with the disuse of the custom.

In domesday this hundred is variously written, "Spelho, Spelehou, Spercholt, Sperehou, and Spelehot." The name of Spelho is still retained in a field in the northern part of Weston Favell parish, and, with other lands there, constituted in 1708 the marriage settlement of Mrs. Piers, eldest daughter of Harvey Ekins, esq. in which deed it is described as "Limekiln alias Spellow close, containing 22 acres."

This hundred is bounded on the north by Orlingbury hundred, east by Hamfordsho, south by the river Nen, which divides it from Wimersley, and west by Newbottle Grove hundred; and consists of the following parishes and hamlets:

Abington, Great Billing, Little Billing, Boughton, Kingsthorp, a parochial chapelry to St. Peter's, Northampton, Moulton, Moulton Park, extra parochial, Northampton, Pitsford, Spratton (including Little Creaton in Guilsborough hundred), and Weston Favell.

In a curious saxon certificate of the Northamptonshire hundreds, compiled between the death of Edward the confessor and the norman conquest, stating the general contents and distinguishing the specific state of the component parts, this hundred is thus surveyed. There is in "Spelhoh" four times twenty and ten hides. There is twenty hides and a half set and rated (or taxed), and five and twenty hides burgland (or enclosed with an earthwork). In "Pabmtune" is ten hides. Richard's lands pay nothing to the geld. In "Oultune" six hides. William's lands pay nothing. And eight and twenty hides waste[a].

A writ was issued to the sheriff of the county 8 Hen. 3. to give full seisin of the hundred of Spelho to the men of "Thorp" (Kingsthorp), it appearing by inquisition that the said hundred belonged to the farm of that town, and was held with it in the time of king John[b]. In 37 Hen. 8, the freeholders of Kingsthorp were summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew cause why they claimed the hundred of Spelho, with view of frank pledge, fines, amerciaments, and other privileges; to which they pleaded that it had been time immemorial member and parcel of their township, and that they held the town, with its members, by demise from the crown for term of years[c]. Judgment is not recorded, but the fee of the hundred is now vested in the crown, and the chief constables are appointed by the county magistrates.

ABINGTON,

In domesday "Abintone," and in early records Abyndon, Abendon, Abingdon, &c. is of uncertain derivation. The characteristic features or original proprietors of places are the only rational sources of local etymology; and when the attempt to appropriate a name is analogous to either of these first principles, the hypothesis is deserving of attention, though it may fail to command conviction. The saxon derivatives admit of great latitude of interpretation, and most of the celtic or gaelic roots are extremely arbitrary and varied in their orthography: the safest clue perhaps to the just application of them in compound names is furnished by a due attention to the final syllable; when expressive of residence, the preceding members of the word, to accord with it, must be personal; and when allusive to situation the antecedents should be descriptive; thus, in the place under consideration, if "Abintone" be the reading adopted, it may be traced to the saxon tone, a town, and Abin, the personal name of the first possessor, i. e. the town of Abin; or considered as Abyndon it may be referred to the saxon dune, a hill or down, added to Ab and in, two of the celtic synonimes for water and land, which will not be inapplicable to the parish, a narrow slip of land stretching from the river up to the elevated grounds of Moulton park.

The lordship contains 1090 acres, and was inclosed by private agreement in 1659, confirmed by decree in chancery 13 Car. 2 (1662). It is bounded on the north-west by Kingsthorp, on the north by Moulton-park, on the north-east and east by Weston Favell, on the south-east and south by the river Nen, which divides it from Little Houghton, Great Houghton, and part of Hardingston, in Wimersley hundred, and on the south-west by Northampton. The soil is a light red loam, of an excellent convertible quality. Elm is the principal timber.

The following scarce plants are found in this parish: Typha latifolia, the great cat's tail, near the pond. Euonymus europæus, spindle tree. Conium maculatum, hemlock. Butomus umbellatus, flowering rush. Agrimonia Eupatoria, agrimony. Reseda luteola, wild woad. Reseda lutea, rocket yellow weed. Nymphæa lutea, yellow water lily. Verbena officinalis, vervain. Solanum Dulcamara, bitter sweet. Solanum nigrum, common nightshade. Sanicula europæa, the sanicle. Thymus Calamentha, balm. Cichorium Intybus, wild endive. Bidens cernua, nodding double tooth.

There is but little stone and less gravel in this lordship. Near Campion's lodge, adjoining the road from Northampton to Moulton, is a small lime-kiln.

It is important to notice that the mill is recorded in domesday, all mills which were in existence then, or prior to 9 Edw. 2. (1315-16), being tithe free. A water-mill was a necessary appendage, and one of the most profitable incidents to a feudal manor; the tenants being compelled to pay toll and grind their corn there. This mill was however severed from the manor at an early period, for sir Robert Paveley, of Paveli's Pury, died seized of it in the reign of Edw. 3[a]. Mr. Thursby now holds it under the duchy of Cornwall by a chief rent of £4.[b]

Manorial History. A general survey of England, instituted by William the conqueror, was completed in the 20th year of his reign (1086), and is universally admitted to be the most ancient and authentic national record extant: it is commonly but very aptly termed the Domesday Book; as furnishing on the legal day of judgment, the dome or law by which the proprietorship, tenure, and value of all the landed property in the kingdom was fixed, and applied to the purposes of feudal taxation or judicial decision.

By this invaluable text-book of manorial history, it appears that Richard held four hides in "Abintone" in "Spelehou" hundred. The (arable) land consisted of eight carucates; one of which was in demesne with a ("servo") menial servant or bondman; and 12 ("villani") villeins, or modern copyholders, with five ("bordarii") bordars, who furnished provision for the lord's board or table, held four ploughs. There was a mill worth 20s. (yearly), and 20 acres of meadow. The whole was valued at 40s. (yearly) in the time of Edward the confessor, but was then advanced to £4.[c]

This Richard, who besides Abington held Benefield, Kirby (in Corby hundred), and Stibington (in Wansford[d]), is identified by Dugdale with Richard Fitz Gilbert, son of Gilbert Crispin earl of Brion in Normandy, and ancestor of the earls of Clare and Gloucester; "the first place of his residence being at Benefield in the east part of Northamptonshire as I guess; for in 1073 (6 Will. 1) he is called Ricardus de Benefacta[d]." This arbitrary similitude of sound is certainly an insufficient warrant for such a conclusion; and a concurrent series of coincidences, illustrated by the annexed pedigrees, render it almost demonstrable that he was the Richard Engaine ("Ingania") who possessed four houses in Northampton[e]; and that William Engaine ("Ingania") who held a house there under Robert de Buci[e], was his brother, and the William of Pightesley and Laxton[f]; which conjecture is corroborated by their joint estates having formed the saxon possessions of Alwyn the hunter[c]; coupled with the singular facts of Richard enjoying the forestership in fee of Northamptonshire, and William and his successors holding Pightesly and Laxton by serjeanty of hunting wolves, foxes, and other vermin.

Another Richard Engaine occurs amongst the feudatory tenants of the abbey of Peterborough in 1146 (12 Steph.)[g]; and, conformably with chronological probability, assuming him to be grandson of the above Richard, every succeeding descent can be authenticated. Vitalis Engaine, in the register of the knights of the said abbey and their descendants, is expressly stated to be father of Fulk Lizures and Richard de Engaine[h]; and in the reign of Hen. 2 Humphrey Bassingburne, who married Alicia de Lizures[i], the widow of Vitalis, is found in possession of four hides in "Abendon[k]," probably for life, by the courtesy of England, in right of his wife, as Abington reverted to the line of Lizures. Fulk Lizures, or Lisoriis, already mentioned, rendered an account of £20. of the rent of Rockingham forest in the 5th of this reign[l]; and in the Liber Niger, or certificate of baronies, on levying the aid for the marriage of Maud, the king's daughter, with Henry duke of Saxony in 1167 (14 Hen. 2), where, by a clerical error he is called Richard in the text[m], but corrected to Fulk in the errata[n], he certifies that he had no fees of the old or new feoffment, except one which his grandfather Richard Engaine settled in dower on his last wife, the widow of Richard Fitz Urse, and which was then enjoyed and the services rendered by his two aunts; but that having the custody in fee of the king's forests (in Northamptonshire), he was bound by virtue of his office to attend the person of his sovereign in war, equipped with horse and arms, and his horn pendant from his neck[m].

William Lizures, son and heir of Fulk, gave 200 marks for his forestership of Northamptonshire, 3 Ric. 1, (1192)[o]; and granted half a mark yearly, issuing out of his manor of Abington to Delapre abbey, which was confirmed to them by Humphrey Bassingburn, and Humphry his son[p]. He was succeeded by his brother

Hugh Lizures, who rendered for one fee in Northamptonshire in the general scutage 6 Ric. 1[q], and in the scutage of Normandy 8 Ric. 1[r], and whose misfortunes or imprudence alienated his paternal inheritance. In 5 Joh. his office of chief forester was obtained by Hugh Nevill[s]; and in the 14th of the same reign his castle of Benefield, together with all his lands and cattle, were committed to the custody of John de Bassingburn on behalf of the crown, for debts due to the exchequer[t]. Abington not being specified, it is probable that it had been previously settled on the marriage of his brother William with the Isabella de Lizures, who, in 1224 (8 Hen. 3), presented to the rectory, and, in the 25th of this reign, under the name of Isabella de Berners, accounted for a quarter of a fee in Abington, in dower, of Nicholas de Bassingburn[u].

'[x]In the 18th year of king John, Benefield manor, which had been the estate of Colin Bassingburn and 'Alicia de Lizures his wife, was given to Baldwin de Gisnes and his heirs in fee, to be held by performing the 'service of one knight's fee towards the guard of Rockingham castle. The person here named Colin de Bas-'singburn, we apprehend was Nicholas de Bassingburn, who, having taken part with the barons in this reign, 'had his lands seized by the crown for his disloyalty; but returning to his duty had restitution of them in the 'first of Hen. III.' In the scutage of two marks for every knight's fee on the marriage of the king's sister to the emperor of the Romans in the 19th of this reign, he is placed amongst those who held immediately from the king, or in capite, and is returned as having paid 20s. and owing half a mark, for one knight's fee in Benefield[y]; which fee, in the certificate of fees in the following year, includes "Abinton," with the dependencies in other counties[z]. He died prior to the 37th of this reign[a], leaving Humphrey Bassingburn his son and heir, aged thirty years[b].

Contemporary families of the same name in different counties, are fruitful sources of genealogical perplexity and error. The Lizures of Northamptonshire; of Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire; and of Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, and Yorkshire, and the different branches of the Bassingburns, have been confusedly blended by Dugdale. John Bassingburn, to whom the lands of Hugh Lizures were committed, was of Hertfordshire and Essex; Nicholas, the subsequent grantee of them, was of this county; and Warine, who, according to Bridges, possessed Abington, was of Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire. This Warine had a grant of the forfeited estate of Thomas Astley in Creek, and was sheriff of this county 50 and 51 Hen. 3, but his connection with Abington seems unfounded, for the 'Lib. Feod.' or Testa de Nevill, quoted by Bridges, so far from styling 'Isabella de Berners his widow,' invalidates the supposition, by representing her as holding of Nicholas Bassingburn[u], who was dead the 37th[a], whereas Warine survived till 53 Hen. 3[c]; and no reference is given to support his having succeeded Nicholas, or being succeeded by Humphrey, who, as appears above, was the son and heir of Humphrey, and is so stated by Bridges under Glapthorn. (vol. II. p. 460.)

In 50 Hen. 3, Robert de Turbervill procured a grant to him and his heirs (int. al.) of the lands in Northamptonshire which belonged to Humphrey de Bassingburn, of "Abendon," a rebel[d]; and '[e]in the 2d of Edw. I. 'this Humphrey, to obtain the acquittance of 2050 marks and £10. in which he stood indebted to Elias, son 'of Moses, a jew of London, gave up to Eleanor, queen dowager, the king's mother, for the term of twenty-'five years, the castle, manor, and advowson of Beningfield, with their appurtenances, excepting the hamlets 'of Glapthorn, Suthewick, and Cotherstock mills; the queen engaging to procure him the recovery of Abendon 'manor, which was then let to farm to Philip de Horton, a burgess of Northampton, and giving him over and 'above £20. sterling.' This powerful mediation proved effectual; for six years after, he died seized (int. al.) of "Abendon" manor, and three virgates of land in Hackleton, of the annual value of £44. 9s. 9d.[f]

On the decease of Humphrey de Bassingburne his son, it was found that "Abyndon" manor, held of the king in capite by half a fee, was of the clear annual value of £27. 10s. 2d. deducting 6s. 8d. (the half mark) to Delapré abbey; and that he had given his father 60 marks, more than 20 years since, to enfeoff him and Mary his wife in the said manor, by virtue of which feoffment she now held it for life[g]; and John de Lisle, her second husband, was in her right, lord of "Abington" in 9 Edw. 2[h].

'[i]In the 19th year of Edw. 2, Humphrey de Bassingburne, his successor and heir, became seized of it on the 'death of Mary his mother, who held it for the term of her life.' In 3 Edw. 3 an action was brought against him by Warine de Bassingburne to recover 13 messuages, 168 acres of arable land, and 13 acres of meadow in Abington, by inheritance from Baldwin his grandfather; but the defendant producing in court a deed executed by Warine, son of Baldwin, and father of the plaintiff, releasing all right and title in the said premises to him and his heirs, the cause was decided in his favor[k]. The following year he paid a fine of ten marks for licence to enfeoff the manor of "Abyngdon" in trust, to the uses of himself and Alice his wife for life, remainder to his sons Giles, Hugh, and Humphrey, and the heirs of their bodies, with ultimate remainder to the right

By an Inquisition post mortem in the 22d of this reign, his heir in blood was found to be Margaret, daughter of his son Giles, and wife of Walter de Colville, aged 14 years, and Walter her husband aged only eight years![n] But the manors of Benefield and Abington past agreeably to the last intail till they finally vested in

Sir Ralph Basset of Sapcote in Leicestershire, and sir John Gernon, as right heirs of Robert de Colville[o]; and a precept was issued to the escheators of Northamptonshire, Cambridgeshire, and Yorkshire, to deliver seisin, and make legal partition between them[p].

William Thursby, esq. the purchaser of this manor, was born at Holt in Leicestershire, and educated at Uppingham grammar-school[x]; and adopting the legal profession, obtained the appointments recorded on his monument. By his will, dated 30 July, 1700, which is extremely long and special, after bequeathing numerous annuities and legacies to his relations and dependents, he devised his manors and premises in Abington, Little Billing, and Weston Favell, and estates in Pightesley and other places, to his nephews William Thursby and Richard Thursby successively in tail male, with remainder to his niece Mary Harvey, wife of Robert Harvey, of Stockton in Warwickshire, esq. with divers remainders over. The nephews both dying s. p. the settled estates devolved to

* Abington register.

The Manor House, or Mansion, is situated in a walled park of about 80 acres. The south and east fronts, long, low, and of corresponding design, were probably built by the first Mr. Thursby, but the interior of the building retains traces of its earlier possessors. The hall is a lofty gothic room, with open timber roof, a recess at one end, and mullioned windows, adorned with the atchievement of O'Brien, earl of Thomond, and other arms from the old manor house at Great Billing. It is also ornamented with a bust of Garrick, and several family and other portraits. Amongst others, the first J. H. Thursby, Esq. with his dogs and gun, and another of his lady. Two three-quarter lengths of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thursby, by Sir Joshua Reynolds: the former in a chair, supporting his gun between his knees; and the latter in a riding dress, with a favourite horse feeding out of her hand. The dining-room is wainscotted, and the arms and quarterings of Bernard intermixed with a variety of grotesque devices introduced into the pannels. The grounds present some agreeable home scenery, and a tower overhung with ivy, constructed to supply the house with water from Broadley-head spring, serves the double purposes of utility and ornament.

The enthusiastic admirers of "the bard of nature," and the actor who "embodied what the poet drew," will here feel their sympathetic affections awakened by viewing the residence and last long home of Shakspeare's favorite granddaughter; and, in an adjacent lawn, the mulberry tree, inscribed "THIS TREE WAS PLANTED BY DAVID GARRICK, ESQRE. AT THE REQUEST OF ANN THURSBY, AS A GROWING TESTIMONY OF THEIR FRIENDSHIP. 1778."

The Village, a mile east of Northampton, is now reduced to a few cottages skirting the turnpike road to Wellingborough. In the time of Bridges, about 1720, it consisted of 33 houses[y]. By the population return to parliament in 1801, it contained 35 houses, and 170 inhabitants; by the return in 1811, 20 houses, and 153 inhabitants; and there are now (1820) only 18 houses, including the farm houses in the fields.

The annual quota of land-tax paid by this parish, at 4s. in the £. is £105.

The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2401. A comparative view of the poor rates and parochial expences, &c. at different periods, will be found in the parliamentary returns subjoined to the general introduction to the county. The last year, to Easter 1820, £178. was raised by a rate of 1s. 10d. in the £.

The wake or feast follows the dedication of the church to St. Peter.

Advowson. Much conjectural ingenuity has been exercised on the origin and primary constitution of parishes; and it is now generally contended by the most intelligent ecclesiastical antiquaries, that the "parochia of the seventh century, so often confounded with the modern parish, was synonymous with the diocese; and that the distribution of the kingdom into parishes, in the present acceptation of the term, did not originate in any specific decree, but was the progressive work of ages. The episcopal registers of Lincoln commence in the reign of king John, and presentations to most of the benefices in this county occurring in them, within a few years of their first establishment, it may safely be inferred, that the parochial division of this county as it now stands was nearly completed by the end of the 12th century. A comparatively few parishes were formed in the Saxon era; but being too extended in their boundaries for the accommodation of a thinly scattered and dispersed population, or for the spiritual superintendence of a single priest, the Norman lords were encouraged to erect churches within their manors, and endow them with the whole or a portion of the tithes of a certain circuit of ground, which thus became a parish; with the patronage of the living vested in the founder and his heirs, as the reward of his piety. The advowson of Abington has been invariably appendant to the manor down to the present time, with the single exception—if it may be called one—of a grant to the priory of Bromhale in Berkshire, made by the crown under a temporary escheat, and never acted upon[z].

Rectory. This benefice is a rectory in the deanry of West Haddon.

The first-fruits and tenths of all the spiritualities in the kingdom were at an early and undefined period obtained by the see of Rome; and pope Innocent the 4th having assigned them for three years to king Henry the 3d, to incite his co-operation in the crusades, Walter, bishop of Norwich, was delegated to take a survey 1254, 38 Hen. 3, which has hence been usually termed the Norwich taxation.

The rectory of "Abydon" is rated therein at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.[a]); as also in the valor of pope Nicholas the 4th in 1291 (20 Edw. 1.)[b] taken on a similar occasion and for a similar purpose, and which remained the standard criterion of the value of all ecclesiastical preferments, regulating both the regal and papal taxes, till the third great ecclesiastical survey, instituted in 1535 (26 Hen. 8.) on the first-fruits and tenths being transferred from the pope to the king by act of parliament; when this rectory was valued in the king's books at £20. 10s. 8d. subject to 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations[c].

The commissioners appointed by parliament, during the commonwealth, to enquire into the state of all church-livings, certified, in 1655, that Abington was a parsonage presentative worth £60. yearly, and that John Howes was the resident incumbent, who received the profits and discharged the cure[d].

The endowment consists of about 50 acres of glebe, and a pecuniary composition in lieu of tithes, settled at the time of inclosure.

The parsonage-house, or rather cottage, is a short distance eastward of the church, bordering on the park; but there has been no resident clergyman since the death of Mr. Thayer in 1768.

Rectors. The first recorded institution to this rectory was by Isabel de Lizures, who in 1224 presented a subdeacon of the name of Peter de Yrencestria. Yrencestria may be referred without hesitation to Irchester, the place of his nativity; a mode of nomenclature which the clergy who were not related to distinguished noble families continued to adopt, to the exclusion of their own proper surnames, as late as the close of the 14th century.

The next who occurs, but without date, is

Sir John de Kirkeby, on the presentation of Sir Humphry de Bassingburn. The term sir is used in these cases in widely opposite significations: in the former it is expressive of an ungraduated ecclesiastic, and in the latter of a knight by military tenure. Either he, or a contemporary of both names, was rector of Marston Trussel, Cosgrave, Woodford (Huxlow Hundred), and Chipping Wardon; and it may be presumed that he died about 1285, for in that year successors were appointed to him in the two last incumbencies, and Henry de Bassingburn, chaplain, a cadet of the patron's family, was presented to this rectory 27 Jan. 1285-6. In 1291 he obtained Benefield rectory, the other family benefice in this county.

Robert de Brockton, clerk, by Mary, widow of Sir Humphry de Bassingburn, 4th April 1299.

Clement de Wykes.

John, son of Warine de Bassingburn, clerk, 25th Oct. 1322, and rector of Benefield 1334.

Master William de Bray, acolyte, by sir Humphry de Bassingburn, 3d Oct. 1334. An acolyte was an inferior officer in the church, who handed the water vessels and candlesticks to the officiating priest; but though acolytes and subdeacons were only probationers, and not permitted to "minister in holy things," yet they, as well as minors, were frequently instituted to parochial benefices, their diocesan enjoining them to pursue their studies to qualify them for entering into priest's orders, and in the meantime their cures were consigned to the charge of chaplains or curates.

John Pycard de Carleton, priest, by John de Fauconberg, in right of his wife, 5 Sept. 1361. He was instituted rector of Harleston in 1350.

John de Carleton, LL. D. by Alice, widow of John de Fauconberg, 4 June 1366. He was also vicar of Rothersthorpe, and rector of Thrapston.

Robert de Brunne, by Sir Ralph Basset of Sapcote.

Robert de Wytechirche, priest, 5 Jan. 1374.

Peter de Barton, by Sir John Gernon 21 Ap. 1379. He exchanged for Beckington in Somersetshire, with Robert Wattes, who was presented by the king, as custos of the heir of Ralph Basset of Sapcote, 18 Feb. 1379-80. He was vicar of St. Giles in Northampton 1382.

Richard Cornewayle, priest, by Nicholas Lillying 20 Sept. 1386.

John Mayne, by Mary, widow of Sir Nicholas Lillyng. He was rector of Hargrave from 1390 to 1404.

William Clerk, priest, 23 Oct. 1432. He was rector of Hannington from 1429 to 1438.

William Lenne, occurs as a feoffee in trust, of the manor of Little Brington 19 Hen. 6 (1440-1)[e].

John Derby, LL. D. by Mary Lillyng, lady of "Abendon," 18 Feb. 1445-6.

John Parmenter, 15 May, 1450. He was rector of Collingtree 1421, of Blisworth from 1432 to 1439, and of Stowe from 1439 to 1444.

Sir Ralph Hamsterley, by Margaret Bernard, 20 Nov. 1485.

Sir Robert Marcer, priest, by John Barnard, esq. 6 Sept. 1497.

William Muscott, by Richard Muscott by grant from John Barnard, esq. 29 Nov. 1533. On his deprivation

Thomas Neel was presented by Francis Barnard, esq. and inst. 21 July, 1554. He died, and was succeeded by Edward Westbee, who was presented by Francis Barnard, gent. and instituted 10 April, 1559.

Thomas Muscott occurs 1561.

William Fleshware, or Fletcher, B. D. occurs 1588. In 1590 Mr. Fletcher of Abington was one of the puritan ministers who associated in general synods and particular classes at Northampton, Fawsley, and other places, to promote the new discipline in opposition to the established church. He obtained the vicarage of Moulton in 1607, and held it till his death, but appears to have resided here, where he was buried the 3d of May 1627; and on the 29th of the same month

Charles Trewe, A. M. was instituted on the presentation of the king, for defect of John Barnard, esq. his late ward[f]. He survived but a year, and was succeeded by John Bullyvant, A. M. who was presented by lady Eleanor Hampden, widow, and instituted 26 May 1628. He was living in 1647, as appears by the entry of his eldest son's burial[g], but when he died I know not.

John Howes, A. M. fellow of Gonville Caius Coll. Camb. a moderate presbyterian, was inducted 3 Nov. 1652[g], and buried here 6 June, 1685, with the character of "a learned able divine[g]." He published two sermons; 1. "Christ God-Man, set out in a sermon preached at Northampton on the Lecture being Christmas-day, 1656," with a latin dedication to John Barnard, esq. Lond. 1657. 2. "Real comforts extracted from moral and spiritual principles;" on 1 Thess. iv. 18; being a funeral sermon for Mr. Thomas Ball, "late minister of God's word at Northampton, with a narrative of his life and death, 21 June, 1659, 4to. Lond. 1660.

Leonard Welsted, of Trinity Coll. Camb. A. M. was presented by William Thursby, esq. and instituted 15 June, 1685, within a fortnight of his predecessor's decease. On obtaining the vicarage of St. Nicholas at Newcastle on Tyne, where he resided, and was buried 15 Nov. 1694, he resigned Abington, when William Davies, A. M. was presented by W. Thursby, esq. and instituted 23 Jan. 1692-3.

Charles Thayer, A. M. was presented by sir William Meredith, bart. and the other executors of the late W. Thursby, esq. on the death of the last incumbent, and instituted 3 Mar. 1709-10. He enjoyed this benefice nearly sixty years, and was buried here 16 July, 1768. His successor,

Charles Thursby, LL. B. instituted 5 Dec. 1768, on the presentation of his brother, was rector also of Grandborough in Warwickshire. He was interred in the family vault 20 May 1783; and on 10 Nov. following

Richard Nicoll, D. D. chancellor of Wells, and rector of Drayton in Oxfordshire, was instituted on the presentation of J. H. Thursby, esq. As he resigned Abington above 20 years before his death, any further notice of him might be deemed misplaced; but I cannot dismiss him without referring to an elegant and spirited sketch of his character in that interesting depository of modern literary memoirs, "Nichols's Anecdotes[h]." On his resignation

Richard Ness, A. B. was instituted 17 Oct. 1792, on the presentation of J. H. Thursby, esq. He retained it but three years, when he vacated in favor of George Augustus Thursby, of Oriel Coll. Ox. A. M. nephew of the then patron, who is the present rector (1820). He is also vicar of Penn in Staffordshire.

PAROCHIAL REGISTERS were first introduced by lord Cromwell when vicar general in 1538 (13 Hen. 8.); but many of the clergy, either through ignorance or prejudice, evading compliance, the injunction was enforced in 1547 (Edw. 6.); every incumbent was enjoined to complete his register from 'the law's first taking place,' or at least from 1558 (1 Eliz.), in which year that of Abington commenced in the time of Bridges, but now not till 1637; and I have experienced the mortification of meeting with many other instances of these valuable family records being irretrievably lost by modern apathy and neglect, after safely weathering the political and religious storms of the seventeenth century.

The Church was broken open about ten years since, and robbed of the Communion Plate, which was given by Mr. Thursby, and consisted of 'two large silver flagons double gilt, a chalice and cover with a cross, and a plate of the same, inscribed Oblatio Gul. Thursby[b].'

CHURCH. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is situated in a small church-yard, planted on the north and west to screen it from the mansion. It consists of a tower, nave, side aisles, and chancel leaded, and a plain south porch tiled. The south front is mantled with ivy; the tower and east ends of the nave, chancel, and north aisle are embattled. Most of the windows are long and square-headed, divided by a single mullion; the eastern chancel window is of three lights, with plain arched heads; one of the windows in the north aisle is of a much earlier date than any other part of the building, being a double lancet with a dripstone following the course of both arches. In the tower, which is 14 feet long by 7 feet 10 inches wide, three modern bells have been substituted for those described by Bridges. The whole length of the church and chancel is 70 feet 2 inches. The nave is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches with deep plain mouldings, supported by three cylindrical pillars with octangular capitals; and lighted by three square-headed clerestory windows on each side. The arch, now closed, which opened into the tower, is nearly circular, and springs from imposts in the wall.

The font, which stands under the western arch, on the north side of the nave, is octagonal, having arches in the lower, and a rose, quatrefoil, or other ornament, in the upper compartments. The pulpit was presented by Mr. Rocke, about 1700, and is of oak, handsomely carved. Bridges says, 'In the east window of the chapel in the 'north ile are these arms, Gules, a fess [dancette] between six cross crosslets Or [Engaine], with these remains of an 'inscription, ...Pilitis et.... In the north windows of the same ile are certain broken figures, and in the left 'hand of one of them a label with this inscription: Ave Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum. In the east window of the 'chapel in the south ile is the figure of a person praying at a table, with a book before him, and under him the 'following inscription: Orate pro animabus....Rob....Bullok.... In another pannel are the figures of three women 'praying, and in several scattered panes these words ..chapell..aticie m..marg. uxor.. And in the south window of 'the said chapel are these arms, Gules, within a border engrailed three pikes hauriant (naiant) in pale Argent '(Lillyng). In the west window of the tower are these arms, Gules, a fess indented between six cross crosslets 'Argent[k],' (Longueville.) In the north-eastern widow of the north chapel is the mutilated bust of a figure holding a scroll, the only relic of the above painted glass now remaining. There is little doubt but the altar of "St. Marie," to which Margaret Bernard, in 1496, left by will an "opertorium[l]," was placed in this chapel. The east end is still approached by two steps; at the north-eastern angle is a corbel for the statue of the patron saint, and in the south wall is a long narrow arch, which formerly communicated with the chancel, for the purpose of the chauntry priest witnessing the elevation of the host at the high altar, but is now built up.

Under the middle window in the south aisle is a low arch, and near it a high niche. A gothic wooden screen, originally painted, extending 36 feet 2 inches, the whole width of the building forms the entrance to the chancel, and also to the two chapels, which run nearly parallel with the altar-rails of the chancel, from which the north chapel is separated by two arches resting on a pillar, similar to those in the nave but lower; and the south chapel by a single surbast arch. The arch leading to the chancel is occupied with the royal arms, decalogue, &c. On several square tiles in the chancel are these arms: three cross crosslets fitchy, on a chief a rose and a mullet; and on others, a cross —— between four martlets. The space within the altar-rails is wainscotted, and unusually large. In the north wall is a square locker or recess for the holy utensils.

BENEFACTIONS. The following is not included in the abstract of charitable donations prefixed to the general account of the hundred. It is stated by Bridges, that 'a quantity of meadow ground in Abingdon, called church-grass, let in 1666 at £3. per annum, with twelve acres of land and eighteen sheep-commons in Kingsthorp field hath immemorially belonged to the repairs of the church of Abingdon[e].' The allotment awarded in trust for the churchwardens of this parish under the act for inclosing Kingsthorp in 1766, now lets for £24. per annum.

LEONARD WELSTED, a poet and dramatist, son of the rev. Leonard Welsted, rector of this parish, was born here and baptised June 3, 1688. He entered as a king's scholar at Westminster, from whence he was elected to Trinity college, Cambridge. When very young he married the daughter of Henry Purcell, the celebrated musician, and obtained an appointment in the secretary of state's office, which he relinquished for a situation in the ordnance department, where he became clerk in ordinary; which office, with a commissionership for managing the state lottery, he held till his death at his apartments in the tower in 1746-7.—His second wife, who survived him, was the sister of Sir Hoveden Walker and bishop Walker the defender of Londonderry.

His early indications of poetic talent were blighted by the injudicious applause of his friends, which unfortunately induced self satisfaction with present attainments instead of stimulating to superior and progressive excellence; whilst the flattering attentions of the great diverted his muse from more interesting subjects to gratulatory odes and epistles to noble patrons, and eventually seduced him from study into habits of convivial dissipation. His attack on Pope in the "Triumvirate," was severely retaliated by the satirist in his "Dunciad," where he thus characterises him in a parody on a well-known passage in Cooper's "Denham Hill."

"Flow, Welsted, flow! like thine inspirer, beer;
Though stale, not ripe; though thin, yet never clear;
So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;
Heady not strong; o'erflowing though not full."

GREAT BILLING,

Being called in domesday "Bellinge," and the saxon Bela, denoting paleness or blueness, and Linan, a kind of shrub, its etymology may possibly be allusive to the ling, with which the parish abounded, and which still gives name to Billing Lings, where a private race-course, about three quarters of a mile in circuit, was made by lord John Cavendish for exercising his stud.

The lordship contains about 1660 acres, and was inclosed by act of parliament, 8 Geo. 3. (1768.) Its boundaries are formed by Overston on the north; a brook rising in Overston park, which separates it from Ecton in Hamfordsho hundred on the east; the river Nen from Cogenho, Little Houghton, and part of Brayfield in Wymersley hundred on the south; and Little Billing on the west; from which it is divided by a brook that leaves the outline as it approaches the south, and returns to it again at the extremity.

The soil is various; near the river gravelly; in the upper lands a light red loam; and on the side of the hills clay. It is mostly arable, but there are excellent meadows and pastures in the lower part of the field.

'Mr. Blith in his English Improver, ch. 22, says, that at Billing in Northamptonshire, some wood cut down 'eleven years after the first planting was worth £60. an acre. He tells us the land was worth about 10s. an acre 'per ann. and every acre cost under £7. for digging, sets, and all charges in the planting of it,' under the management of Mr. Cartwright, steward to Barnaby earl of Thomond[a]. In the paddock of Mr. Elwes is a remarkably handsome holly tree, supposed to be one of the largest in the kingdom, measuring 57 ft. 10 in. in height, and 6 ft. 4 in. in girth, at a foot above the ground.

The following rare plants are found in this parish, Butomus umbellatus, or flowering rush. Plantago Coronopus, or star of the earth, hartshorn, or buckshorn plantain. Lysimachia nummularia, or money wort, in the meadows. Orchis morio, or meadow orchis. Primula elatior, or oxlip. Phallus esculentus, or morel. Cochlearia Coronopus, or swines cress, in the street. Cichorium Intybus, wild endive. Apium graveolens, wild celery. Saxifraga granulata, white saxifrage. Menyanthes trifoliata, buckbean, or water trefoil. Chironia Centaurium, centaury. Lythrum Salicaria, purple loosestrife. Anemone nemorosa, wood anemone. Tormentilla officinalis, tormentil. Cardamine amara, bitter ladies' smock. Lactuca virosa, wild lettuce. Spiræa Filipendula, the dropwrot. Carduus eriophorus, woolly-headed thistle, or friar's crown. Tussilago Petasites, the butter-bur.

About a mile south of the village is a stone bridge over the Nen, formerly a great thoroughfare from Northampton to Horton in the road to London. The jurors of Northampton, 4 Edw. 1, presented, that sir Roger de Wauton had withheld from the king and bailiff of Northampton for four years past, the customs and tolls due at Billing-bridge, and had appropriated them to himself without authority, to the damage of one-half mark and more yearly[b]; and the same year the jurors of Spelho hundred presented, that the bailiff of sir Robert (Roger) de Wauton took a toll in Billing on the king's highway of 2s. for every pair of millstones going to Northampton, but they knew not by what warrant[b]. These tolls, now called the duchy tolls, are paid to the earl of Pomfret. The bridge is repaired by this parish to the centre arch, and beyond, by the parishes of Little Houghton and Brayfield.

The adjoining mill is noticed in domesday, and was given by the family of Barre to the abbey of St. James near Northampton. In 4 Edw. 1. the jurors presented that the abbot of St. James had erected a fulling mill at "Magnam Bylling" to the damage of the king and of the town of Northampton[b]. It is now a corn mill and belongs to the lord of the manor.

Manorial History. In the time of Edward the confessor Thor held "Bellinge" and Watford freely[c], by which it appears that they were allodial, or folkland, subject to no superior in a feudal, and to the king only in a political capacity. His estate was confiscated by William the conqueror, and bestowed on Gilbert the Cook, with the addition of small portions of land in Hollowell and Ravensthorp; and it is perhaps deserving of remark, that the exercise of his royal master's bounty towards him was confined to this county. 'Bellinge," in the domesday survey is rated at four hides. The arable land consisted of eight carucates; the demesne or site of the manor contained two carucates, cultivated by five menial servants, and an "ancilla" (or maid servant); and the remaining six carucates were occupied by 10 villeins and seven bordars. There was a mill of 20s. yearly value, and twenty eight acres, a very unusual proportion, of meadow. The whole had been valued at 40s. but was then encreased to 100s[c].

Whether Gilbert died s. p. or his interest in his possessions was merely commensurate with his culinary services, certain it is that within a few years his lands reverted to the crown.

Meschines or Courcy Fee. One moiety of Billing was obtained by William Meschines, baron of Coupland and Egremont in Cumberland, the second brother of Randle Meschines, earl of Chester; who had also half a knight's fee in Boddington, and a fourth part in Middleton Cheney.

In the return of knights fees, 14 Hen. 2. amongst the feudatories of William Courcy, dapifer, of the barony of Meschines, of his mother's part, William "Barre," is certified to hold one fee[d]. It may be objected, that the barony of Courcy is placed in Somersetshire, and therefore the fee in question cannot be appropriated to Billing in Northamptonshire, but numerous instances will occur in the progress of this work—as in Overston, Preston Capes, &c. where lands were parcel of a barony in a distant county, and, for the mutual convenience of the crown and the subject, as well as to prevent confusion or evasion, the scutage was generally assessed and paid at the caput honoris, rather than at each individual place where it accrued. From this period the Meschines became blended with the paternal Courcy barony, and descended through Fitz Gerald, and De Ripariis, or Rivers earl of Devon, to De Fortibus earl of Albemarle, when on failure of that line, in 1293, it resorted to Robert Lisle, baron of Rougemont, or Ridgmont, in Bedfordshire, as heir general of Fitzgerald; whose grandson, Robert Lisle, in 42 Edw. 3. granted the whole honour, amounting to no less than 86 fees, to the King, in fee simple[e], who, four years after, gave all the fees which he had of the grant of Robert Lisle, to his son John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster[f]; and Billing is still included within the liberties of that duchy.

Ferrers and Mortimer Fee. The other moiety of Billing was given to the family of Ferrers, who enfeoffed the Mortimers, but, as the latter do not appear to hold under the former in the document already quoted in 14 Hen. 2. this fee probably formed part of the marriage portion of Milicent, daughter of Robert earl Ferrers, junior, the first wife of Roger Mortimer, who died 17 Joh.[g]

In the following reign, Ralph Mortimer, their son and heir, was found to hold of William earl Ferrers, of the honor of Tutbury, one fee in "Magna Billing," in the tenure of Peter Barre[h]. The Mortimers, though intermittent proprietors for a few generations in different places, were never resident in this county, and may therefore be briefly dismisssed, with observing, that after being ennobled with the earldom of March, their titles and inheritance finally merged in the crown, on the triumph of the Yorkists over the Lancastrians, in the person of their lineal representative king Edward the 4th.

Manor. Having treated of the paramount manors, it remains to trace the lords who held the usufructuary possession, or mesne manors under the paramount lords, in whom the ultimate property and reserved services of the feudatory were vested. I say manors, for each fee in this vill held by Peter Barre of Ralph Mortimer[i], and of Margaret de Ripariis[k], constituted a distinct manor, and the tenure was separately noted in the Inquisitions, though from unity of ownership in the family of Barry, who possessed both, no motive remained for keeping them apart, and they ceased to be distinguished. The principal seat of this family was at Stanton Barry, in Buckinghamshire, but that they occasionally resided here is evident from their frequently attesting deeds in the neighbourhood. The scattered notices of them are embodied in the annexed pedigree, but the accuracy of the connections may be doubted down to Sir Robert Barry, who first occurs 4 Edw. I. when he was presented by the jurors, for having withheld for three years past the suit due at the hundred court for his tenement in "Magna Billinge[l]." In the 25th of this reign, he is in the list of knights possessed of £20. per ann. in lands and tenements in this county, or elsewhere, who were summoned to meet the king with horse and arms, by writ from Portsmouth[m]; and in 9 Edw. 2, he was lord of Billing[n]. Not a single marriage of this family can be retrieved, and it is entirely lost sight of after the reign of Edward 3d.

A precept was issued to the escheator of the county, 38 Edw. 3, to enquire concerning a pot of sterling money found by one John Nore within this parish, with orders to seize it in the name and for the use of the king[o].

'In the twelfth year of Henry IV. a fine was levied of the manor by John Love, clerk, in fee, to himself, and a 'second fine the same year by William Overston[p];' but these parties appear to have been merely trustees, for Sir Nicholas Lillyng, of Abington, knight, who died seized of it in 5 Hen. 5; held of the king by unknown service[q].

His representatives, it is presumed, conveyed the manor to the celebrated *Margaret, countess of Richmond, who settled it on Thomas lord Stanley, her third husband; for on her attainder in 1 of Ric. 3[s], a reversionary grant, subject to his life interest, was made of her manors of Eydon, Torpel, and Great Billing, with others in different counties, by the king to his favourite nephew, John de la Pole, earl of Lincoln, son of his sister Elizabeth, duchess of Suffolk, in tail male[t], whom, after the loss of his own son, he declared heir apparent to the throne, to the exclusion of the daughters of his elder brother, the late king Edward 4th. His flattering prospects ultimately proved his ruin; for, roused by the tragical but merited fate of his uncle Richard, he hastened into Flanders, to his maternal aunt, Margaret duchess of Burgundy; and, returning at the head of a powerful army, made an ineffectual attempt to dethrone Henry 7th, and was at length defeated and slain at Stoke, near Newark, on the 16th of June 1487 (2 Hen. 7.) Bridges states, '"that his lands being forfeited on this occasion[x], the manor of Great Billing in the fourth year of Henry VII. was granted to sir John Fyneox.' It is true, that the earl of Lincoln was attainted; but the tenant for life surviving many years, the reversion was never realised; and with respect to sir John Fineox, both the time, and the nature, of his connection with this manor are erroneous.

It was no uncommon practice for our king's to make feoffments of lands to the uses of their wills; and in the 5th of this reign a very extensive grant of this kind, including the manors of Great Billing, Chapel Brampton, and Eydon, was made to sir John Fineox, lord chief justice of the king's bench, and co-feoffees in trust, to settle on the dean and canons of Windsor, in recompence of their prayers for the souls of the king, the late countess of Richmond his grandmother, and Catherine (of Arragon) his wife[y]. This grant, if not subsequently revoked by the king, was avoided by his executors, who, in 1 Edw. 6, substituted certain rectories, advowsons, and tithes to the same uses.

Bridges says, 'in the 33d of Henry VIII.[z] Thomas Lovett, esq. of Astwell, died seized of it;' but the authority cited proves this to be a misappropriation 'of Billing's manor in Astwell;' and the manor of Great Billing remained vested in the crown till 32 Eliz. when it was granted to Alexander King and Thomas Crompton in fee[a], who the same day had licence to alienate it to

John Freeman, esq. then of Ecton[b]. He was a native of Northampton, and acquired the impropriation of Moulton, and a manor in Ecton, at which places he successively resided prior to his purchase of this manor. By his will, dated 25 Feb. 1614, besides benefactions to Northampton and Billing, he devised £2000. to be invested in land for the indowment of two fellowships of £26. per ann. and eight scholarships of £6. per ann. each, in Clare-hall, Cambridge; his kindred to be first preferred, and, in default, scholars born in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln; the alleged violation of which provisions led to several controversial pamphlets in the middle of the last century.

His granddaughter and heir, Catherine, wife of Edward Gorges, baron Dundalk in Ireland, sold this manor to sir Barnaby O'Brien, who occurs here in 1628 as party to an agreement with the rector respecting tithes[c].

Some of the irish genealogists have ventured to derive the family of O'Brien from "Hiberius, eldest son of "Milesius king of Spain, who was born in Egypt, and, with his brother Heremon, began their reign jointly over "Ireland in the year of the world 2704[d];" but to quit wild romance for comparative probability, their descent from Brien Boirohm, king of Ireland A. D. 1002, though incapable of proof, is generally admitted; and the O'Briens are uniformly denominated kings of Thomond, till Murrough O'Brien surrendered the sovereignty to Hen. 8.

Sir Barnaby O'Brien, on the death of his brother Henry without male issue in 1639, became 6th earl of Thomond. On the breaking out of the civil wars he hastened into England, and joined the king at Oxford, who, in return for his zealous attachment, created him marquis of Billing in the county of Northampton to him and his issue male, by patent bearing date 3d May, 1645, but in the feverish agitation of that eventful period, the enrolment of the patent was neglected, and neither he nor his descendants ever enjoyed the dignity.

Henry, 8th earl of Thomond, an active politician, was elevated to the british peerage in 1714, by the title of viscount Tadcaster in Yorkshire; but dying in Ireland 20 Apr. 1741, of a fractured skull occasioned by a fall, and leaving no issue, both his irish and english honors became extinct. By his will dated 14 Oct. 1738, he devised all his estates to Murrough Lord O'Brien, son and heir of William 4th earl of Inchiquin, in tail male; remainder to his wife's nephew, Percy Windham, youngest son of sir William Windham, of Orchard Windham in Somersetshire, bart. and his heirs.

Morrough lord O'Brien, after enjoying the Thomond property only five months, fell a victim to the small-pox, 20 Sept. 1741, in his father's life-time and unmarried, when it devolved on Percy Windham, who thereupon, in pursuance of the aforesaid will, assumed the name of O'Brien. He obtained a revival of the earldom of Thomond 11 Dec. 1756, but dying s. p. 21 Aug. 1774, it became a second time extinct. His estates descended to his nephew George, the present earl of Egremont, who sold Billing in 1776 to

Lord John Cavendish, 4th son of William 3d duke of Devonshire. Mason, the poet, was his lordship's tutor, and addressed to him the elegy "to a young nobleman leaving the university." He represented Knaresborough, York, and the county of Derby in parliament upwards of forty years, and during the short-lived Rockingham and Coalition administrations was chancellor of the exchequer. On quitting office he withdrew in a great measure from party politics, and lived here in unostentatious but dignified retirement. He died at Twickenham 18 Dec. 1796, and was succeeded by his brother,

Lord Frederick Cavendish, of whom this estate, comprising the manor, mansion, mill, and between 6 and 700 acres of land, was purchased about twenty years since, by Robert Carey Elwes, of Roxby in Lincolnshire, esq. who now resides here, and was sheriff of this county in 1802. He married, first, 12 Oct. 1797, Caroline, second daughter of Charles Anderson Pelham, lord Yarborough, who died at Billing 13 July, 1812, leaving four sons and two daughters; and secondly, 24 Dec. 1814, Jane-Marianne, only daughter of the rev. Richard Sykes, of Foxholes and West Ella, Yorkshire, by whom he has two sons and one daughter.

No manorial courts have been held for many years past.

BRADWELL ABBEY lands. In 23 Hen. 8, the dissolved abbey of Bradwell in Buckinghamshire, with pertinencies, including certain messuages, lands, and tenements in Great Billing, Northampton, and Wicken, were given by the king to the priory of Shene or Richmond in Surrey[e], and after the dissolution of that monastery were granted, 34 Hen. 8, in exchange for other lands, to Arthur Longueville, esq.[f]

SEWARDSLEY PRIORY had a cottage and lands here, which were granted, 14 Eliz. to John Marshe and Francis Grenham[g].

ST. ANDREW'S PRIORY had a virgate of land in "Byllynges Major," of the gift of Simon the chaplain of St. Sepulchres in Northampton, in the reign of Hen. 3, and confirmed by the Barres, lords of the fee[h]. In 1291 it was rated at £1. yearly rent[i], and at 16s. in the survey 1535 (26 Hen. 8)[j].

ST. JAMES'S ABBEY. Simon, son of Ralph Barre, by deed s. d. gave his mill of "Major Billing" to the abbey of St. James, near Northampton, in consideration of the yearly rent of three marks (£2.) and of 70 marks (£46. 13s. 4d.) towards defraying the expences of his pilgrimage to Jerusalem[k]. Robert Barre, rector of Billing, afterwards added a virgate of land[l]. In 1291 the abbey estate here was rated in rents and mill at £2. 16s. per ann[i]. In the survey at the dissolution it was valued jointly with lands in Holcot and West Haddon.

MANOR HOUSE. Bridges says, 'the earl of Thomond hath here an handsome old house, with pleasant 'gardens adjoining.' The present mansion was erected nearly on the site of the old one by lord John Cavendish, from a design by Carr of York, a celebrated architect, originally bred a common mason at Horbury in that county. It is a plain commodious edifice of Kingsthorp stone, with east and west fronts, and from its elevated situation is one of the most conspicuous objects in the neighbourhood.

THE VILLAGE is four miles from Northampton, at a short distance to the right of the Wellingborough road. In the time of Bridges it consisted 'of about 60 families:' by the census of 1801 it contained 50 houses and 267 inhabitants, and by that of 1811, 55 houses and 299 inhabitants. The amount raised by the poor rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £322. 6s. 9d. at 5s. 2d. in the £. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish, is £113. 6s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2,319. The wake follows St. Andrew.

ADVOWSON. The church of "Billinges" was given by William Barre to Leicester abbey soon after its foundation, and is included in the confirmation charter of Hen. 2, between the years 1154 and 1167[i]. It was however legally recovered from the abbey by Robert de Wauton[m], steward of the household to Edw. 1, acting as the king's agent; but their grantee being dispossessed, the family of Barre renewed their original claim, and 'in the ninth 'year of Edw. 1, the right of presentation was disputed by Robert Barre, and decided in favour of the crown.' In 19 Hen. 6, the king granted the advowson to William Whaplode and others, in exchange for the advowson of Eton in Buckinghamshire[o], and the grant was specially exempted in the subsequent act of resumption[p]; but his successor, Edw. 4, re-exchanged it for Eton advowson with Richard Lovel[q]. In 24 Eliz. the advowsons of Stoke Bruerne, Blisworth, Cottingham, and Great Billing were granted in fee to sir Christopher Hatton[r] of Holdenby, afterwards lord chancellor, whose collateral descendant and representative, Christopher lord Hatton of Kirby, in 1676 sold the advowsons of Great Billing, Stoke Bruerne, Cottingham, and Wold, for £1600. to the principal and fellows of Brasenose college, Oxford[s], the present patrons (1820).

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[t], and of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[u], it was rated at 12 marks (£8.), and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's book, 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £19[j]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified Great Billing to be a parsonage presentative, worth £80. per ann. and that Daniel Cawdry the incumbent was resident[x].

The rectorial land consists of 293 a. 2 r. 17 p. allotted under the inclosure act (1778), in lieu of the glebe and of the tithes of the open fields and of the old inclosure.

The parsonage is near the centre of the village, and was rebuilt by the rev. G. B. Bower.

RECTORS. Ralph, "decano de Billing," attests the foundation charter of St. David's hospital at Kingsthorp in 1200[y].

Robert Barre, brother of Simon Barre, occurs early in the reign of Hen. 3.

Ralph de Pulkele. In 4 Edw. 1. he is certified to have withheld suit to the hundred court of Spelho, for two virgates of land which he had in Magna Billing[z], probably the ancient glebe of the rectory. His successor was

William de Chilteham, subdeacon, 3 May 1281, on the presentation of the king and queen. On his decease

Robert de Appelby, priest, was presented by the king 3 Nov. 1315. On his deprivation

Thomas de Lusteshull was nominated by the king[a], but neither he, nor the subsequent nominee were instituted, for 28 June, 12 Edw. 2 (1319),

Robert de Marchumley was presented, the king revoking the presentation of Walter de Dodenham[b]. He was instituted 12 Sept. following, and retained this benefice till his death, when

Robert de Stretton, clerk, auditor of the court of rolls at Rome, and prebendary of Litchfield, was inst. 22 April 1330. He was afterwards dean of Exeter, and resigning this living, was succeeded by

Walter Atte Hale, 6 June 1339[c], who, on the 23d Dec. following, was succeeded by

Thomas de Lutton. On his decease

Richard de Wolveston, priest, was inst. 26 Feb. 1348. He resigned, and Alan de Stokes, acolyte, was inst. 21 Dec. 1349. He exchanged for the rectory of Snargate in Kent, with Alexander de Aungre, priest, 24 July 1361, who retained it but three months, and

William Burgeys de Caldecote, priest, succeeded 19 Oct. in the same year. He exchanged it 4th May 1372, for the vicarage of North Mimms, in Herts, with

Thomas Horton, priest, who resigned, and

Philip Wen, was instituted 29 Sept. 1375. He was presented to Stow in Dec. 1383; but exchanged Billing the preceding October for the rectory of Navenby in Lincolnshire, with

Alan de Stokes, priest, lord of the Kingsthorp fee in Weston Favell. On his resignation

Richard Ferrour, priest, was inst. 20 Oct. 1386. He held it till his death, when

John Nicholl, priest, was inst. 7 Jan. 1422. He was rector of Blutherwich 1418, vicar of Wedon Pinkney 1430; and rector of Thrapston. He resigned Billing, and

John Lichebarowe, priest, was inst. 1 Oct. 1451, on the presentation of Will. Whaplode, Nich. Cleyton, and John Farendon. He was successively vicar of Watford, and rector of Litchborough 1432, Helmdon 1441, Collingtree 1441, Benefield 1443, and Wotton 1444; which last he probably obtained on resigning this benefice, his successor

John Bate, priest, presented by the same patrons, being inst. 24 Nov. in that year. He was rector also of Little Billing, and of Wilby; and on procuring the rectory of Ecton in 1453, appears to have resigned this benefice to

Richard Bate, priest, who was presented by Richard Lovell, and inst. in Aug. 1453. He was rector of Collingtree 1437, Clendon 1446, vicar of Wedon Bec 1448, rector of Barton Segrave 1451; and exchanged Billing for Creek with

Thomas Peresbrigg, 21 April 1462, who retained this benefice only a year, when he exchanged it for the rectory of Broughton Astley, in Leicestershire, with

Master Richard Boseworth, priest, 1 July 1463. He was rector of Wakerley 1472, and of Maidwell 1504. On his decease

Master John Egerton, B. D. was inst. 16 March 1512, on the presentation of Ralph Egerton, by grant from the king p. h. v. He was rector of Farthingston 1519, and of Weston Favell. By his will, 22 Mar. 1532, he appointed to be buried in Billing church, and bequeaths "to the curate sir John Pattyn, priest, my longe gowne lyned with red sarsenet[a]." His successor,

Master John Hurte, B. D. rector of Little Billing, was presented by Henry Fitzroy, duke of Somerset and Richmond, natural son of king Henry 8. and instituted 7 Ap. 1533. On his decease

John Ingham, clerk, was inst. 1 Aug. 1552, on the presentation of the king, pleno jure, the advowson having, I apprehend, reverted to the crown by failure of issue from the duke of Somerset. He held it till his death, when

Arthur Wake, clerk, younger son of John Wake, of Hartwell, esq. was inst. 5 Mar. 1565. He obtained a canonry of Christ's Ch. Ox. 1567, and the mastership of St. John's Hospital in Northampton 1569; but refusing subscription to the 39 articles, in conformity to the statute 13 Eliz. c. 12, was deprived of his rectory, and Justinian Bracegirdle, clerk, was inst. 17 Feb. 1573. He was a native of Cheadle in Cheshire, as appears by his will, 20 Oct. 1625, in which, besides minor benefactions, he directed his executors to purchase and vest in trust the impropriation and advowson of Mares Abbey; the proceeds of the rectory to be appropriated in portions of £10. per ann. to scholars of the university of Oxford; the three trustees now nominate three scholars each. He died the 25th of the same month, and was buried in Billing chancel, where a quaint poetical epitaph records his charitable disposition. His successor

Daniel Cawdry, S. T. P. was inst. 6 Dec. 1625, in the presentation of the king by wardship of Christopher Hatton, esq. He was youngest son of Mr. Robert Cawdry, an early non-conformist, and educated at Peter House, Cambridge. When the assembly of divines were appointed by parliament in 1643, for the regulation of religion, he became one of the leading members, but signed the address of the presbyterian clergy to the lord general Fairfax, remonstrating against, and urging him and the army to discountenance, all personal violence to the king. On the restoration he was recommended to the lord chancellor for one of the new bishops; instead, however, of courting further promotion, he refused to submit to the act of uniformity, 1662, and was ejected from his rectory; on which he retired to Wellingborough, where he died Oct. 1664, in his 76th year. He entered deeply into the polemical controversies of the times, and wrote "Sabbatum Redivivum; or, the Christian Sabbath vindicated," 1645, 4to. "The inconsistency of the Independent way with Scripture and itself," 1651, 4to. "An Answer to Mr. Giles Firmin's Questions concerning Baptism," 1652, 8vo. "A Diatribe concerning Superstition, Will-worship, and the Christmas Festival," 1654, 8vo. "Independence a great Schism, proved against Dr. (John) Owen's Apology," 1657, 8vo. "Bowing towards the Altar, superstitious; being an Answer to Dr. Duncan's Determination," 1661, 4to. "Self examination in preparation for the Lord's Table. Family Reformation. Church Reformation. A close hypocrite discarded, &c. a serm. 1641. A commission for an Assize, &c. assize serm. 1641. The lawfulness of doing good, &c. serm. 1641. On Josh. xxiv. 15. with a short catechism, 1656, 8vo. He was succeeded by

Lively Moody, S. T. P. vicar of Gretton, presented by John Bourne, of Ufford, gent. and Edmund May of Kirkby, gent. p. h. v. by grant of sir Christopher Hatton, K. B. and inst. 8 Sept. 1662, on whose decease

Joshua Walker, A. M. was inst. 11 Sept. 1688, on the presentation of the principal and fellows of Brazenose coll. Oxford. He indulged a taste for natural history, and both Morton, and Evelyn in his Sylva, express their obligations for his assistance. He died the 4th, and was buried here the 7th Nov. 1705, when he was succeeded by

Thomas Smith, A. M. who was inst. 5 April 1706. He was a Cheshire man, of Brazenose Coll. Ox. and proceeded M. A. 1679, B. D. 1697, and D. D. 1708. Archdeacon Churton in his interesting lives of the founders of Brazenose Coll. alludes to the assistance and encouragement he derived from Mr. Smith's collections from the college archives. In 1707 he was appointed principal of Hart hall, Ox. through the influence of the duke of Ormond: on his death he was succeeded in this rectory by Robert Shippen, D. D. principal of Brazenose Coll. inst. 9 Aug. 1710, on the presentation of Edward Shipway, p. h. v. He held it only two years, when he resigned in favour of

Richard Shipway, of Merton Coll. Ox. A. M. 1710, who was inst. 3 April 1712, and retained it till his death, when

William Geary, of Emanuel Coll. Camb. A. B. 1728, A. M. 1733, was collated by the bishop p. h. v. 1 April 1748; the principal, &c. having disposed of this presentation and applied the purchase money to the repairs of the college. He was also vicar of Burton Hussey in Lincolnshire, and fourth prebendary of Peterborough, and died 25 Aug. 1787, aged 80. His successor, George Buckley Bower, A. M. 1770, was inst. 25 Dec. 1787, and had also the archdeaconry of Richmond in Chester. He was esteemed an eminent divine, and had prepared a considerable body of divinity for publication; but a short time before his death, which happened at Heyfield in Derbyshire, 1 Jan. 1801, he directed his executors to destroy all his MSS. The present incumbent (1820).

John Wright, A. M. 1787, D. D. 1820, was inst. 16 May 1801.

The Register of this parish commences in 1662.

The Communion Plate consists of a silver flagon and salver, the gift of lady Henrietta O'Brien.

The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, stands in the grounds of Mr. Elwes, north of the village, and consists of a western tower containing three bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and north chapel, all leaded. The tower was originally surmounted by a spire, which, on the 11th of April, 1759, was destroyed by lightning, "and some of the stones were whirled into the air with such an astonishing force and rapidity as "to be carried to a considerable distance. Many of the pews in the church were shivered to pieces, and the "sulphureous smell was so powerful that scarcely any body could bear to go near the church, which is so much "shattered that it is thought the whole fabric must be rebuilt[f]." When the old mansion of the Thomonds was taken down, some of the pannelling and other ornaments were transferred to the parapets of the tower and nave of the church. All the windows have been injudiciously divested of their mullions and tracery. The inner door of the south porch is of the decorated english style of the period of Edw. 3. The architrave mouldings run down the sides nearly to the ground, and die into the wall: the canopy, which connects with a plain round dripstone, has crocketted sides, but, instead of a finial, a figure much mutilated holding a shield, and each return has also a shield within a circle. The interior is cieled, and is paved with stone, and pewed. The tower is 13 ft. 9 in. long, by 10 ft. wide; the nave and aisles are 46 ft. long, the nave 16 ft. 2 in. the north aisle 11 ft. 5 in. and the south aisle 11 ft. 9 in. wide; the chancel and the north chapel 34 feet 4 in. long; the chancel 13 ft. 3 in. and the chapel 17 ft. 4 in. wide. The font is octagonal, divided into long narrow trefoil-headed pannels. The nave has six clerestory windows, and is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches, so irregular in their span that no two are alike, except the westerly ones of the south aisle. The pillars on the north side are circular, two of them having plain capitals of the same shape, and the centre one decidedly norman, with an indented ornament between a single leaf at each extremity, and a square abacus. The pillars on the south side are in the decorated english style, formed of central lozenge piers, with three round shafts attached to each angle, having capitals of three sets of plain mouldings, which, as well as the bases, conform to the contour of the columns. The demi-columns at the ends of the aisles, and those from which the chancel arch springs, are all multangular; and the whole interior of the church is connected by a series of archivolt mouldings, supported by corbels. On the east wall of the south aisle is a large niche between two smaller ones, each ornamented with a crocketted ogee canopy, crowned by a finial, and flanked by slender pinnacles. The chancel is separated from the nave by a wooden screen under an open pointed arch, and communicates with the north chapel or burial place through a modern circular arch.

North Chapel. Against the north wall is a large and costly, but tasteless and ill-executed monument for Henry the 7th earl of Thomond. On the back of a table-tomb of black and white marble is placed an altar, on the face of which, in relief, are five children praying, with books in their hands; at each end a figure kneeling, and from behind the altar, and kneeling upon it are seen the earl and countess in devotional attitudes, with an infant in swaddling clothes lying between them. From the centre rises a pyramid with arms quarterly: 1 and 4. Brien Boromh. 2. Ar. three piles G. O'Brien. 3. O. a pheon Az.... impaling Ar. a lion rampant G. on a chief Almshouse. 'The almshouse in this town was built after his death [John Freeman, esq.] by his order, which 'he hath endowed with a yearly provision of £6. each for one man and four women. These were formerly nomi-'nated by the two daughters and heirs of sir William Hazlewood, of Maidwell, but are now put in by the lord Hatton[e].' This charity has been long discontinued, and the almshouses, which are only mean cottages, converted into parish-houses for paupers.

Over the door of a cottage opening into Mr. Elwes' back-yard is inscribed Maison Dieu, 1614.

The commissioners of inclosure awarded 4 a. 1 r. 31 p. in trust for the poor in lieu of gathering brakes or ling, the rent whereof is distributed yearly; and also 2 a. 2 r. 18 p. to the churchwardens for the church-lands.

Sir Isaac Wake, son of the rev. Arthur Wake, rector of this parish, was born here about the year 1575, and educated at Merton college, Oxford. He was appointed orator of the university in 1604, and in the following year distinguished himself by a display of eloquence before the king and court during their visit to Oxford. On his return from the tour of France and Italy, he became secretary to sir Dudley Carleton, through whose influence he was afterwards employed in various embassies, and in 1619 was "ambassador extraordinary in Savoy and Piemont, ordinary for Italy, Helvetia, and Rhetia, select for France." He was elected M.P. for the university of Oxford in 1623, and was on the point of being made secretary of state, when death put a period to his flattering prospects whilst engaged in a negociation at Paris in 1632. His body was conveyed to England, and interred in the chapel of Dover castle at the express command and sole expence of the king. Whilst at the university he is said to have written latin, french, and english with greater facility than any of his cotemporaries. Elocution was his forte, but he seems to have excelled less in argumentative speeches than in studied orations, for which reason, combined with his polished address, he was selected to officiate on all public occasions. Several of his orations and "discourses" on political subjects are extant, but his principal publication is entitled "Rex Platonicus," &c. or a detailed account of the reception of king James I. at Oxford in 1605, and of the academical exercises performed before his majesty, which probably owes the honor of reaching a 6th edition, to the supposition of one of its passages having suggested the plot of Shakspeare's Macbeth.

LITTLE BILLING,

So called in contra distinction to Great Billing, is bounded on the north and west by Weston Favell; east by Great Billing; north-east by Overston; and south by the river Nen, which divides it from Little Houghton, in Wymersley hundred. The lordship contains 820 acres, and partakes of the same general character of soil as the other Billing, with a greater proportion of meadow and grazing land. There is now no mill, though one is mentioned in domesday.

MANORIAL HISTORY. HONOR OF CHOKES. The saxon proprietor was Suain, who possessed it freely, and had lands also in Cransley, Buckby, West Haddon, Great Creton, Rothersthorp, Thorp by Daventry, and Rode; the whole of which at the domesday survey were in the hands of Gunfrid de "Cioches," or Chokes, who held in "Belinge," in "Spercholt" hundred, three hides and a virgate and a half. The arable land was seven carucates; two were in demesne with four servants; and 16 villeins with a priest had the remaining five carucates. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and 50 acres of meadow. The estate had been valued at 40s. but was then raised to 70s.[a]

The Honor of Chokes, of which this village was a member, included 15 knights' fees[b], which, with the exception of two fees in Buckinghamshire and Leicestershire, were all in this county; but as GAYTON may be considered the head of the barony, the particulars of its descent are reserved for that place.

MANOR. The mediate manor was obtained within a generation of the Norman conquest by a family who assumed the local name of Preston (Deanry), where a detailed account of them will be introduced. In the survey of hides in the reign of Hen. 2. "Billingge Parva" is rated at four hides[c]. In the 14th of this reign Gilbert de Preston is certified to hold two fees and a half of the barony of Robert de Chokes[d], and by the inquisition of homages and services due to this honor, taken in 31 Hen. 3. it appears that Billing Parva was rated at one third, and Knuston made up the other two thirds of a fee[e]. Alice, widow of Gilbert de Preston, had this manor in assignment of dower, and in the book of knights' fees, 24 Edw. I. is found to hold it of Ralph de Feynes by knight's service, and the said Ralph of the king in capite[f]. On her decease, probably it was alienated; for '[g] in '4 Edw. 2

'JOHN DE LONGUEVILLE levied a fine of the manor of Little Billing;' and in the 9th of the same reign was certified to be lord[h]. He endowed a house for Friers Augustines in Northampton in 1322 (16 Edw. 2.) and several of his descendants were interred there[i]. He was succeeded by his son and heir George Longueville, who settled certain lands and rents in Northampton and Billing on the above monastic foundation[k]; John Longueville succeeded his father, and by Inq. p. m. 35 Edw. III. was found to die seized of the aforesaid manors, &c. leaving John Longueville his son and heir, a minor[m]. His marriage with the co-heiress of Wolverton not only furnished the family with a residence in Buckinghamshire, but greatly augmented their wealth and influence in this county, as will be shewn under WYKEHAMOND OF WYKEN. Sir George Longueville, son and heir of John, gained a still further accession of honour with his first wife; whose grandson and heir Richard Longueville, enjoyed the barony of Roche, and, jointly with Ferrers of Chartley, that of Birmingham, of her inheritance. He died 36 Hen. 6. seized (int. al.) of the manor of Little Billing, leaving John Longueville his son and heir, an infant aged 33 weeks[n], who in 19 Edw. 4, on attaining his full age, had licence of livery, and took possession of his estates[o]. 'In 33 Hen. 8[p], a fine was levied of the manor of Little Billing, between Henry Bever and others, and (this) sir John Longueville;' from whom it appears to have passed to Arthur Longueville, esq. as he was possessed of it in 3 Edw. 6[q], and the 1st of queen Mary. Leland says, "Langeville an 103 Yeres old made his Landes from his Heires general to His Bastard Sunne Arture[r]," which statement is confirmed by the entry of his burial in the Wolverton register, where he is expressly described as "Father of sir Thomas and Arthur Longueville, who were both his bastard sons." Sir Edward Longueville, great grandson of Arthur, in reward for pecuniary assistance rendered to king Charles at Edinburgh, was created a baronet of Nova Scotia in 1638. He lived to see the restoration, and, dying in August 1661, was succeeded by his son and heir sir Thomas Longueville, the 2d baronet; against whom and his lady, with their accomplices, a complaint was brought before the House of Commons, on the 5th of March following (1661-2), for having forcibly entered upon, and still keeping possession of an house and lands in Wolverton, Buckinghamshire; and another house in Billing, Northamptonshire, of which colonel Gray, M. P. his tenants or assigns, were lately in possession, by virtue of a demise from the late sir Edward Longueville and his lady, in trust to pay debts and raise portions for younger children; when it was ordered, that the serjeant at arms do apprehend and take into custody sir Thomas and the other persons named, to answer their misdemeanor and breach of privilege[s]; but no further proceedings are recorded. He was killed by a fall from his horse, near Wolverton, in June 1685, and left an only son sir Edward Longueville, the 3d baronet, who was a zealous catholic, and sold this manor to support the cause of king James the 2d, the very day the army declared for the prince of Orange at Blackheath; and within a few years his necessities compelled him to dispose of Wolverton, which was purchased by Dr. Radcliffe for £50,000, and is now vested in the trustees of the Radcliffe Library at Oxford. He met with a similar fate to his father, being thrown from his horse and killed at Bicester races, in 1718, and leaving no issue, the title devolved on his first cousin and brother-in-law sir Thos. Longueville, the 4th and last baronet, for he too dying without male issue, the baronetage became extinct.

This manor was purchased of the Longuevilles by William Thursby, esq. and has subsequently accompanied Abington, to J. H. Thursby, esq. who, with the manor, possesses the whole lordship, except eight acres of glebe, and 65 acres recently sold to R. C. Elwes, esq. of Great Billing.

Moreton Fee. Osmund a considerable saxon freeholder, had a small portion of "Belinge" before the conquest, rated only at 2s. yearly, but at the domesday survey quintupled in value, and held by the earl Moreton. It consisted of half an hide, and half a virgate. The arable land was one carucate. There were three villeins with two oxen, employed, I presume, in its cultivation; and twenty acres—an almost unexampled proportion—of meadow [t].

The earl had also two virgates and a half at "Bellica," in the soke or jurisdiction of the manor of Weston, which is transposed by Bridges[u]. The arable land was one carucate. There were two villeins with one bordar and seven acres of meadow. The whole had been and still was valued at 10s. yearly [t].

No direct traces of these estates remain on record, but from a donation to the priory of St. Andrews, it may safely be inferred, that they were obtained by the feudatory lord who held the remainder of the vill under the honor of Chokes.

St. Andrew's Priory Manor. Moreton and Chokes Fees. Walter Fitz Winemar, with the consent of Olanna his wife, and Gilbert and Hugh his heirs, by deed s. d. granted to the priory of St. Andrews, in Northampton (int. al.) the church of "Byllyng," with a meadow and two virgates of land there, viz. one virgate of the fee of Anselm (Chokes); the other of the fee of Roald Avrenches[x] (of the fee of Moreton *), which was confirmed by his descendant Michael de Preston in the reign of Hen. 2, with the addition of three more virgates[z], and further ratified by Walter the son of Michael, and Gilbert the son of Walter de Preston[y]. A suit was instituted against the priory in the succeeding reign, which, as illustrative of feudal tenures, is perhaps deserving of notice. The prior was charged with having for two years past subtracted a yearly payment of 6d. to the sheriffs aid for castleward to the castle of Rockingham, as well as suit to the Spelho hundred court for his lands at "Byllyng," to which he replied that one Gilbert de Preston gave the two virgates in question to a former prior in pure and perpetual alms, free of all secular service; but George de Longueville on behalf of the king contended, that the whole vill of Little Billing was held of John de Fendles, by certain service, and 40d. yearly castleguard, levied by the bailiff of the sheriff for ward of the castle of Rockingham, or of Northampton, toward which the prior ought to pay 6d. for his quota. The court simply adjudged the king to be seized of the said 40d. yearly, but that it was unnecessary to inquire further respecting this portion, and the prior was accordingly dismissed; probably from a conviction that George Longueville, the lord of the manor, was liable to the whole payment, and that this was merely an attempt on his part to throw a part of the burden on the prior. As to the subtraction of suit, the jury of Spelho hundred presented, that king Henry 2, by his charter, which king Edward had seen and confirmed, granted to the priors of St. Andrew, acquittance from shire and hundred courts, and that neither the said prior, nor any of his predecessors, from the date of this charter, which was before the time of memory, did any such services to the king[z]. In 1291 (19 Edw. 1.) the possessions of the priory in "Billing Minor," were of the yearly value of £3. 15s. in lands and dove houses, and £3. in meadow[a]; and in the survey at the dissolution, 30 Hen. 8 (1538), they were reputed a manor, and rated jointly with the manors of Cotton, Hardingstone, and Wellingborough[b]. In 7 Edw. 6. Thomas Sydenham, and Nicholas Haleswell, had a grant of lands in Billing, parcel of the dissolved priory of St. Andrew[c], and they are now blended with the other Thursby estate or manor.

The Manor House is thus noticed by Leland, the father of british topography. "The Eldest House or "Manor Place of the Longevilles, yet remaynith at Little Billinge, about a 3 miles Est from Northampton, & "ther ly divers of them buried[d]." It ceased to be occupied as a mansion after the Longuevilles; and Messrs. Buck, who, in 1729, published a view of the ruins, mistook it for a priory. A subsequent view, is introduced in the Archæologia, accompanied by a descriptive essay, in which this house and Canford hall in Dorsetshire are "considered as a kind of structure between the castles, calculated for military defence, and the manor houses or "palaces of the nobility in the reign of Elizabeth, and the two Henry's preceding her[e]." The east end is still standing, and converted into a farm house; but time and modern innovations have left but little to interest the artist or antiquary.

The Village is about four miles east from Northampton. In the time of Bridges it consisted of '11 families[f].' By the census of 1801 it contained 15 houses and 64 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 16 houses and 87 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £102. 1s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1763. The poor rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £104. 1s. 9½d. at 1s. 9d. in the £. The Wake follows All Saints Day.

Advowson. The advowson, it has already been seen, was given to the priory of St. Andrew, where it remained till the dissolution, when it came to the crown, and was granted (int. al.) 4 Edw. 6. to sir Ralph Sadlier, knt.[g] After passing through the families of Langtree, Stockwell, and Woodford, it was purchased by sir Thomas Drury, bart. of Overston, from whom it has descended to John earl Brownlow, the present patron.

Rectory. The benefice is a rectory in the deanry of Haddon. The first incumbent on record was a vicar, and the second a rector; an apparent incongruity, which may be thus reconciled. In pope Nicholas's taxation 1291 (20 Edw. I.) the nature and value of the living itself is omitted, but mention is made of a yearly pension of 20s. not tithable, out of "Billing minor," to the priory of St. Andrew, which payment might be, and I have no doubt was, the condition on which the benefice was disappropriated, and converted again into a rectory[h]; and the supposition is further strengthened by a suit in 1303 (31 Edw. 1.) between the prior and William (de Lincoln) rector of Billing, respecting this annual pension of 20s. which was determined in favour of the prior, and the rector adjudged to pay all arrears[i]. At the dissolution it became vested in the crown, and continues to be paid by the rector to the present day.

In the ecclesiastical valor 1535 (26 Hen. 8.) the rectory was valued at £10. 2s. 11d.[k] and in 1655, the parliamentary commissioners returned it to be a parsonage presentative worth £50. per ann. in the gift of Justinian Bracegirdle, of Great Creton, esq. and that Richard Woodford, the incumbent, was resident[l]. The rector has a glebe of eight acres, and is entitled to the great and small tithes, but takes a pecuniary composition. The parsonage house is adjoining to the north side of the church-yard, and has been much improved by the present incumbent.

Rectors. Ralph, chaplain, was presented to the perpetual vicarage of Parva Billing, by the prior and convent of St. Andrew, near Northampton, about the year 1200, as appears from his attesting certain grants to the priory. No further mention occurs of a vicar; and the next incumbent, Master Stephen de Fulleburn, subdeacon, was presented by the same patrons to the church or rectory of Parva Billing in 1247.

Master Walter Hildeburg, 1263.

The Register of this parish commences in 1635.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small building of one pace leaded, south porch, chancel, and north chapel, tiled. On the western gable is a wooden turret, containing three bells. The body of the church though mean is uniform; the tablets and a bold ogee basement are continued throughout, and the windows, three on each side, are composed of a very depressed arch, with a single mullion trefoiled. The west window, and the east chancel are of three lights, with the head doubled by rectilinear tracery. The side windows of the north chapel are square headed. There is a descent of two steps from the north door into the interior, which is paved with stone, and partly new pewed. Down the centre are three bases, which evidently once supported pillars, and from which wooden piers now rise to the beams of the open roof. The body of the church is 45 ft. 5 in. long by 26 ft. 7 in. wide; the chancel 31 ft. by 12 ft. 5 in.; and the north chapel 31 ft. 5 in. by 14 ft. 3 in. The font, of which an etching is given, is singularly curious, and being unquestionably anterior to any other portion of the present fabric, may be considered the only relic of the first, or original church. It is irregularly circular, and of rude workmanship. Repeated coats of whitewash had nearly obliterated all traces of an inscription, but being carefully removed, restored to view the following barbarous couplet "in characters exactly conformable to the great seal of William the conqueror."

which may be thus imitated:

To solve the doubt of those who come,
Attending Baptism's holy rite,
The working mason, be it known,
Who made this was Wigbertus hight*.

The chancel and north chapel are divided from the body by wooden screens, under open arches. On the north side of the east window in the north chapel is a head supporting a bracket; on the opposite side a square locker; and in the adjoining angle a projecting piscina. The two south arches, which formerly communicated with the chancel, are built up. North of the entrance from the nave is a recess about 7½ ft. square, into which is an ascent of three steps under an arch. On the west side is a seat under a trefoil headed arch, and on the north was a door and a small window, both now closed. This chapel belongs to the lord of the manor, and there is a tradition that several of the Longuevilles were interred in it, but there are no memorials of any of them.

BOUGHTON,

In domesday is variously written "Bochetone, Buchedone, Buchenho, and Buchetone;" and in later records "Buckton, or the town of bucks," according to Halstead; but as the Saxon boc denotes a beech tree, and a book or charter, the prevalence of beech timber, or the vill being boc or charter-land, as opposed to folk-land, may with equal plausibility be adopted for the basis of the name.

The lordship consists of about 1400 acres, and was inclosed with Pitsford by act of parliament, 29 Geo. 2. (1756). Colonel Vyse, the lord of the manor, is proprietor of 807 acres; the rector, in right of his church, has about 185 acres; Mr. Redgrave, about 100 acres; Mr. Frost, of Puddington in Bedfordshire, about 110 acres; and the residue is dispersed among small freeholders. It is bounded on the north by Pitsford; east by Moulton; south-east by Moulton park; south by Kingsthorp; and west by the river Nen, which divides it from Chapel Brampton, in Newbottle Grove hundred. The soil, principally of a snuff colour, or reddish loam, with a mixture of light land on a sandy bottom, is very fertile, and remarkably early, being always amongst the first fruits of the surrounding harvest. Oak, beech, elm, and fir thrive in great luxuriance, but the soil is not well adapted to ash. Morton mentions two rare plants found here. "Caryophillus Holosteus Arvensis hirsutus, long leaved rough chick-" weed with a large flower, near the highways. Ebulus, dwarf elder, or danewort[a]." To these may be added Chelidonium majus, common celandine. Artemisia Absinthium, wormwood. Anagallis arvensis, pimpernel. Senecio sylvaticus, bushy Groundsel. Astragalus glycyphyllos, wild Liquorice. Clinopodium vulgare, wild Basil. Atriplex patula, spreading Orache. Two small lime kilns have been recently established. "There is a small spring of the "temporary kind, of great note with the vulgar, called Marvel sike, about two bows shoot from Brampton bridge, nigh Kingsthorp road[b];" and several petrifying springs in the lordship, particularly the grotto spring in the park. The mill is near Brampton Bridge. It is noticed in domesday, and was subsequently given to the hospital of St. David at Kingsthorp; but since the dissolution has passed again to the lord of the manor. It has lately been converted into a corn mill, after having been used as a paper mill for upwards of a century.

Manorial History. Boughton at the domesday survey consisted of four feudatory estates, under the countess Judith[c], Robert de Buci[d], and the King[e]; each of which, as in all similar cases, will be separately treated.

Judith Fee. Honor of Huntingdon. Two unequal shares belonged to the Countess Judith; the principal division which in the saxon era had been held freely by two thanes, she gave, with the consent of the king, to the abbey of St. Wandregisile. This estate in "Buchedone" contained three hides, deducting half a virgate. Of the arable land, extending to six carucates, two and an half were in demesne, and the remaining three and an half were distributed among fourteen villeins and twelve cottagers. The meadow land was ten acres. It had been rated in the time of Edward the confessor at 20s. but was then doubled in value[c].

The extensive possessions of the countess Judith, niece of William the conqueror, subsequently constituted the Honor of Huntingdon, of which an extended notice is reserved for Yardley Hastings, one of the principal residences of the earls, and the head of that portion of the honor, which, on the distribution amongst the co-heirs, was assigned to Henry Hastings, ancestor of the earls of Pembroke.

Wandregisile, or Vandrille Manor. The abbey of Fontenelle, St. Wandregisile, or Vandrille, is in the diocese, and about six or seven leagues distant from Rouen in Normandy. It was founded by St. Wandregisile in 654; or, according to the Monasticon, by Richard the second duke of Normandy. It once boasted of 500 monks, but in the last century was reduced to 20. The sacristan, in 1580, despoiled the monastery of a fine collection of MSS. which were purchased by Bigot and Duchesne. The monks of Wandregisile were certified to have three hides and three small virgates in "Boketon," in the return of hides in the reign of Hen. 2.[f] This estate—for it can be applied to no other—was rated at 32 virgates in the book of fees 24th of Edw. 1. and was then held by William Daubeney of John Hastings, as of the honor of Huntingdon[g]. I suspect that his tenure did not extend beyond a limited demise; for 'in Edw. I'sts time William de Nutricilla, abbot of St. Wandregisile, made 'a conveyance of the lands which belonged to that monastery in Boughton to John de Boketon or Boughton, from 'whom they descended to Sir Tho. de Boketon[h]. But as these lands were said to have belonged to him as pos-'sessed of the Prebend of Upavene, in the church of Salisbury, and this alienation was made without the consent 'of the Dean and Chapter, William, Abbot of St. Wandregisile, the successor of William de Nutricilla, in the third 'year of Edw. III. attempted to recover them from the said Sir Tho. de Boketon. But when the cause came to be 'tried, the Abbot declining to appear in Court, the point was decided in favour of the possessor.' The same year a writ of quo warranto was sued against this Sir Thomas de Boketon, grandson of John de Boketon, the grantee, for claiming view of frank pledge with its appendages, and weyf in his manor of "Bokton," to which he pleaded prescription; but admitting that he had exacted a fine of 2s. from offenders against the assize of bread and ale, instead of resorting to the only legal punishments of the tumbril and pillory, the view was seized into the king's hands, but restored again for half a mark[i]. He was succeeded by

Sir Henry Green, his son and heir, who was raised to the high official situation of lord chief justice of England. An able and ingenious genealogist, in a work of extreme rarity[k], thus comments on the family of Boughton and Green being synonimous. "Of the original of the House of Greene we have no certain infor-"mation, but it is apparent they assumed their Name and Arms from an allusion to their principal and beloved "Lordship; which was Buckton, or the Town of Bucks, in the County of Northampton, being in the Hundred of

"Spellho, a place memorable for the excellency of its soil and situation, as a spacious and delightful Green, upon "which, at the desire of the Lords, was yearly held and exercised a Fair, with particular and extraordinary "priviledges. Hence they were called Greene, or of the Green. And from Buckton, or the Town of Bucks, they "have assumed for their Arms in a Field Azure, three Bucks trippant Or, until the division of the Family in the "two Sons of Sir Henry Greene, the great Chief Justice; the second whereof Sir Henry Greene, the younger, had "been obliged by his Cousin Sir John of Drayton, upon his becoming invested in that Lordship, to change his "own Arms and assume those of his Family, which were Argent a Cross Engrailed Gules to him and his posterity "ever after." The lord chief justice, who in all his extant deeds styles himself "de Buckton," added greatly to his patrimonial property, and dying in 43 Edw. 3.[1] (1370) in addition to the manor of Drayton above mentioned, those of Luffwick, Islip, Slipton, and a third of Great Houghton, and others in the counties of Buckingham and Bedford, the advowson of Luffwick, and lands in Harringworth, Carlton, Raundes, Ringstead, Cotes, and Titchmarsh, passed by settlement to his second son, Sir Henry Greene; and the residue of his estate, comprising the manors of Boughton, Greens Norton, Eston Neston, and advowson of Sewardsley priory, Heymondcote (Heathencote), Heybourn (in Leckhamsted), Mares Ashby, Dodington, Chapel Brampton, and a third of Great Houghton, with others in the counties of Leicester, Hertford, York, &c. the advowsons of Boughton, Greens Norton, and Great Houghton, lands in Pitsford, Whittlebury, Silveston, Towcester, Pavelispery, Batsaddle in Orlingbury, Cottingham, and Middleton, Isham, Pightesley, Little Harrowden, Hardwick, and Northampton, descended to his son and heir

Sir Thomas Greene; from whom the same christian name was invariably transmitted to the eldest son, a custom which cannot be too strongly deprecated by antiquaries, since it confounds personal identity, and leads to the misapplication of marriages and documents. Hence Bridges in deducing this manor, makes but three instead of six Thomas Greenes[m], and though he has introduced a fourth in his pedigree of the family under Mares Ashby[n], yet having overlooked Sir Thomas who married the heiress of Mablethorp, and given his wife to his father, the two first inquisitions post mortem are consequently thrown a descent too high: Sir Thomas and Marina Beler are both omitted by him, whilst another genealogist[o] has introduced the lady as the second wife of her husband's grandfather. The subjoined pedigree carries the descent to sir Thomas Green, who died 22 Hen. 7, leaving two daughters and coheiresses, during whose minority their estate '[p] was claimed by the bishop of Win- ' chester, Sir Giles Daubeney, Sir Tho. Lovell, and some others; but when the cause should have been tried, ' the demandants making default, judgment was given in favor of the defendants.'

In 23 Hen. 7 (1508), sir Nicholas Vaux, and Anne his wife, daughter and coheiress of sir Thomas Green, deceased, and Matilda Green, the other coheiress, obtained a grant of all the profits of their lands then in ward to the king[q]. Matilda soon after married sir Thomas Parr, of Kendal in Westmoreland, but as the office taken after the death of sir Nicholas, then lord Vaux, included the whole of the Green estate[r], it may safely be inferred that he had purchased his coparcener's moiety. The history of this noble family will be more appropriately placed at HARROWDEN, which gave name to their barony.

Edward, the 4th lord Vaux, married the widow of William earl of Banbury, but dying in 1661, without legitimate issue, devised all his possessions to his reputed son

Nicholas Knolles, sometimes called earl of Banbury, being born whilst lady Vaux's first husband was living. Bridges states that 'his eldest daughter Anne was married to sir John Briscoe, kt. who in right of his wife succeeded to this manor[s];' but it appears by an entry in the parish register, extracted from the title deeds, that Nicholas earl of Banbury on his marriage with Mrs. Anne Sherrard, his second wife, in 1655, settled in jointure the manors of Boughton, Pisford, Great and Little Harrowden, Irthlingborough, Burton Latimer, Orlingbury, and Mares Ashby; and that

Sir John Briscoe purchased Boughton, &c. of Charles earl of Banbury, his wife's half brother. He resided principally at Amberley Castle in Sussex, and died at an advanced age, 8 Feb. 1724[t], having mortgaged Boughton and Pitsford to lord Ashburnham, with whom, I presume he joined in conveying them to

Thomas Wentworth, 3rd earl of Strafford, but first earl of the last creation, who held his first court in 1717. This nobleman entered the army at an early age, and served with distinction in all the campaigns under king William the 3d. In the succeeding reign he became a leading diplomatist, and was successively ambassador at Berlin and the Hague, and plenipotentiary for the treaty of Utrecht, which was signed at his house there 11 April 1713. On the death of his son William, 4th earl, s. p. the family manors and estates in the counties of Northampton, Bedford, Suffolk, Kent, Surrey, Middlesex, and city of London, by virtue of the limitations in the will of earl Thomas, vested in the heirs of his three daughters in equal proportions as tenants in common; who being desirous of holding their shares in severalty, a partition was made between Thomas Conolly, esq. Henry Vernon, and Leveson Vernon, esquires, and major-general Richard Vyse in behalf of R. W. H. Vyse, a minor, and confirmed by act of parliament in 1795[u], by which (int. al.) the manors of Boughton and Pitsford, with the advowson, mansion, park, mill, and 807 a. 6 p. of land in Boughton, were allotted to

R. W. H. Vyse, esq. in tail, and the advowson, with 446 a. 3 r. 15 p. of land in Pitsford, in fee. A court leet and court baron are held for the manors of Boughton and Pitsford, at which constables, headboroughs, and pin-herds are appointed and sworn for both parishes.

Judith Fee. Preston Manor. The other and smaller portion held under the Countess Judith in "Buchenho," was in possession of one Gerard, and consisted of half a virgate only, valued at 4s.[x] It may safely be inferred that this was the half virgate wanting to complete the three hides granted to the abbey of Wandregisile, and that having been previously obtained by him, prevented its being included in that donation.

This estate, though so insignificant in itself, formed the basis of another manor subordinate to the honor of Huntingdon.

In an office taken 2 Ed. I. after the death of Gilbert de Preston, this manor, including the advowson, was associated with Wotton and Hanington, for the service of two fees to the lord of Yardley[y]; and in a return of the fees of the late Laurence Hastings, earl of Pembroke, in 22 Edw. 3, it was rated with Hanington for half a fee, worth (in feudal perquisites) 40s. yearly, and in tenure of Thomas de Preston[z]; by whom, or by his representative, it was conveyed to sir Henry Greene, the lord chief justice, who died possessed of it in the 43d of this reign[a], and whose ancestor, Walter son of Alexander de Boketon was in possession of one virgate, parcel of this manor, at the time of the first cited inquisition[y].

Buci Fee. Robert held of Robert de Buci lands in Spratton and Creton Parva, with three virgates of land, wanting one bovate or oxgang, in "Bochetone." The arable land was one carucate and a half, of which four cottagers with a villein and a servant had a carucate, and there were four acres of meadow. It was worth 5s. then 10s.[b] This entry is overlooked by Bridges. The fee of the Buci lands descended to Basset of Weldon, as will be fully shewn under that place. In that division of the Testa de Nevill, which was compiled about 25 Hen. 3, Simon de Sauvage and his parceners were certified to hold the fourth part of a fee in Spratton "Buketon," and Creton of Ralph Basset, of Weldon[c]; and in the certificate of knight's fees 24 Edw. 1, Ralph Danvers held seven virgates of land in "Bukton" of Robert de Tateshale, who was the mediate lord between him and Ralph Basset, of Weldon[d].

Godwin Fee. Amongst the eleemosinaries of the king Godwin the priest held trivial allotments in Fawsley and King's Sutton, and one virgate and a half in "Buchetone." The arable land was half a carucate valued at 5s.[e] Godwin enjoyed this grant in his individual, not in his professional capacity; and after a lapse of five centuries it may be traced in the office taken after the death of William lord Vaux, who was found to have holden the manor, fair, and advowson of Boughton, of the crown in socage, as of the manor of Kingsthorp[f]; which finding, though erroneous, and at variance with all the early inquisitions, as applied to this extent, affords a strong presumption that the estate in question was included in his lordship's possessions here, and its annexation to the adjoining royal manor of Kingsthorp is still further confirmed by the following custom (recorded about 1720), that there is a little place in the town, where if any person brings any stray cattle taken any where in the lordship they belong to the court at Kingsthorp, because four houses opposite to the said place belong solely to that court[g].

St. Andrew's Priory had a virgate of land in Boughton, of the gift of Robert the son of Simon, the chaplain of St. Sepulchre's, Northampton, by deed s. d.[h] which John de "Boketon" held from the prior, rendering 15s. yearly[i].

Boughton House, the occasional residence of the noble families of Green, Vaux, Knolles, and Wentworth, was occupied by the earl of Ross for a short time after the death of the earl of Strafford, and subsequently became the rendezvous of the Pightesley hunt, whilst under the management of John Ward, esq. who was the last inhabitant; and it is now nearly levelled with the ground. The park and adjacent grounds, which are partly walled, were well wooded; and temples, triumphal arches, and artificial ruins, were interspersed in fantastic variety. An obelisk erected on an eminence, to the memory of one of the dukes of Devonshire, is seen from almost every point of the surrounding country. The sketch from which the annexed vignette is etched, was made when I had scarcely "entered my teens," and was one of the earliest indications of that predilection for antiquities which has progressively led to the present publication.

The Village is nearly four miles from Northampton, and a few furlongs east of the turnpike road to Market Harborough. 'In the time of Bridges it consisted of forty houses, besides the earl of Strafford's seat, and the 'lodge upon the green. The poor houses are three[k].' By the census of 1801 it contained 69 houses, and 344 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 71 houses, and 334 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £94. 18s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2495. The amount of the poors' rates, for the year ending Easter 1820, was £557. 5s. 8¼d. at 8s. in the £. The wake follows the decollation of St. John the Baptist.

Boughton Green Fair. The origin of Fairs has been sought for in the annual resort to some holy well, or to the festival of the saint to whom the parish church is dedicated; and hence the most ancient fairs will be found to correspond with the dedication of the church, and were frequently kept in church yards till restrained by the statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. 1. Either of these theories, or rather both combined, may be applied to Boughton fair, which is held on an open green of 17 acres, about half a mile south-east of the village, and contiguous to the old church, the patron saint of which is peculiarly propitious, for on the eve of John the Baptist, whose name is appended both to the church and the spring in the church yard, it was customary for children and youth to assemble at certain wells and springs, when wrestling and other rural sports attracted a concourse of spectators and itinerant traders. A tradition prevailed here that the clergy for six miles round came to this church on John the Baptist's day to pray and preach for an hour, and after the conclusion of the service the neighbouring youths exercised their manhood at football and other pastimes, for whose reception some small booths were erected, and at length a charter for a fair obtained[l]. Whatever may have been the primary occasion of this celebrated fair, it was legally established by charter, dated 28 Feb. 25 Edw. 3 (1351), granting to sir Henry Green and his heirs for ever, a yearly fair at his manor of "Buckton," with all liberties and free customs incident thereto, for three days, viz. the vigil, the day, and the morrow of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, attested by the archbishop of Canterbury, bishop of London, bishop of Worcester chancellor, William de Bohun earl of Northampton, William de Clynton earl of Huntingdon, Ralph baron Stafford, John de Grey of Rotherfield steward of the household, and others[m]. The following advertisements from the Northampton Mercury, are corroborative of early customs already alluded to, but which, by the rapid transition in rural manners during the last century, have now become obsolete. "June 5, 1721. The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Strafford has been pleased to give "a Hat, value one Guinea, to be play'd for on the Monday at cudgels; and another of the same price, as also "6 pr. of Buckskin Gloves, at 5s. a pair, to be wrestled for on Tuesday; and a Silver Cup, of 5 Guineas price, "to be run for on the Wednesday, by Maiden Galloways, not exceeding 14 hands high, during the time of "Boughton Green Fair."

"June 1, 1730. Whereas some people that live at a distance from Northampton have complained that there "has not been public notice given time enough when the prizes of Wrestling and Single Stick are to be contended "for at Boughton Green Fair: This is to give notice, that Midsummer day is the day on which the fair is con-"stantly held for people of all sorts to buy and sell their goods. The next day being Thursday the 25th of June, "the ladies and people of the better rank meet to raffle, see the shows, and thence adjourn to a ball at the Red "Lion in Northampton that evening. Friday, the 26th, is the day for the trial of skill at Single Stick for a gold-"laced hat, of a guinea value. Saturday, the 27th, is for the trial of skill in Wrestling, where eight couple "wrestle, and those that give the best of three falls, are rewarded each with a pair of buckskin gloves, at 4s. a "pair. The eight conquerors are to wrestle for the prize of a gold-laced hat, of the same value and goodness "as that played for at single sticks. And if there should be any horse or foot race, those are not to be before the "29th of June.

"N. B. Whereas it has been observed that several fellows, under pretence of coming in their own shoes, have "wrestled with shoes where there has been nails artificially fixed, which has done great damage, it is hereby "declared, that no man shall be admitted to wrestle in any shoes that have a single nail, being the prizes are "given for diversion of the country; and all occasion of mischief is to be avoided. Those that play at single "stick are to give in their names the night before, to Thomas Whitfield, bailiff of the fair, who will always be "found at the fair, or in the town of Boughton adjacent. The same method is to be observed by those that put "in to wrestle as those at single stick, who are to give in their names the 25th June; those for wrestling are to "give in theirs the 26th, and none to be admitted afterwards."

The fair is annually proclaimed in the name of the lord of the manor, under whom the profits of stallage, &c. are held by lease. Temporary booths for refreshment, ranged in parallel rows, are surmounted by the signs of those innkeepers who attend them, and "the stretching canvass forms the gaudy street," of stalls for trinkets and goods of almost every description. The first day is appropriated to the sale of implements of husbandry, wooden ware, and timber;

[k] Br. 1. p. 410. [l] Lansdown MSS. 772. [m] Cart. 25-27 Edw. 3. n. 36.

From every part, stretched o'er the sultry way,
The labouring teams the various stores convey;
Vessels of wood and brass, all bright and new,
In merry mixture rise upon the view:
See! pots capacious lesser pots entomb,
And hogsheads barrels gorge, for want of room;
From their broad base, part in each other hid,
The lessening tubs shoot up a pyramid.
Pitchforks, and axes, and the deepening spade,
Beneath the pressing load are harmless laid;
Whilst out behind, where pliant poles prevail,
The merry waggon seems to wag his tail[m].

On the second day, which is principally devoted to pleasure, many of the neighbouring families of distinction breakfast in the tea-booth, and mingle in the rustic holiday; and the third day is a considerable and increasing fair for horses and cattle.

Advowson. Alexander de "Buketon," recovered the presentation to this church against Simon de Hocton and Simon de Buketon, in 4 Joh.[n] and with the exception of two or three presentations by Humfrye and Crispe, whose right was, I presume, limited to those turns, the advowson has attended the manor to the present time.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. It is valued at nine marks (£6.) per ann. in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[o], and of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[p], and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £21. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[q]. The parliamentary commissioners, in 1655, certified that Boughton was a parsonage presentative, worth £75. per ann. and that James Langley the incumbent received the profits and discharged the cure by John Ringrose, himself being a prisoner in the king's bench for debt[r]. The rectorial land consists of 185 a. 34 p. allotted under the inclosure act (1756), in lieu of glebe lands, and of all tithes whatsoever. The parsonage is small, but has been enlarged and improved by the present incumbent.

Rectors. Ralph, parson of "Buketon," occurs early in Hen. 3.[s]

The old Church, dedicated to St. John the baptist, is thus described by Bridges. 'It now lyes in ruins, no 'part of the roof remaining, and the walls in several places levelled with the ground. It consisted of a body, 'chancel, and north chancel, or chauntry-chapel. At the west end is a spire of eight sides, raised upon a plain 'coped tower: both these are still left standing. The length of the church and chancel is sixty-nine foot six 'inches; the breadth of the body is twenty-seven foot eight inches. The tower is in length twelve foot six inches, 'and nine foot in breadth. At the lower end of the church is a bracket and nich for the reception of a 'statue[z].' It remained in nearly the same state when Grose published a view of it in his Antiquities; but the tower and spire fell about the year 1785, and the whole is now reduced to a few tottering walls, and a picturesque fragment at the east end, the effect of which is heightened by St. John the baptist's spring in the foreground, whose copious stores supply the water for culinary purposes at the fair. In the Cardigan MS. C. is an account of two monuments for the Greens which were formerly in this church. The first was for the sir Thomas Green, who married Lucy Zouch, and had the arms of Green, Zouch, Drayton, and Mablethorp; the other had "a portraicture of a man in a short gowne y[t] should shew hym a lawyer, having also a s'geants coyfe. His "wife also lyes in portraicture by him." The arms upon this tomb were, at the head Green; on the south side, Green repeated and Zouch; on the north side, Green between Zouch impaling Green, and Reynes impaling Green; and at the feet, a fess between six cross patées[a]. This monument is erroneously assigned in the MS. to the Green who married Mablethorp; but the lord chief justice being the only one of the family who attained any legal eminence, and his daughters marrying Zouch and Reynes, it may with confidence be appropriated to him. The church-yard, which is situated at the north-east angle of the green, is still used as the parish burial ground.

The present Church, or Chapel, consisting of a western tower, body, and chancel, stands in the middle of the village, incorporated with houses, and open to the road. The earliest notice of this building is in the return of the chantry 38 Hen. 8 (1546), which remarks "yt is to be remembred that there ys one chapell situat within "the town of Boughton, wherein com̄only the seid ii (chantry) prestes do celebrate for the ease of the parishion-"ers, for the parishe churche is distaunt iii p̄s of a myle from y[e] towne or any house[b]." The old church however still continued to be statedly or occasionally used; the parish register recording a marriage there as late as 1708.

The tower, 11 ft. 10 in. long, by 8 ft. 4 in. wide, contains three bells, and was repaired in 1599. The body and chancel, 41 ft. 6 in. long, by 27 feet 7 in. wide, were rebuilt and enlarged in 1806, and consecrated by the bishop of Peterborough 6 Mar. 1808.

The only Monumental Inscription is on a small mural tablet of free-stone and marble at the east end of the north wall. Arms, Barry of six O. and Az. on a chief of the first, three pallets between two esquires of the second. Mortimer; impaling Ar. three greyhounds courant in pale S. Briscoe.

A Chantry, but when or by whom endowed is uncertain, was founded here for the maintenance of two priests. At the ecclesiastical survey 26 Hen. 8 (1535), Richard Taylor and William Russell were the officiating priests, and the annual value in rents and profits £10[b]. In the chantry roll of 38 Hen. 8 (1546), it was rated at £9. 18s.[b]; and on the dissolution of chantries 2 Edw. 6 (1548) at £9. 1s. 8d. in lands and tenements in Northamptonshire and Leicestershire, deducting therefrom 15s. 9d. for rents resolute; and £4. 2s. 11½d. each to the priests, Richard Barnes, aged 38, "meanly learnyd," and Philip Meke, aged 52, "unmete to serve a cure," and neither of whom had any other living. No preacher, schoolmaster, or poor people were relieved there, and the number of "howzeling people," or communicants, was 120[b].

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the village.

Benefactions. The Humfrey charity consists of 48 a. 2 r. 32 p. of land, and three tenements in Pitsford: the rental of which, amounting to £165. per ann. is entered with and included in the poor rates.

KINGSTHORP,

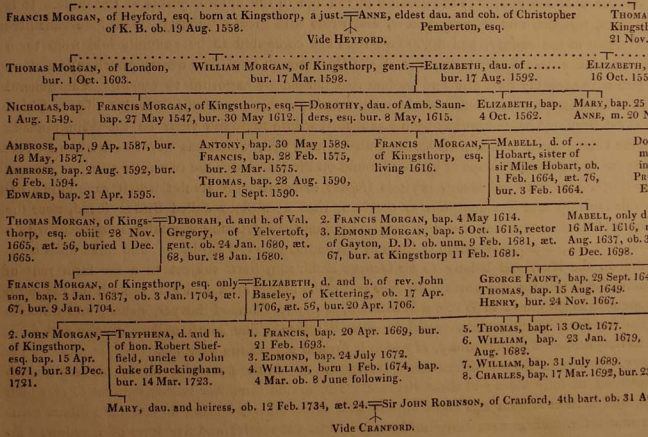
A parochial chapelry to St. Peter's, Northampton, but in modern acceptation, and to all practical purposes, a distinct parish, having officers of its own, and making rates within itself. In domesday it is written simply "Torp," and is obviously derived from the saxon Ðoppe, a town or village, with the adjunct denoting its royal owners.

The lordship contains about 1850 acres. The open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 6 Geo. 3 (1766), at which time there were no less than 50 freeholders. The principal proprietors are sir George Robinson, bart. who has about 450 acres; the rector, in right of his church, 276 acres; T. R. Thornton, of Brockhall, esq. about 180 acres; Mr. Charles Danes, about 140 acres; and the rev. William Gooday, of Terling in Essex, about 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Boughton; east by Moulton-park and Abington; south by Northampton; and west by the river Nen, which divides it from Dallington in Newbottle-grove hundred. The situation is high, declining to the south and west. The soil of the more elevated parts is a stiff marley loam, and of the other portions of the field a light porous red earth, well adapted to turnips and onions, the latter of which are produced in extraordinary quantity and quality.

The following scarce plants are found in this lordship. Verbena officinalis, Vervain. Colchicum autumnale, meadow Saffron. Cotyledon Umbilicus, Navel-wort. Chelidonium majus, common Celandine. Achillea Ptarmica, Sneeze-wort. Triglochin palustre, marsh Arrowhead. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder. Myosurus minimus, little Mouse-tail. Spiræa Filipendula, Drop-wort. Nymphæa lutea, yellow Water Lily. Cardamine amara, Bitter Cress. Anthyllis Vulneraria, Kidney Vetch. Ornithopus perpusillus, Bird's-foot. Astragalus glycyphyllos, wild Liquorice. Leontodon hispidum, rough Dandelion. Sagitaria sagitifolia, common Arrowhead. Salvia pratensis, meadow-sage or clary. Butomus umbulatus, Flowering Rush. Ophioglossum vulgatum, Adder's-tongue. A curious and rare insect called Gryllotalpa, the Mole Cricket, which, as its name imports, unites the peculiarities of form both of the cricket or grasshopper and the mole, has occasionally been found here, burrowing in the soft low grounds near the river. In the park-field near Moulton-park is an extensive quarry of lime-stone, formed of shelly fragments strongly cemented. Its fracture exhibits cockles, muscles, screw stones, thunderbolts, and not unfrequently the heart cockle, all of which appear to the greatest advantage in the natural joints of the stone. It is wrought into paving-stones, troughs, and chimney-pieces, and wears with great regularity. The lime-kilns here and at Duston are the largest in the county, and 30,000 quarters are computed to be annually sold from them for manure. Nearly adjoining the village, to the east of the Harborough road, is a quarry of white free-stone of a sandy texture, with a remarkably fine grit and tendency to harden by exposure to the air. The general infirmary and barracks at Northampton, and some of the neighbouring seats, were built from this quarry, which is of considerable local celebrity. A brick-kiln has been established within these few years on the Abington side of the parish. On the village green is a copious spring called King's well, which has never been known either to fail or to freeze. At the foot of the fine slope of garden ground on the Semilongs are two springs which possess the property of incrusting stones with calcareous crystals (tophus communis). A rivulet which runs along the hollow way between this lordship and Northampton to the Nen, rises at a place called Swavey-head, near the new road to Kettering, and at its source has a strong petrifying quality, incrusting vegetable substances with a hard, sonorous, calcareous earth; a property which it loses in the course of a few yards. The three mills mentioned in domesday are on the Nen, and belong to sir George Robinson, bart. subject to a fee farm rent of £12. 12s. 4d. per ann. viz. £2. 10s. for the north mill, £4. 4s. for the nether mill, and £5. 18s. 4d. for the south mill, reserved in the grant from the crown to William Whitmore, esq. and Edmond Sawyer, gent.[c], and which is now, together with the fee farm of the manor, vested in Miss Wrighte. The south mill is usually called St. Andrew's mill, from having belonged to that priory, of which it formed part of the demesne.

Manorial History. Terra Regis, or Ancient Demesne. At the domesday survey the king himself held "Torp." It consisted of four hides and three virgates. The arable land was twenty carucates, of which two were in demesne, and sixteen villeins and eight bordars had three others, leaving no less than fifteen carucates waste or unaccounted for. There were three mills, worth 43s. 4d. yearly, and five acres of meadow. To this manor also belonged one hide and a half and a bovate in Moulton and Weston Favell, having between them one carucate of arable. There were ten socmen, with three ploughs and three acres of meadow. The whole was valued then, as in the time of Edward the confessor, at £15. yearly[d]. The Terra Regis of domesday constituted what is termed ancient demesne, and whenever any doubt arises on a claim to this tenure, the appeal is still made to this record. Exemption from the general contribution to the wages of members of parliament for the county, was one of the various immunities formerly enjoyed by tenants in ancient demesne; and acquittance from toll throughout the kingdom, and non-liability to be empannelled on inquests or juries out of the manor, are the principal privileges which survive the fall of the feudal system. Those royal vills which were not of sufficient importance to become corporate boroughs, were either placed under a prepositus or bailiff, who accounted for the proceeds as they arose, or were rented by an individual for a term of years at a certain sum, and what was obtained by rigid exactions beyond the stipulated rent constituted his profit. To these established modes Kingsthorp formed one of the few exceptions; the inhabitants themselves being permitted to hold their town at farm by lease from the crown. It was probably first demised to them by king John, for in 8 Hen. 3 (1223), the sheriff was commanded to give the men of Kingsthorp full seisin of Spelho hundred, as parcel of that manor and held with it in the reign of king John[e]. In 20 Hen. 6 (1441), the king demised his manor of "Kingsthorp, alias

[c] Pat. 11 Jac. p. 25. n. 2. [d] Domesd. fo. 219. b. [e] Card. MSS. G. 3. p. 177.



Thorpe," to his tenants there, for 40 years, rendering £50. yearly[i], and in the 24th of the same reign £40. per ann. out of the said rent was granted to queen Margaret for life, in part of her assignment of dower[k]. A similar annuity was (int. al.) granted to Elizabeth, queen of Edward 4, in 1468[l]; and on the accession of Henry 7 the fee farm rent of this town was appropriated by parliament towards the maintenance of the royal household[l]. In 4 Hen. 7 (1488), the men of Kingsthorp paid a fine for confirmation of divers charters from former kings[k]; and in the following year the king confirmed the lease of his predecessor, lowering the rent from £60. to £50. per ann. on account of their great poverty[l]. This manor continued to be held by successive leases[m] till 14 Jac. 1 (1616), when it was granted in fee to Thomas Hollis, Francis Morgan, and co-feoffees, in trust for the other freeholders, at a yearly rent of £40.[n]; which rent was purchased by lord chief justice Rainsford in 1674 of the trustees for the sale of fee farm rents, and is now vested in Miss Wrighte*. The feoffees, when reduced in number, are filled up by the nomination of the survivors. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 14 a. 2 r. 14 p. to the feoffees which is called the town land, and is applied to the repairs of the highways and other parochial purposes. They had for their common seal 'a crowned head between two fleurs de lis with this inscription round it, SIGILLUM COMMUNE DE KINGSTHORP'[o]; but it is now lost, and the town-house, built for their meetings by lady Pritchard, is converted into the workhouse. A bailiff was formerly elected by the majority of the freeholders, but the appointment has been abolished many years. No manorial courts are held, and no traces remain of the feudal dependence of its ancient berewicks at Moulton, Weston Favell, &c.

Several families of local distinction settled in this village, and it is traditionally reported that three coaches and six were formerly kept here. The Morgans of this place were the parent stock of the Morgans of Heyford, and a Warwickshire visitation[p] states judge Morgan to have been born here. In the annexed pedigree a place is conjecturally assigned to him. The estate of this family, including the three water-mills and fishery in the Nen, is now inherited by sir George Robinson, of Cranford, bart.

MORGAN OF KINGSTHORP.

From Visitation of 1681, with additions from monuments and parish register of Kingsthorp.

Arms. Argent, on a bend engrailed Sable three cinquefoils of the field; on a chief Azure, a cross flory between two fleur de lis Or.

Sir Richard Lane, lord-keeper of the great seal in the reign of Charles 1, was a native of Courtenhall or Harpole, but fixed his residence here. He died an exile in the isle of Jersey 22 Apr. 1651, and is described of this place in the administration granted to lady Margaret his widow, who survived him till 1669, and was buried here.

Francis Bernard, a younger son of Francis Bernard, of Abington, esq. resided in this village. His eldest son, Robert, who was born here in 1600, rose to some eminence at the bar, and was created a baronet in 1662. The family subsequently settled at LONGTHORP near Peterborough, where a pedigree of them will be introduced.

The family of Cooke, which resided here in the 17th century, acquired the manor of HANINGTON, where their pedigree will be more appropriately placed. Their estates passed by marriage to James Fremeaux, esq. whose grand-daughter and heir is wife of T. R. Thornton, of Brockhall, esq.

CUSTOMS. THE QUINTAIN was a roman military exercise, and adopted from them in some parts of this kingdom, principally in the vicinity of roman roads and stations, and in later times at the celebration of rural weddings. It consisted of a high upright post, at the top of which was placed a cross piece on a swivel, broad at one end and pierced full of holes, and a bag of sand suspended at the other. The mode of running at the quintain was by an horseman riding full speed and striking at the broad part with all his force; if he missed his aim he was derided for his want of dexterity; if he struck it and the horse slackened pace, which frequently happened through the force of the shock, he received a violent blow on the neck from the bag of sand which swung round from the opposite end; but if he succeeded in breaking the board he was hailed the hero of the day. The last and indeed only instance of this sport which I have met with in this county was in 1722, on the marriage of two servants at Brington, when it was announced in the Northampton Mercury that a quintain was to be erected on the green at Kingsthorp, "and the reward of the horseman that splinters the board is to be a fine "garland as a crown of victory, which is to be borne before him to the wedding-house, and another to be put "round the neck of his steed; the victor is also to have the honor of dancing with the bride, and to sit on her "right hand at supper."

'Formerly an order was wont to be made by the bailiff in the court, for appointing a lord and lady of the 'May-games on Easter-day, after even-song, under the penalty of paying 6s. 8d. in case the office was refused. 'But this custom hath been long in disuse[q].'

The Mansion of the Morgans stood east of the church in a field which is still walled round. It was inhabited by sir John Robinson, bart. before he succeeded to the title, and was taken down by the late baronet about fifty years since. Sir Richard Lane's house was situated at the back of the Cock inn in Wilkinson's close, and was also pulled down by sir George Robinson about the same time. The residence of the Cookes was removed by Mr. Fremeaux, who erected within a short distance a handsome house of Kingsthorp free-stone, in which he resided till his death. It was occupied several years by the late lady Cave, and now by F. Dwarris, esq.

The Harborough and Welford roads to Leicester branch off about a mile and a half from Northampton, at the eastern point of this village, which stretches a considerable space to the west till it terminates in the green, where the handsome church, displayed to advantage by the gradual ascent of the church-yard; the cottages, the king's well, and the luxuriant elms, present an associated rural scene of no common beauty. In 2 Edw. 6 (1548), the "howzeling people," or communicants, here were 400[r]. In the time of Bridges it was 'a village of 140 families[s].' By the census of 1801 it contained 208 houses and 909 inhabitants, and by that of 1811, 226 houses and 1009 inhabitants. The statute for hiring servants for the hundred of Spelho, after being kept at this village many years, has been lately removed to Weston Favell. The annual quota of land-tax for the lordship is £155. 18s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4,828. The amount of the poor's-rates, for the year ending Easter 1820, was £1,520. at 15s. in the £. 'No wake hath been observed here within the memory of man; but there is a 'tradition, that it hath been omitted upon the occasion of a man being killed at it[t].'

The Advowson is attached to the rectory of St. Peter's, Northampton, of which it has been a member from the earliest recorded period. King Henry 3 directed the bishop of Lincoln to secure to that church the peaceable possession of the chapel of Thorpe, if there were any dispute respecting it, in the same manner as it had been given to the convent of St. Andrew, Northampton, by his grandfather Henry 2[u]: in pursuance of which mandate the bishop (Robert Grosthead, who presided from 1235 to 1254), after diligent enquiry if the church of Thorp were of itself a church possessed of the rites of baptism, or appertaining to any other, certified that it belonged to the church of St. Peter's, Northampton, as a member to the head, and a daughter to the mother; many, both of the clergy and of the laity giving evidence that the inhabitants of Thorp had baptized their children, and buried their dead at St. Peter's[x]. The patronage of this rectory belongs to the master, co-brothers and sisters of St. Catherine's hospital near the tower of London.

The Rector, prior to the act of inclosure was entitled to 39 a. of glebe land, parson's meadow, and some dispersed pieces of meadow, supposed to be a modus for tithe-hay of all the meadows; the sole right of cutting furze or bushes on Parson's hill, supposed to be a modus for the furze or bushes of Kingsthorp heath; and the great and small tithes of the open fields, and of the old inclosures, homesteads, &c.; in satisfaction of all which rights the commissioners allotted 276 a. 1 r. 5 p. of land, and a rate tithe of £1. 4s. 9d. per ann. The parsonage is at the north western extremity of the village, and has been rendered a very commodious residence by the present incumbent.

The Register of this parish commences in 1540.

The Communion Plate, which is remarkably handsome, was the gift of Mrs. Mary Reynolds, relict of the bishop of Norwich, in 1678, and comprises a flagon and salver, chalice, and two patens.

The Church, dedicated to St. John the baptist, consists of a western embattled tower, supporting a lofty spire, nave, north and south aisles and chapels, south porch and chancel. The tower contains five bells, and, with the spire, is of squared stone, and remarkably good masonry. Most of the windows in the south front have been altered: those in the south chapel seem to have been originally arched, but are now square-headed, with a low cornice over them of different stone and workmanship. The windows on the north side have ogee arches, and are probably of the period of Edw. 3. The interior is neatly paved and pewed, and in the gallery at the west end is a small organ. The tower is 14 ft. 6 in. long, by 12 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave and aisles are 50 ft. 8 in. long; the nave 18 ft. 11 in. the north aisle 17 ft. 2 in. and the south aisle 13 ft. wide; the chancel 42 ft. 5 in. long, by 15 ft. 5 in. wide; the north and south chapels 22 ft. 9 in. long, by 19 ft. wide. The nave is divided from each aisle by four arches; the three western ones are norman on circular pillars, with an indented archivolt moulding springing from the centre of the abacus, which is half the depth of the whole capital; all the capitals are shallow, some simply foliated, others voluted at the angles; the fourth, or eastern arch, on the north is also circular, but unusually low and narrow; and that on the south pointed on a clustered column. The chancel is separated from the nave by a pointed arch; from the north chapel by two arches, one circular and the other pointed;

and from the south chapel by two pointed ones. There is an ascent of four steps to the altar. On each side of the west end is a narrow arch which formed the approaches to the rood loft. Over the steps in the north wall is a small arch, and another, and a small piscina nearer the altar. There are also piscinas in both the chapels. A desk extends across the east end of the south chapel, to which are chained four folio volumes of black letter divinity.

Bacon's Chantry was founded by John Bacon in 11 Edw. 4 (1471), and endowed with all his lands in Kingsthorp, for a chaplain to sing for ever at our lady's altar in the "parish church there." At the survey on the dissolution of chantries 2 Edw. 6 (1548), it was valued at £6. 5s. per ann. from which was deducted in rents resolute 46s. 8d. The goods or ornaments were worth 3s. 4d. but there was no plate. The township claimed the lands and tenements as copyhold, and in support thereof produced to the king's commissioners two copies of surrenders in the court of Kingsthorp[y].

The Hospital of St. David's or the holy Trinity, stood on the east side of the entrance into the village from Northampton, where several small arches are still remaining in the cottage walls, and was founded in 1200 (2 Joh.) by the prior and convent of St. Andrew's, Northampton, who, on the petition of Peter, the son of Adam de Northampton, and Henry his son, gave a certain house near St. David's chapel, within the limits of their parish of Thorp, for the reception of travellers and poor persons, under the following conditions and regulations; that there should not for the future be any college of monks, canons, templars, hospitallers, or nuns in the place, or the said house be changed into a church; that divine service might be performed therein, but that there should be two altars only, one in the chapel of the holy Trinity, the other in the chapel of St. David, and one bell only should be allowed; that a burial ground should be provided for travellers, poor people, and others dwelling there, and that any of the parishioners might be buried there on proof of their having requested it of the chapter in their life-time, or expressed it in their will, but not otherwise; that in the body of the house adjoining the chapel of the holy Trinity there should be three rows of beds joined together in length, in which the poor and strangers and invalids may lie for the purpose of hearing mass and attending to the prayers more easily and conveniently; that there should be provided one procurator, chaplain, or clerk, or layman of good character, with the consent of the said prior and convent, or of the abbot of Sulby, and all irregularities to be corrected by them or the abbot, and any dispute arising between them as to the appointment of a procurator, to be settled by arbitration; the procurator to be elected by them and the abbot at the house in Thorp, and to take a prescribed oath; that there should be only two chaplains besides the procurator, who are to take the same oath; that there might be six novices to wait upon the poor, so that the whole number of officers in the house should not exceed nine; that the procurators and chaplains should have decent habits becoming their stations, and the novices should have habits all alike, viz. copes and hoods and cloaks of black without any mark or ornament; that it should not be united to any other house, nor to any private person, contrary to the said statutes; that the rents and profits should not be converted to any other uses, or diminished, but wholly applied to its benefit: and in augmentation thereof the said prior and convent grant all the land in Thorp which Helias held of their fee of the church of Thorp, viz. two virgates, a messuage and croft, and common of pasture, with consent of Henry son of Peter (rector of St. Peter's), who now holds of us the church of Thorp, free from tithe; but if the said house obtain any other land in Thorp, or any other parish where the said prior and convent are entitled to tithes, by gift, purchase, or otherwise, all tithes arising therefrom shall be paid to the church to which they are due, notwithstanding the aforesaid exemption[z]. The possessions of this hospital are thus surveyed in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8)[a].

MOULTON,

Occurs in Domesday as "Multone, Muletone, and Moltone," and may possibly be derived from the british mul, a stream, or mola, a mill, though it must be confessed they have no peculiar applicability to this village.

The lordship consists of about 2970 acres, exclusive of Moulton park. The open fields, containing 2712 acres, were inclosed by act of parliament 12 Geo. 3 (1772), at which time they were divided amongst 68 freeholders. The principal proprietors of Moulton are William Abbot, esq. who has, in right of the impropriate rectory, 396 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, 190 acres; Edw. Bouverie, of Delapré, esq. about 200 acres; Mr. Wm. Barber about 170 acres; the representatives of the late Osborne Standert, esq. the late Mr. John Garlick, and Mr. John Marsh, about 160 acres each; Mr. Clarke Hillyard, and Mrs. Eliz. Aspinal, widow, about 150 acres each; Mr. Geo. Watts about 140 acres; and Mr. Bartlet Miller, of Chapel Brampton, about 120 acres. It is bounded on the north by Brixworth in Orlingbury hundred and Holcot in Hamfordsho hundred, from which it is divided by a brook; on the east and south east by Overston; on the south by Weston Favell and Moulton park; and on the west by Boughton and Pitsford. The soil is principally a reddish loam on a sandy bottom, except the south side of the lordship, which is a strong clay. There is but little timber in the lordship. The following scarce plants are found here. Osmunda Regalis, Flowering Fern. Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Raphanus Raphanistrum, wild Radish. Carduus eriophorus, Friar's Crown. Picris echioides, prickly Ox-tongue. Pastinaca sativa, wild Parsnep. Rosa tomentosa, Downy leaved Rose. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Cichorium Intybus, wild Endive. There is a lime-kiln in this parish near the road to Holcot. Morton says, 'The Bustard, Otis seu Tarda Avis, a bird 'of the poultry kind, is so uncommon with us that I never heard of more than two of them here. One of which 'was shot by captain Saunders in Moulton field[e].' He mentions also a chalybeate spring at Moulton[f], but it is not now known. The meadow brook, which divides the fields of Moulton and Brixworth, must have formerly been a stream of some consequence; for in 4 Edw. 1 (1276), the jurors of Spelho hundred presented that Simon Fitz-Simon, of Brixworth, had appropriated to himself a free and several fishery in the water between those parishes which used to be common[g]. The mill, which is noticed in domesday, stands north-west of the village, on a small rivulet which rises in Overston parish, and runs into the Nen a few hundred yards above Boughton mill. In the fee-farm roll of 1650[h], it appears that this mill, parcel of the Warwick and Spencer lands, was granted 7 Jac. 1 (1609) to Edward Ferrers and Francis Phelips in fee, at a reserved rent of £1. 15s. 4d. per ann.[i]

MANORIAL HISTORY. JUDITH FEE OF HONOR OF HUNTINGDON*. GRIMBALD OF FITZ-JOHN MANOR. Ailric, the saxon proprietor of the principal estate here, was ejected from all his possessions by William the conqueror, who gave Cosgrave to the earl of Moreton[k], Braybrook to Robert de Neci[l], Hargrave to William Peverel[m], and "Multone" to the countess Judith, under whom it was held by Grimbald at the domesday survey, and valued as in the time of Edward the confessor at 40s. yearly. It consisted of three hides and one virgate; the arable land was six carucates and a half, one of which was in demesne, and twelve villeins with four bordars had the remaining five and a half[n].

Grimbald held East Farndon also under the countess, with other lordships in Rutlandshire and Leicestershire. His grandson, Robert Grimbald, married Maud, daughter and coheir of Pagan de Houghton†, and was justice of England in the reign of Henry 2. He founded an abbey of the Augustin order at Osulveston, or Ouston, in Leicestershire, to the dotation charter of which was appended a curious seal, in which he is represented seated in the judicial chair, with the sword of justice in one hand, and a rebated sword, indicative of mercy, in the other. The precise time of foundation has been controverted, but it may safely be placed between 1147 and 1167, as the grant was ratified by Robert (de Chesney) bishop of Lincoln, the diocesan, who died in the latter year[o]. His zeal for monastic establishments did not rest here; he not only confirmed the liberal benefactions of his ancestors to St. Andrew's priory, Northampton, but with the consent of his wife added the churches of Hardwick, Little Houghton, and Brayfield: it might naturally be concluded that these grants were prior to his foundation of, and that he would bequeath his remains to, his abbey of Osulveston, but neither was the fact; for Odo abbot of Osulveston was one of the witnesses to the grant of Hardwick[p], and Maud de Houghton, in her confirmation charter of Houghton church, expressly states it to have been the gift of her lord, Robert Grimbald, with his body, the day on which he was both alive and dead[q]: perhaps St. Andrew's was "the last long home" of his forefathers, and to mingle his ashes with theirs would be more grateful to his feelings than to be deposited in a strange sanctuary, even though it owed its existence to his own bounty.

In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Richard de la Pek (second husband of Maud de Houghton) is certified to hold four hides in "Multon" of the fee of king (earl) David[r]; and in the return of fees in the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), amongst the feudatories of the honor of Huntingdon, of the part of Henry Hastings, Robert Grimbald is returned to hold four fees in (Little) Houghton, Hardwick, Brayfield, "Multon," and Newton (by Geddington)[s]. The Grimbalds had previously aliened this manor, and the only interest they now retained here, was an intermediate seignory between the mesne lord and the honor of Huntingdon; any further account of them will therefore with more propriety be transferred to LITTLE HOUGHTON, the place of their residence.

William Mandeville, earl of Essex, ratified the possessions of the priory of St. Andrew in Moulton of the gift of the Grimbalds[t]; it is evident however that he could not have been the first grantee of the manor, as it passed 11 Hen. 3 (1226-7), on his decease s. p. to his half-brother

John Fitz-Geoffrey, whose half blood would have excluded him from the succession, and who must therefore have inherited as heir male of his father. This John Fitz Geoffrey was employed in several important negotiations, and in 30 Hen. 3 (1245-6), was appointed lord justice of Ireland with a salary of £500. per ann.[u] He is said to have died in the 40th of this reign[x], leaving a son, John, who is omitted by most modern genealogists, but whose existence is rendered past doubt by being particularly described as John Fitz-John-Fitz-Geoffrey in the summons to repair to Chester, with horse and arms, to repel the incursions of the Welsh 42 Hen. 3 (1257-8)[z]. He died the same year, and was succeeded by his son, John Fitz-John, then within age, but married, and who became one of the leading confederated barons against king Hen, 3[a]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1276), the jurors of Spelho hundred presented, that eight virgates in "Muleton," which John Fitz-John held, used to pay geld or tax, and do suit to the hundred court, but that the service had been withheld for 20 years past, and he now claimed view of frankpledge or court-leet of all his tenants in his court of "Multon," but they knew not by what authority[b]. His brother and heir, Richard Fitz-John, in the register of knights in this county, 25 Edw. 1 (1297), is styled of "Molton[c]," from which circumstance, connected with a capital messuage, garden, and vineyard, valued at 20s. yearly—more than double the contemporary average rate of a mansion—400 acres of demesne, and two watermills, with a fishery[d], this place may fairly be presumed to have been one of his principal residences. He died, whilst engaged in the expedition against France, seized of the manors of Moulton, Potters Pery, and three parts of a fee in Yardley (Gobion), with manors and fees in the counties of Bucks, Devon, Essex, Glocester, Hants, Lancaster, Norfolk, Stafford, Suffolk, Surrey, Sussex, Wilts, Worcester, and York[d], and on the final partition of his estates, which superseded the one mentioned by Bridges[e], this manor, valued at £43. 6s. 11d. yearly, and £10. 15s. 9d. yearly in lands and rents out of Potter's Pery manor, were assigned (int. al.) to

Robert de Clifford, baron Clifford, and Idonea, widow of Roger de Leybourn, confounded by Dugdale with the baron Leybournes of Kent[f], wife of John de Crombwell, or Cromwell, the two coheirs of Isabel de Vipont his second sister[g]. Clifford appears to have exchanged his moiety of this manor for other lands, for John de Crombwell in 6 Edw. 2 (1312) was found to hold one fee in Moulton of John de Hastings, sen.[h] and in 9 Edw. 2 was lord of Moulton[i]. In 19 Edw. 2 (1325) a jury awarded him £300. damages against Robert de Wombwell and Robert Tres, who had, in company with others, intruded into his manors of "Multon" and Yardley (Gobion), expelling him by force of arms, and devastating his goods and moveables[k]. In the following year, having incurred a forfeiture of his estates by contumaciously remaining abroad with the queen, who was exciting the French court against her husband, the manor of "Multon," and lands in Potter's Pery and Yardley, were (int. al.) consigned to Roger de Bilney during pleasure[l]; but on the accession of Edw. 3 he obtained restitution of all his possessions[m]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329) a writ of quo warranto was brought against John de Cromwell and Idonea his wife, to shew by what right they exercised the following privileges in their manor of Moulton; view of frankpledge, wayf, strays, infangtheof, outfangtheof, and acquittance from toll, pontage, passage, and stallage, and from suit to county and hundred courts and sheriff's aid. They claimed the acquittances as members of the honor of Huntingdon, and pleaded prescription for the other liberties; but it appearing that they punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 40d. instead of pillory and tumbril, and that they had no gallows attached to their privilege of infangtheof, but whenever a thief was apprehended with stolen goods in his possession, and convicted in their court, he was taken to Northampton gallows to be executed, the view of frankpledge and infangtheof were seized into the king's hands, but restored to them for a fine of half a mark[n]. The plea recites also a conveyance of this manor from the said John and Idonea to Hugh De Spencer junior, sometimes called earl of Glocester, the late king's favorite minion, who re-conveyed it to them for their lives, remainder to himself for life, remainder to his second son, Edward De Spencer, to whom it accordingly devolved[o] on the death of Crombwell, about 9 Edw. 3 (1335), his father having been beheaded at Hereford in 20 Edw. 2 (1326).

EARL OF CUMBERLAND, ext. 1643. SOUTHWELL BARON DE CLIFFORD.

Edward De Spencer, baron Despencer,* alienated this manor almost immediately upon coming into possession; for in 13 Edw. 3 (1339) sir William Herle and another, probably feoffees in trust, levied a fine of it to Ralph Basset, baron Basset of Drayton in Staffordshire†, and Joan de Beauchamp, daughter of Thomas earl of Warwick, his wife, for their lives, remainder to Ralph Basset their grandson, in tail general, with divers remainders over, and ultimate remainder to Thomas Beauchamp, son of Thomas earl of Warwick, in tail male[p]. Ralph Basset, the grandson, in 34 or 35 Edw. 3 (1360-1), had a grant of free warren in "Multon[q]," and dying s. p. in 14 Ric. 2 (1390)[r], and the other previous interests being determined, this manor passed to the last in remainder,

Thomas Beauchamp, then earl of Warwick‡. From him it lineally descended to Anne countess of Warwick, widow of "the king maker," who by an apparently voluntary but compulsory settlement in 3 Hen. 7 (1487-8), conveyed all her vast possessions to appointments of bailiffs or stewards and lessees occur. Edw. 6 settled it (int. al.) on the princess Elizabeth for life[t], on whose succession to the throne it again merged in the crown, where it remained till 4 Car. 1 (1628), when the manor of Moulton with its members, parcel of Warwick and Spencer lands, and the scite of the manor, valued at £8. 10s. per ann. and a close of land called Thorplands, within the said manor, valued at £11. per ann. and all other lands, &c. except the mill and the park, were granted to Edward Ditchfield, John Heighlord, Humphrey Clarke, and Francis Mosse, in fee, at a reserved rent of £52. 17s. 8d. per ann.[u] which fee-farm rent, and that of the mill, were (int. al.) purchased of the crown by lord chief justice Rainsford in 1674, and are now vested in Miss Wrighte*.

The King in tail male, with remainder to herself in fee[s]. During the period it remained in the crown, numerous

The names of the above grantees are of frequent recurrence about this period, but they were merely nominated in trust for the city or corporation of London, to whom the grants were made for monies advanced to the king; and by whom this manor and estate were probably soon after sold off in lots adapted to the convenience of the purchasers. No manorial privileges have been exercised of late years beyond a game deputation, which has been occasionally appointed by the families of Marsh and Rogers (now Standert).

Buci Fee. Barony of Basset of Weldon†. Engaine Manor. Thori, a saxon, had a small estate in "Molton" worth 20s. yearly, which, at the domesday survey, was held by William under Robert de Buci. It consisted of two hides and a virgate and a half. The arable land was five carucates; three being in demesne, with a servant, and the other two occupied by seven villeins and four bordars. There was a mill of 8d. yearly. The value of the whole had been raised since the time of Edward the confessor to 50s. yearly[x].

William was the ancestor of the baronial family of Engaine‡, and this estate was subsequently held of, or subordinate to, their capital manor of Blatherwick, by the service of half a fee[y]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, there was certified to be two hides and four small virgates in "Multon" of the fee of Richard Engaine[z]; and in the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Vitalis Engaine accounts for one fee in Blatherwick, Moulton, &c. of the barony of Ralph Basset of Weldon[a].

By an early subinfeudation, it came into possession of the Fitz-Johns, and was henceforward incorporated with the Grimbald manor, although the two tenures continued to be distinguished in all the inquisitions[b].

Ancient Demesne. Honor of Castle Barnard§. Appendant to the domesday survey of the royal vill of Kingsthorp is added; to this manor belong one hide and a half and a bovate in "Multone," and one hide in Weston (Favell), having jointly five carucates of arable land, on which ten socmen had three ploughs; and also three acres of meadow[c]. This land was granted out either by or previous to Hen. 2; for in the hydarium of that reign (the late) Guy Baliol was found to hold one hide and a small virgate in "Multon" of the fee of Faxton[d], the paramount manor in this county, of the honor of Castle Barnard in Durham; and being parcel of that manor, it attended the same succession of ownership down to the viscount Welles, who was amongst the Lancastrians slain on Towton field in 1461.

Thorp Lands, an ancient inclosure of 200 acres, from the circumstance of the name implying its primitive connection, and its situation bordering on Weston, the other berewic, may with little hesitation be identified with this estate. It was obtained by the Wilmers of Sywell prior to 1644, and passed from them through various mesne conveyances to Mr. William Drage, now of Stanwick, of whom it was purchased in 1816 by Mr. Clarke Hillyard, who has since sold 50 acres to Edward Bouverie, of Delapré, esq.

St. Andrew's Priory Lands. This priory was founded by Simon St. Liz earl of Northampton, 18 Will. conq. (1084-5), and his dotation charter recites the gift of the church and tithes of "Multon" by Grimbald, who was one of the witnesses[d]. Robert Grimbald confirmed his father's grant of the church and seven virgates of land in "Multon[f]," which were further confirmed by his successors, and subsequently by William Mandeville, earl of Essex[g]. In the taxation of P. Nicholas 1291 (20 Edw. 1), the temporal possessions of the priory here were rated at £2. 1s. 4d. per ann. in rents, and 4s. in land[h]; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £2. 14s. 6d. per ann. demised to Thomas Chipsey for a term of years[i].

Fineshade Priory had lands in Multon, valued at £2. 2s. per ann. in the taxation of P. Nicholas[h]; and at £1. per ann. in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535[i]. In 36 Hen. 8 (1545) these lands and tenements were granted to John Bellew and Edward Bailes in fee, at 2s. rent per ann.[k]

Ouston Abbey had rents in Multon, valued at 5s. per ann. in P. Nicholas[h].

St. Frideswide's Priory in Oxford had five virgates of land in "Multon," granted and confirmed by king John[l], which were rated at 12s. rent per ann. in P. Nicholas[h].

St. Alban's Abbey had 3s. rent per ann. in "Multon" in P. Nicholas[h].

About half a mile north-west of the church, contiguous to the fox cover, is Castle Hill, probably the scite of the baronial residence of the Fitz-Johns. Foundations of buildings have been dug up, and some vestiges of a moat are visible. In the same direction, but much nearer the church, stood the old manor house, where traces of ponds are still remaining. Bridges says 'the new house, now called the Hall, lies north of the church.' It belonged to the family of Saunderson, but is now reduced to a plain farm-house.

The Village is a short distance west from the Kettering road, and extends above half a mile in length. In the time of Bridges it consisted 'of about 130 families;' by the census of 1801 it contained (including Moulton park) 196 houses and 843 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, the same number of houses and 928 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £165. 7s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4472. The Advowson. The grant of this church to St. Andrew's priory by the Grimbalds, was confirmed by Richard archbishop of Canterbury[m] and Hugh bishop of Lincoln[n]. After the dissolution, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted (int. al.) in 6 Edw. 6 (1552), to John Whiting and Thomas Freeman and their heirs[o]. In 2 Eliz. (1559), William Lane, esq.* died seized of them, and was succeeded by his brother and heir John Lane, esq.[p] of whom they were purchased by John Freeman, of Great Billing, esq.† from whom they lineally descended through the Haslewoods‡ to the the viscounts Hatton§, and from that noble family, by settlement, to George Finch Hatton, esq.§ one of their collateral representatives, who sold the impropriate rectory in 1818 to William Abbot, esq. but retains the advowson of the vicarage.

Rectory. In the taxation of pope Nicholas, 1291 (20 Edw. 1), the church or rectory of "Multon" was valued at £8. per ann. exclusive of a yearly pension of 13s. 4d. out of the vicarage, and deducting 13s. 4d. yearly, the portion of the rector of Blatherwick[q]; at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the rectory was on lease to Edward Watson and his assigns at £16. per ann.[r]; and in the minister's accounts on the dissolution of St. Andrew's priory, it was valued at £10. per ann.[s] The impropriate rectory now consists of 396 a. 17 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the great tithes of the open fields and old inclosures, except Thorplands and the rector of Blatherwick's portion; and of one yardland, probably the ancient rectorial glebe. The house on this estate is called Moulton Grange, and is now the residence of the proprietor, William Abbot, esq. In Michaelmas term 25 Geo. 3 (1784), an action was tried in the exchequer, Hatton v. Pell, by which the impropriators recovered the great tithes in kind of Thorplands[t], but they have been since exonerated by Mr. Hillyard.

Rector of Blatherwick's Portion. It may be doubted whether the Engaine manor was included in the original formation of the parish; if it were, the lord availed himself of the tripartite division of tithes, before the restraints of voluntary appropriation, and settled one third only on the parish priest, transferring the other two parts to the rectory of Blatherwick, the head of his barony; which rectory had portions also out of the churches of Pightesley in this county, and Gedding in Huntingdonshire, two other manors belonging to the family. In the taxation of pope Nicholas the portion of the rectory of Blatherwick in "Multon" church was rated at 13s. 4d. per ann.[q] The rector of Blatherwick now enjoys 32 a. 2 r. 3 p. allotted under the inclosure act, in lieu of two-thirds of the great tithes of 9¼ yardlands, called Wonglands or Blatherwick lands, and of two parcels of land called Keyberry and Flitlands.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of West Haddon. The prior and convent of St. Andrew obtained an appropriation of this church during the episcopacy of Hugh Wells, bishop of Lincoln from 1209 to 1235, when a vicarage was endowed with all belonging to the church, except the great tithes[v]. The vicarage is not valued in the taxation of pope Nicholas; but a yearly pension of 13s. 4d. out of it, to St. Andrew's priory, is mentioned, and was probably the price paid by the vicar for the endowment, which is unusually liberal, and which pension since the dissolution has been paid to the crown. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) it is rated at £15. per ann. deducting the above pension, and 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[r]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that the vicarage was worth £50. per ann. and that Richard Hooke, the incumbent, was presented by the lords commissioners of the great seal, and discharged the cure[u]. The commissioners of inclosure awarded 188 a. 2 r. 23 p. and a rate tithe of £3. 8s. 1d. per ann. in lieu of the ancient glebe, and the small tithes of the open fields, homesteads, and old inclosures, except Thorplands, for which a modus of 13s. 4d. per ann. continues to be paid; the vicar receives also an augmentation of £30. per ann. under the will of sir Edward Nicolls, of Faxton, bart. The vicarage-house stands near the centre of the village.

Vicars. Budes occurs in the endowment of the vicarage between 1209 and 1234.

In 1757 he resigned the vicarage of Ketton for the rectory of Bitteswell in Leicestershire, which he continued to hold with this living, and was buried here 9 June 1762[a]. His successor,

William Thompson, LL.B. resigned the rectory of Harleston for this vicarage, to which he was inst. 26 Oct. 1762, on the presentation of Charles Henry viscount Hatton, and died 12 Apr. 1768. He was succeeded by William Stanton, of Lincoln coll. Ox. A. M. son of the former vicar of the same name, who was inst. 2 Sept. 1768, on the presentation of Mary Bridget Mostyn, spinster, and is the oldest incumbent in the county.

The register of this parish commences in 1565, but there is an hiatus of several years about the middle of the 17th century.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, stands about the centre of the northern extremity of the village, and consists of a west tower embattled, nave and side aisles with chapels, south porch and chancel. The upper stage of the tower is of subsequent erection and of superior stone and masonry to any other part of the building. The five bells described by Bridges[b] have been since exchanged for six new ones. One only of the windows in the south aisle remains with a single unornamented mullion; the horizontal return of its dripstone being continued as a tablet along the wall, and the depressed arches of the three other windows, springing considerably above it, prove them to be of much later insertion, probably of the time of Hen. 7. The north front is built of rubble stone; most of the windows are of two mullions, with three large quatrefoils in the head; the east chancel window is divided into four lights, doubled in the head with rectilinear tracery and transoms. The interior retains the open roof, but was paved with stone and pewed, and a west gallery erected in 1816, at which time a curious old font was destroyed. The tower is 14 ft. 10 in. long, by 12 ft. 3 in. wide; the nave and aisles are 50 ft. 3 in. long; the nave 20 ft. 5 in., north aisle 17 ft. 5 in., south aisle 18 ft. 8 in. wide; the chancel and chapels 28 ft. long; the chancel 15 ft. 11 in., north chapel 19 ft. 5 in., and south chapel 21 ft. wide. The nave is lighted by ten clerestory windows: it is divided from the north aisle by four low circular or norman arches, resting on pillars of a peculiar construction. Ranging from west to east, the first is composed of a shallow square plinth, on which is raised a massy shaft of little more than two diameters; the lower half is circular and constitutes the base of the upper, which is formed by a central square pier, on each face of which is a demi-circular column, having a plain capital and astragal, and the whole connected by a general abacus; the second pillar is similar to the last, except the lower division being multangular; and the whole of the third pillar assimilates with the upper division of the others, and has a base corresponding with the abacus, the ground plan of which forms four squares, or a cross. The south aisle is divided from the nave by four pointed arches, and the east end, or chapel, from the chancel by two pointed arches on octagonal pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. The chancel is separated from the nave by an open arch on demi-columns. There is a trefoil-headed piscina in the south side. The north chapel communicates with the chancel through a lofty pointed arch on corbels. The east end is appropriated for a vestry and sunday school. On each side the window is a rude head, and in the south wall a plain piscina, The upper end of the south chapel is occupied by rising seats for the Sunday school. There is a large piscina in the south wall.

A PARTICULAR OR CALVINISTIC BAPTIST congregation has been established here several years. Mr. George Evans, who died in 1757, and for whom there is a monument in St. Peter's church, Northampton, officiated here till his death. The present meeting-house, about 40 feet square, was erected under the ministry of the celebrated Dr. William Carey, professor of the Sanscrit and Bengalee languages in the college of Fort William in India. A brief memoir of him will be introduced at his native village of PAULERS PERY, but it ought not to pass unnoticed that it was here he projected the Baptist Missionary Society, and in promotion of that object published "An enquiry into the obligations of Christians to use means for the conversion of the Heathen."

THE WESLEYAN METHODISTS have a small chapel here.

BENEFACTIONS. The different charitable bequests in land were consolidated at the inclosure, when the commissioners allotted 38 a. 3 r. 33 p. in trust, which is now let for £100. per ann. and after distribution of the specific benefactions of the donors, the surplus is applied to the general benefit of the parish.

MOULTON PARK,

An extra-parochial estate of about 450 acres, belonging to Mrs. Keating, of Bath, is walled round, and bounded on the north by Boughton; east by Moulton; south-east by a small part of Weston Favell; south by Abington; and west by Kingsthorp. The soil is a tenacious marle, and both from its elevation and texture may be denominated cold land.

This Park is, in early records, indifferently called Moulton park and Northampton park; and indeed either designation was equally correct, it being locally connected with the former, and a feudal appendage to the castle of the latter. That it originated in some portion of Moulton lordship is certain; and the whole has been already appropriated in its manorial history, except the two following insignificant tenures under the countess Judith. Biscop had half a hide in "Muletone." The arable land was one carucate in his own occupation, with two villeins and two bordars, and valued at 10s. yearly[c]. Hugh had one virgate. There was one socman, who had half a carucate, and paid 33d. yearly[c]. There is direct evidence of the existence of this park as early as Hen. 2, and it may be presumed with confidence, that the above petty estates having escheated to the lord of the fee, he converted them into a park, which he attached to his castle of Northampton. In 7 Hen. 3 (1222), the castle of Northampton being then in possession of the crown, a precept was directed to the sheriff of the county, to cause Northampton castle to be inclosed by those who were, or ought to be contributory to it[d]. In 12 Hen. 3 (1227), the sheriff was directed not to distrain on the demesnes of the abbot of Peterborough towards the inclosure of the king's park of Northampton, otherwise than had been customary in the reigns of Hen. 2, Richard, and John[e]: in 13 Hen. 3 (1228), a mandate was issued to the sheriff to turn out all the beasts in the park of Northampton, except those belonging to the king, and to keep the pasture and herbage to fatten the king's oxen and beasts for the royal larder in winter[f]; in 19 Hen. 3 (1234), a precept was directed to John de Nevill, the chief forester, to take 20 bucks and 60 does out of the forests of Rockingham, Sulehay, and Clive, or elsewhere within his bailiwick, if more convenient, to stock the king's park at Northampton[g]; and in 35 Hen. 3 (1250), another writ was issued to the sheriff to inclose or fence this park, and when done to certify the cost[h]. Several presentments relating to this mural service occur in the hundred rolls of Edw. 1. The jurors presented that the tenants of Roger de Furneus in Raundes, of Henry Scottice in Cotes, of Oliver Bydun and Simon de Cotes in Middle Cotes, of Richard Trayley and Robert Punteney in Ringstede, and of Ralph de Normanville, ought to sustain part of the inclosure of "Moleton" park, which they have neglected to do for sixteen years past, at the instigation of the earl of Glocester's bailiff[i]. They presented also that Roger de Seyton, during his sheriffalty, had amerced the vill of Chacomb 22s. for making default of inclosing "Moulton" park, though that vill was not chargeable with the service[k]; and it is observable, that on the death of Nicholas de Segrave, lord of Chacumb, this non-liability is introduced into the inquisition[l]. In 2 Edw. 3 (1328), the sheriff was required to ascertain by jury what proportion of the park wall of Northampton ought to be repaired by the crown, and to repair it accordingly out of the issues of his bailiwick[m]; and on a plea of the crown in the following year, the jurors found that the men of certain villages, Guilsborough, Orlingbury, Warden, Norton, Corby, &c. were bound to repair a great part of the wall of the king's park of Moulton, and that each village had an allotted portion[n]. 'In the 'third year of Edw. 3°, John Dandelyn, the sheriff of the county, and certain of his predecessors, were fined for 'neglecting to oblige the several towns to repair the park wall according to the respective portions which of right 'appertained to them. At the same time an order was issued out of the court of king's bench, requiring the 'sheriff, that, for the future, in case the said walls should stand in need of repairing, he should not proceed by 'amerciament, but should immediately distrain the township to which the right of repairing the defective part 'should belong.' By inquisition on the death of Almaric de Butler in 10 Ric. 2 (1386), he was found to hold a moiety of Grimsbury manor in capite by service (int. al.) of 5s. rent, called castle guard, to the castle of Northampton, and the repair of 8 ft. of the wall of Moulton park[p]. I have in my possession an indenture bearing date 25 Sept. 17 Ric. 2 (1393), between sir John Malorie sheriff of Northamptonshire, and sir Nicholas Lillyng keeper of the king's park of "Multon," in which the sheriff renders an account of expences incurred under the authority of king's writ of privy seal, in repairing the wall of the said park, between 20 Feb. and St. Michael the preceding year, viz. for the hire of two carts for 36 days to carry stones, at 10d. a day, 30s.; for the wages of two carters for 34 days to load and unload the said carts, at 1½d. a day each, 8s. 6d.; for the wages of four masons for 45 days, at 3d. a day each, 45s.; and for the wages of three labourers for 44 days, to work with and assist the said masons, at 1½d. a day each, 16s. 6d. The personal delivery of this account into the exchequer, attested on oath by sir Nicholas Lillyng, is endorsed 24 Oct. 17 Ric. 2. An interesting relic of feudalism still remains in the names of the villages of Clipston, Crick, Deene, Draughton, Trafford in Byfield, &c. which are cut in the inside of the wall to point out their respective quotas of murage. When it was disparked is uncertain, but evidently not till after 23 Hen. 8 (1531), in which year sir John Mordaunt, surveyor-general of the woods and forests, was required by royal mandate to write to "the officers of our forest of Sawcey and of our park of "Moulton," commanding them to deliver to John Hartwell, esq. and Richard Wale, gent. "such and as "many oaks, convenable for Posts and Rayles, with the Lops, Tops, and Bark of the same," as shall be "sufficient for enlarging the park at Hartwell, and making a new lodge there[q]." The earliest recorded account of a keeper is in 35 Hen. 3 (1250), when the king committed his park of Northampton to Robert Bassett, sheriff of the county, and empowered him to receive the custody from Robert de Mares[r]. The noble families of Zouch[s], Roos[t], and Hastings[u], did not disdain to accept of this office, which was generally granted during pleasure or for life, but Christopher Hatton, esq. afterwards lord chancellor, in 19 Eliz. (1576), obtained a grant in fee of the custody of the park and warren of Moulton, with the herbage and pannage[x]. The freehold remained vested in the crown till 10 Car. 1 (1634), when Moulton park, and the warren of Moulton, and Moulton park in the fields of Moulton, Pitsford, Boughton, Kingsthorp, and Northampton, or either of them, were granted to Richard Lane and Christopher Hatton in fee farm for ever, to hold in capite by service of one knight's fee, and a reserved rent of £5. per ann.[y]

Bridges says, 'It is at present in the hands of Mr. Thursby, who lately purchased it of Lisle Hacket, esq. of 'Moxhull in Warwickshire[z].' From this family it passed by sale to the late lord Lilford, then Thomas Powys, esq. of whom it was purchased about 1785 by col. Thomas Keating, who raised a regiment in Northampton during the American war, and whose widow is the present possessor. The annual quota of land-tax for this estate is £30. 13s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The mansion is now reduced to a farm house.

OVERSTON,

In early records Oveston, probably derives its name from its over or upper situation relatively to Sywell in Hamfordsho hundred, from which parish it originated, and which forms its boundary for nearly a mile and a half on the east, till a small part of Ecton in the same hundred comes in contact towards the south-east; on the south it is bounded by Great Billing; on the west and north-west by Moulton; and on the north by Holcot in Hamfordsho hundred. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 1 Geo. 2 (1727), and contains nearly 1800 acres, of which about 1670 acres belong to John Kipling, esq. lord of the manor, and the remaining 130 acres to the rector in right of his church. The situation is elevated. Morton gives the names of 45 churches which might be seen on a clear day without the assistance of a glass from "a hill betwixt Great Billing and Overston[a]," but, from the altered face of the country by subsequent inclosures and plantations, many of them are not now visible. There was formerly a tree on the spot called Golden Ash, with steps up it, which, being decayed, was destroyed a few years since by the wind. There is a great variety of soil; part of it consists of a rich red loam, particularly favorable to turnips. The ash grown in this lordship is reckoned amongst the best in the county. The following scarce plants have been found here. Verbena officinalis, Vervain. Leontodon hispidum, rough Dandelion. Erica vulgaris, Heath (hoary variety). Vinca minor, small Periwinkle. Tanacetum vulgare, common Tansy. Astragalus glycyphyllos, wild Liquorice. Serapias latifolia, common Helleborine. Digitalis purpurea, Foxglove. Polypodium Thelypteris, marsh Polypody. Polypodium Filix fœmina, female Polypody or Fern. Carduus pratensis, meadow Thistle. Carduus eriophorus, Friar's Crown. Sanguisorba officinalis, Blood-wort Burnet. Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Betonica officinalis, Wood Betony. There are several quarries in the lordship; one in the north field, from which the present mansion house was built. An ancient water-mill, which stood in a close west of the mansion-house, now taken into the park, was destroyed when the lake, recently made, was formed. The rarest, perhaps, of british birds, Upupa Epops, or Hoopoe, was shot in this lordship a few years since, and is preserved by Mr. Kipling.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE.* BARONY OF ABRINCIS.† Domesday is silent respecting Overston; but that it was included in the survey of Sywell, although situated in a different hundred, may be safely inferred from concurrent circumstances in their early tenure. Sywell formed one of the demesne manors of the earl of Moreton, and on the confiscation of that earldom by Hen. 1, was obtained by Nigell Mundeville, lord of Folkstone in Kent, whose daughter and heir married Rualo Avrenches or Abrincis[b]. That portion of the vill, however, in which Overston originated, was reserved by the crown, and granted at a subsequent period to the same family; being included in the knight's fee which Humphrey de Millers is certified to hold of William Abrincis in the Liber Niger 14 Hen. 2 (1167), where it is expressly stated to be of the new feoffment made after the death of Hen. 1.[c] In the register of hides taken in the same reign, Gilbert (qu. Humphrey?) de Milers accounted for four hides in "Oveston[d]," the first time the name is specifically recorded.

MANOR. Humphrey de Millers received the manor and advowson of "Oveston" in frank marriage with Felicia, sister of William de Abrincis, and left two sons, William, and Ralph, rector of Overston; which William also had two sons, William, and Humphrey, rector of Overston; and a daughter, Felicia, who, on the death of her brothers s. p. became their heir[e]; and in 26 Hen. 3 (1241), the sheriffs of Sussex and Northamptonshire were directed to give her full seisin of the lands of the late Mast. Humphrey de Millers in Preston in Sussex, and in "Oveston," on paying, or giving security for 100 marks[f]. In the Testa de Nevill about the same time, she is returned to hold two parts of a small fee of Hamon de "Creuquer," or Crevequer, of the inheritance of William de "Averences[g]," which is afterwards denominated two parts of a fee of Moreton[h]. She was succeeded by her son Gilbert, who was a clerk, and is sometimes called Gilbert, sometimes "Gilbert de Wyarvill," and sometimes "Gilbert de Millers[i]." In 42 Hen. 3 (1257), he procured a licence of hunting in the counties of Northampton, Nottingham, and Derby[k]; but in 55 Hen. 3 (1270), the king arraigned an assize against him[l], and 'in the fifth 'year of Edw. I. (1276)[l], the manor of Oveston, which had belonged to Gilbert de Millers, was in the hands of the 'crown.' In 10 Edw. 1 (1281), it was committed (int. al.) to Richard de Holbrook for three years[m]. This grant was however revoked the same year in favor of Christiana de Mariscis, to hold at the will of the king, and accounting to him for the profits[n]. In 'the twenty-'fourth of the same reign (she) was found to hold it of the king, in exchange for other lands,' probably in Ireland, where she had considerable possessions. 'In the seventh of Edw. II. (1313)[p], it was granted to Stephen le 'Chaundeler, and Margaret his wife, prince Edward's nurse, to hold so long as the king should please;' a short-lived tenure, for within two years it was transferred, and on the same conditions, to Martin de Ispanam[q]; nor was he more fortunate, for the next year it was re-granted to Christiana de Mariscis[r], 'who, in the thirteenth 'year of Edw. II.[s] was certified to hold the manor of Oveston at the annual rent of fifty pounds.' John Mautravers, junior (of Lychet Maltravers in Somersetshire), procured a grant of this manor (int. al.) for life from Edw. 3[t], but forfeited it soon after; whereupon the sheriff was commanded to appraise the goods and chattels in "Oveston," lately belonging to John Mautravers, a rebel, and deliver them into the custody of Richard Grey of Codnor[u] (in Derbyshire) *, to whom the manor was assigned for seven years at the annual rent of £35. 12s. 11¼d.[x] He died before the expiration of the term, and this manor was committed to Thomas Wake, of Deeping in Lincolnshire †, for one year, at the advanced rent of £40.[y] It seems doubtful, however, whether this grant was more than intentional, as the manor was given the same year to

Sir Walter Manny in fee, to hold by the accustomed services[z]; and confirmed to him by a second grant, stating its annual value at 100 marks, and including various manors in Wales, reserving for the whole the nominal service of a rose annually, in full satisfaction of £100.[a] Sir Walter was born at Hainault in the diocese of Cambray, and accompanying queen Philippa into England, was appointed her carver; but forsaking the court for the camp, he became one of the most renowned warriors of the age. The monastery of the Carthusian order in London, now well known as the Charter-house, was of his foundation; and dying on the Thursday before St. Wolstan, 1372, he was, pursuant to his will, interred there, in the middle of the choir, with great pomp, the king and the princes, attended by a numerous retinue of prelates and barons, honouring the solemnity with their presence. His only son, Thomas Manny, having been unfortunately drowned in a well at Deptford in Kent, his barony and estates in the several counties of Bedford, Buckingham, Cambridge, Derby, Essex, Glocester, Hertford, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester, Norfolk, Northampton, Salop, Suffolk, Warwick, Worcester, York, and marches of Wales, exclusive of those which he held in right of his wife, became vested in

Anne, his daughter and heir, wife of John Hastings earl of Pembroke[b]. Of this family an account will be given under YARDLEY HASTINGS; it is therefore merely necessary to observe here, that John, the last earl, son of the said countess, being accidentally killed at a tournament, and leaving no issue[c], this manor reverted to the crown; being, I presume, limited to the heirs of Walter Manny, as Yardley and his other ancient patrimonial estates passed to Reginald lord Grey de Ruthyn.

by charter[b]. The circumstances attendant on these marquisates were peculiar, and have been so confusedly and erroneously stated in the different peerages, as to deserve a minute elucidation. This order of nobility was instituted in 1385 (9 Ric. 2), but expiring in 1395 with the first who enjoyed the dignity, was not resumed till the above double creation in the person of the earl of Somerset. There is no evidence of his being on any occasion designated marquis of Somerset, although his earldom was denominated from thence, and the title itself was in fact subsequent to, if not in lieu of, that of Dorset, by which he was always styled till its abrogation, with the other proceedings of the parliament in which it was granted, on the accession of Hen. 4.[i] On the 6 Nov. 4 Hen. 4 (1402), the house of commons petitioned the king to restore to him his forfeited rank, to which his majesty, with the advice of the lords, consented; but the capricious or politic peer pleaded the recent origin of the title of marquis in the kingdom, and begged he might not be compelled to bear it[k]. His thus waving the proffered rank might arise from a desire of ingratiating himself with the new monarch, by appearing indifferent to honors primarily derived from his deposed rival; and this is rendered more probable by his having obtained offices of considerable responsibility under both sovereigns: indeed, had he been sincere in his professed motives, why did they not prevent his acceptance of the title in the first instance? Dugdale asserts[l], that he "at length accepted (the "marquisate of Dorset), and by that title, in 8 Hen. 4, was constituted[m] Admiral of the King's whole Fleet, as "well for the North as West," but this does not appear from the authority cited, and both he and his successor are styled earls of Somerset only in the inquisitions[n]. His son and heir, Henry, 2d earl of Somerset, was baptized 26 Oct. 3 Hen. 4 (1401), on which occasion the king stood sponsor, and granted to him and the heirs male of his body 1000 marks yearly, payable out of the exchequer, till he should provide him an equivalent in land[i]. He died in his minority, and was succeeded by his brother, John[o], 3d earl and 1st duke of Somerset, who was taken prisoner in France, 9 Hen. 5 (1421), at the time the duke of Clarence, his father-in-law, was slain. Recovering his freedom, he was again actively engaged in the French wars, and in 21 Hen. 6 (1442), the year prior to his decease, he was constituted lieutenant general of Aquitaine, of the duchy of Normandy, and nominally of the whole realm of France. Dying without male issue his dukedom became extinct, but was subsequently revived in his brother Edmond: his Northamptonshire estates (int. al.) descended to his daughter and heiress, Margaret[p], successively, by marriage, countess of Richmond and Derby, and the brightest ornament of her sex in the 15th century. In the present advanced state of society, when the prejudices of sexual superiority which retarded the developement of the female mind, are justly exploded; and the freest exercise allowed to the cultivation of taste and literature, it is difficult fully to appreciate the merits of those who first cultivated those intellectual pursuits which impart interest and individuality to character. To this honorable distinction the countess of Richmond is pre-eminently entitled. "She was of singular Wisedome ferre passyng the comyn rate of "women. She was good in remembraunce, and of holdyng memorye, a redye wytte she had also to conceive all "thyngs, albeit they were ryghte darke: Right studious she was in Bokes, which she had in grete number, both "in Englysh and in Frenshe, and for her exercise, and for the profyte of others, she did translate divers maters "of Devocyon out of the Frensh into Englysh[q]:" she may therefore be considered, with the exception perhaps of Juliana Berners, the first female author in England; and to her liberal patronage of learning, the university of Cambridge is indebted for the two colleges of Christ's and St. John's, and both universities for a professorship of divinity. By command, and under the authority of her son king Hen. 7, she became the arbitress of court etiquette, and "made the orders (yet extant) for great estates of ladies and noblewomen, for their precedence, attires, and "wearing of barbes at funerals over the chin and under the same." She was scrupulously and severely religious, and, influenced by the superstition of the age, entered herself a member of five monastic institutions, Westminster, Crowland, Durham, Winbourn, and the Charter-house in London. She died 30 June 1509, seised of the manors of Overston, Eydon, Chapel Brampton, Maxey, and Torpel; and of Colly Weston, Aldwinckle, Achurch, and Thorp Waterville for life; besides extensive possession in other counties, and was succeeded by her grandson and heir king Henry 8th.

Sir John Wood[u], clerk of the signet, and from him by coheiresses, according to the annexed pedigree, to Benjamin Mildmay, esq. whose claim to the ancient barony of Fitzwalter, by descent from his great grandmother Frances Ratcliffe, was allowed and confirmed in 1669-70.

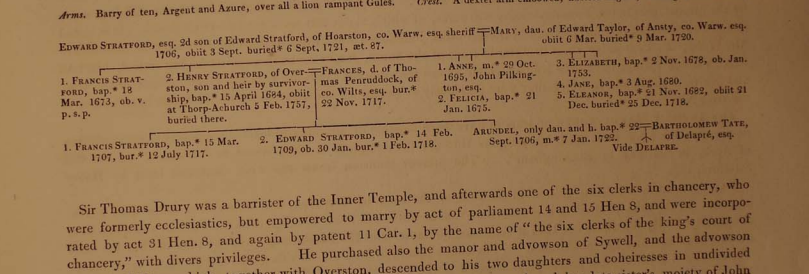
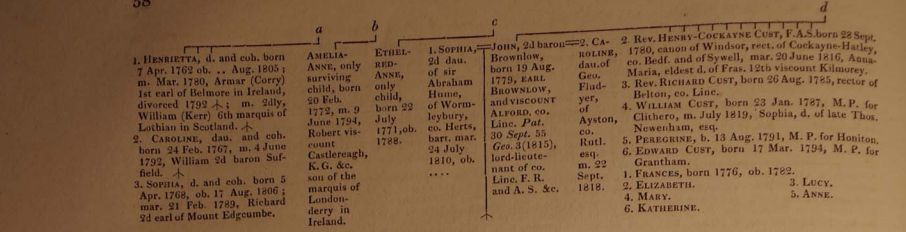
Benjamin lord Fitzwalter sold Overston, in 1672, to Edward Stratford, esq. whose son and heir Henry Stratford, esq. conveyed it in 1737 to Thomas Drury, esq. created a baronet 16 Feb. 1738-9.

STRATFORD OF OVERSTON.

From monuments, and parish register of Overston.*



Arms. Barry of ten, Argent and Azure, over all a lion rampant Gules. Crest. A dexter arm embowed, habited Argent, holding a scimitar Or.



Sir Thomas Drury was a barrister of the Inner Temple, and afterwards one of the six clerks in chancery, who were formerly ecclesiastics, but empowered to marry by act of parliament 14 and 15 Hen 8, and were incorporated by act 31 Hen. 8, and again by patent 11 Car. 1, by the name of "the six clerks of the king's court of chancery," with divers privileges. He purchased also the manor and advowson of Sywell, and the advowson of Little Billing, which, together with Overston, descended to his two daughters and coheiresses in undivided moieties. In August 1770, Jocosa-Catherina, the youngest daughter, purchased her late sister's moiety of John earl of Buckinghamshire and the trustees in his marriage settlement; and in October following married sir Brownlow Cust, bart. afterwards lord Brownlow, who survived her, and upon the death of Ethelred-Anne, their only child, became possessed of the whole Drury estate in this county.

DRURY OF OVERSTON, Baronet.

Arms. Argent, on a chief Vert, a tau between two mullets pierced Or. Crest. On a wreath a greyhound courant Argent.

In July 1791, lord Brownlow sold his whole estate at Overston (except the advowson, since taken in exchange with the present earl Brownlow for the advowson of Sywell), with other property in this county, to John Kipling, esq. one of the six clerks in chancery, and keeper of the public records in the Rolls chapel, second and youngest son of Henry Kipling, of Fallesthorp in Lincolnshire, esq. by Hester his wife, the only child of Charles Kipling, esq. He married several years since Isabella, second daughter of Willoughby Wood, of Thoresby in Lincolnshire, esq. and Elizabeth his wife, second and youngest daughter of sir John Thorold, of Cranwell in the same county, 8th bart.

The Park originated in a licence obtained in 39 Hen. 3 (1254), by Gilbert de Millers, to convert his wood at "Overston" into a park[y]. When in the hands of the crown it was committed to a keeper, and in 3 Hen. 8 (1511), Edward Vavasour and Thomas Rouse were appointed for life[z]. Thomas Vavasour, grandson of Edward, resided here, and entered his pedigree in the visitation of 1618[a]. The park is partly walled, and with the additions made by the present proprietor, contains nearly 800 acres, of which about 200 acres are in Sywell parish. It is belted round with thriving plantations; and amongst other judicious embellishments introduced under the direction of Mr. Webb, is an extensive sheet of water in front of the house, fed by a clear and never-failing rivulet, and into which various springs have been led, by which means the adjacent lands are kept dry at all seasons of the year, and free from the floods to which they were previously subjected by the overflowing of the brook in its course to the river Nen.

The ancient Manor-house appears to have been capable of affording at least a temporary accommodation to royalty; for king Edw. 1, in his progress through the kingdom in 1300, rested at "Overston" on the 22d of April, in his way to Rockingham[b]. The present mansion fronts the west, and was built by Henry Stratford, esq.

The Village is on rising ground to the west of the road to Kettering, and about four miles from Northampton. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about three and thirty families, which seventeen years ago were about forty[c].' By the census of 1801 it contained 36 houses and 173 inhabitants; and by that of 1811 the same number of houses and 190 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £92. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3,322. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £328. 4s. 9d. at 1s. 10d. in the £. on the actual rent. The wake follows St. Nicholas.

The Advowson was appendant to the manor till sold by Edward Stratford, esq. to Mr. Robert Ives, of Northampton, of whose family it was purchased by sir Thomas Drury, bart. and descended with the manor to his coheirs. In 1814 John lord Brownlow conveyed it to John Kipling, esq. in exchange for the advowson of Sywell.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. It is valued at 12 marks (£8.) per ann. in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[d], and of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[e], and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books, 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £13. 6s. 8d. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[f]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified that Overston was a parsonage presentative, worth £90. yearly, in the patronage of Robert Mildmay, esq. and that Lionel Godrich the incumbent was resident[g]. The rectory, prior to the inclosure, consisted of the parsonage-house, two ancient glebe closes, Ymagis or Parson's wood, containing 12 acres, three yard lands of glebe in the open fields computed at 80 acres, a modus of £12. 15s. yearly for the ancient inclosures, and the great and small tithes of the open fields; but by virtue of that act the three yard lands of glebe were vested in Henry Stratford, esq. in fee, and in lieu thereof, and in discharge of the modus and of all tithes whatsoever, a messuage, with 130 acres of old inclosure, and a clear yearly rent-charge of £76 were allotted to the rector, and it was further agreed and awarded that the rector should pay one sixth of all parochial taxes and levies, and the proprietor of the remainder of the lordship the other five parts. In 1799, the rector, under the authority of the act for redemption of the land tax, sold the scite of the old parsonage and the two ancient glebe closes and Ymagis wood to John Kipling, esq. and the surplus of the purchase money, after extinguishing the land tax, produced £294. 18s. 8d. 3 per cent. consols., which is vested in trust for the rector. The ancient parsonage-house being in a ruinous state, the late lord Brownlow obtained a faculty for pulling it down, and erected the present house and offices on part of the glebe allotted under the inclosure.

John Frere, priest, by lady Margaret Mareschall, 22 Oct. 1375.

John de Exton, priest, by sir Thomas Percy, &c. attornies of sir John de Beaufort, 3 Nov. 1393.

Sir John Martyn, priest, by John (Beaufort) earl of Somerset, 11 Aug. 1409. Either he or a contemporary of both names enjoyed a variety of preferments in this county; being rector of Furtho in 1367, vicar of Spratton 1374, rector of Little Oakley 1399, of Cottingham 1403, vicar of Lilbourn 1405, and of St. Bartholomew's, Northampton, 1413.

William Notyngham, or Ash, priest, 2 Dec. 1432.

Thomas Cowper, priest, by William Tresham and other feoffees of Margaret duchess of Somerset, 29 Sept. 1448. He seems to have obtained the rectory of Pauler's Pery in 1470, when

Sir Thomas Wynstanley, priest, succeeded 4 Jan. same year, on the presentation of Margaret duchess of Somerset. On his decease

Sir Thomas Ryddeley, or Ridley, priest, was presented by Margaret countess of Richmond and Derby, 19 Dec. 1490. He was collated to the 5th prebend of the college of St. Mary in Leicester, 6 Hen. 7 (1490)[k], but resigned it in 1495.

Sir Richard Crowe, priest, 2 Nov. 1500. Rector of Thrapston in 1498.

"Sir William Mercer, priest, of Overston," occurs as witness to the will of John Gyldeall, 6 Feb. 1500-1[l]. qu. if rector?

Sir John Carter, priest, 17 July 1504. He appears to have been a still greater pluralist in the county than his predecessor Martyn: the name occurring as rector of Rushton in 1451, of Irthlingborough 1453, of Woodford by Thrapston 1462, of Blatherwick 1469, vicar of St. John's, Peterborough, 1469, rector of Creton 1486, of Cranford .. to 1487, and of Achurch 1502.

Sir Clement Wyner, chaplain, 10 June 1509.

Sir Richard Heyes, or, according to the first fruits roll, "Haynes," by the king (Hen. 8), 18 Aug. 1517. His death introduced

John Smeyton, clerk, who was instituted 18 June 1554, on the presentation of Baldwin Willoughby, esq. by grant from sir Thomas Smyth and Elizabeth his wife.

From this last incumbency an hiatus of nearly a century intervenes; the next name that can be retrieved is

John Harris, A. M. inst. 9 Sept. 1633, vice ..... deceased, on the presentation of sir Thomas Edmondes, treasurer of the king's household. He was also rector of Passenham, and collated to a prebend in Ely before Oct. 1635, which he retained till his death in 1658[m], but resigned both his rectories to another

John Harris, clerk, A. M. who was presented to this rectory by Robert Mildmay, esq. and Elizabeth (Mary) his wife, and instituted 31 Oct. 1640.

Henry Wilkinson, clerk, accounted for the first fruits 3 July 1643.

Lionel Goodriche, clerk, accounted for the first fruits 12 July 1649. He had formerly been vicar of Little Houghton. He was deprived by the act of uniformity in 1662, but afterwards conformed[n], though never restored to his benefice, which was given, on his refusing to subscribe, to

Thomas Roberts, A. M. presented by the king, and instituted 13 Nov. 1662, who held it only a few months, William Chambers, A. M. being presented by Benjamin Mildmay, esq. and instituted 14 July 1663.

William Denny, presented by Edward Stratford, esq. and instituted 9 May 1680. He was rector of Barnack 1687. On his resignation

Joseph Ives was inst. 5 June 1702, on the presentation of Robert Ives, gent. He died, and was buried in the chancel here, 30 Nov. 1703[o]. His successor was

Paul Ives, of Oriel coll. Oxf. LL. D. presented by John Ives, gent. and instituted 13 Mar. 1703-4. He died 28 Feb. and was interred here 6 Mar. 1745-6. The two succeeding incumbents,

William Willis, of Trinity coll. Oxf. A. M. inst. 6 May 1746, on the presentation of sir Thomas Drury, bart.; and

George Drury, of Eman. coll. Camb. A. M. presented by dame Martha Drury and her daughters, and inst. 23 Jan. 1761, having been already noticed as rectors of Little Billing (p. 29), I proceed to George Thomas, of University coll. Oxf. A. M. 1779, B. D. 1788, rector of Doverdale in Worcestershire, inst. 13 Mar. 1807, on the presentation of Simon Yorke, of Erthig in Denbighshire, esq. p. h. v. and died in June 1813.

George Hanway Standert, of Trinity coll. Oxf. A. M. who was selected to supply the vacancy, had the additional expectancy of the vicarage of Mares Ashby, but died in Jan. 1814, in the interval between his presentation and institution. The present incumbent, George Edward Hanmer, A. M. fourth son of sir Thomas Hanmer, of Hanmer and Bettisfield park in Flintshire, bart. was inst. 24 Mar. 1814, on the presentation of John 2d lord, and now earl Brownlow. He was presented to the rectory of Lodington in 1817.

The Registers of this parish commence in 1673.

The Communion Plate, consists of a silver flagon, cup, salver, and paten, given by the rector, Dr. Paul Ives, in June 1736. Sir Brownlow Cust, bart. in 1774, gave to this church the bible and book of common-prayer which belonged to his father, sir John Cust, bart. in right of his office of speaker of the house of commons.

The old Church, now literally levelled to the ground, and its very scite blended with the verdant lawn, stood in front of the manor-house, and is described by Bridges as consisting of a tower, nave, north aisle, and chancel[p]. In the 15th century it contained no less than four altars dedicated to different saints, as appears by the will of John Geffron, 20 July 1486, by which he bequeathed to the high altar for tythes forgotten 6s. 8d.; to the reparation of the altar of the blessed Mary 20d.; to the reparation of the altar of St. Anne 20d.; to the reparation of the altar of St. Thomas 20d.; and to the reparation of the altar of St. John the baptist 20d.[q] Sir Thomas Drury projected the consolidation of the rectories of Overston and Sywell, and had selected a spot between the two villages, still called Church close, for the erection of a church for the united parishes; but death prevented the execution of his plan. The old church of Overston remained till 1803, when a faculty was obtained for taking it down; and the present Church was erected within the park, south of the village, by John Kipling, esq. and consecrated by the bishop of the diocese in July 1807. It is a small gothic building of Kingsthorp freestone, consisting of a tower, nave, and chancel, with a recess at each side, the north one used as a vestry, and the south occupied by Mr. Kipling's pew. The nave is 35 ft. 9 in. long, by 19 ft. 2 in. wide; and the chancel 13 ft. 6 in. long, by 28 ft. 11 in. wide, including the south recess. The interior is neatly paved and pewed, and has a west gallery. The east window, of three lights, is of stained glass, brought from the continent, and arranged by the late Mr. Egginton. The centre compartment is a half-length of our Saviour blessing the elements, and above is a fine head of the prophet Isaiah; on the right is John preaching in the wilderness, and on the left the baptism of Christ, and the descent of the holy Spirit.

PITSFORD,

Is written in domesday Pitesford and Pidesford, and its derivation may with probability be referred to the saxon pꝛꝛ and ꝑoꝛꝺ, or the ford at the pit.

The lordship contains about 1450 acres, and was inclosed with Boughton by act of parliament 29 Geo. 2 (1756). The principal proprietors are, colonel Vyse, the lord of the manor, who has about 446 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 195 acres; Mr. Thos. Garlick, of Toddington in Bedfordshire, about 150 acres; Mr. John Britten about 120 acres; and Mr. Thomas Potterton about 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Brixworth in Orlingbury hundred; east by Moulton; south by Boughton, but the precise line of boundary cannot now be ascertained; and west by the Naseby branch of the Nen, which divides it from Chapel Brampton in Newbottle-grove hundred. The soil is principally red land or a lightish brown loam, but the east side of the field is a strong harsh clay. Elm and ash are the principal timber: oak does not flourish. The following scarce plants have been found. Carduus eriophorus, Friar's crown. Polypodium Filex fœmina, female Polypody or Fern. Morton says, "in the Stone Pit at Pisford is dug up a broad Stone that rises, as the Diggers express it, with "a Head and a Bed, that is, an eaven Side or Edge, and an eaven Surface: Insomuch that they lay pretty "handsome Floors of it; which, was it not naturally thus eaven, they could not do, the Stone is so hard to "cut. It also bears the Fire well, and is used for Oven Hearths. Some of these are nigh Eight Feet in Length "and Four in breadth[a]." There are also quarries of slatey lime-stone, and pits of siliceous sand in the lordship. It is abundantly supplied with water; according to Morton "there are at least 300 Springs, and no fewer "than 25 little Rills, which are formed of the Water running down from Four or Five little Vallies that open "into greater, and that have several springs upon the Sides of them[b]." The original ford was probably where the bridge is now erected, adjoining the turnpike on the Harborough road. The two mills mentioned in domesday have been long since destroyed, but there is a tradition that one of them stood on the brook which divides from Brixworth.

MANORIAL HISTORY. WODHULL FEE. MALESOURES' and PITSFORD MANOR. At the domesday survey Fulcher held of Walter Flandrensis, three hides and a virgate in "Pitesford." The arable land was seven caracates, one of which was in demesne with two servants, and 16 villeins and nine bordars had the remaining six. There was a mill worth 12d. yearly, and the whole was valued then, as in the time of Edward the confessor, at 70s. yearly[c]. Walter Flandrensis was ancestor of the barons Wahull, or Wodhull, of Odell in Bedfordshire, whose principal manor in this county was PATESHULL, where an account of them will be introduced. Fulcher, the mesne lord, was progenitor of the family of Malesoures of WALGRAVE, between whom and a family of the local name this estate was divided, for, in the hydarium of Hen. 2, Henry Malesures and Philip (de Pittesford) were certified to hold three hides and a half of the fee of Wahull[d]. In 17 Joh. (1215), Godescall de Malgehelin had a grant of the estates of the king's enemies who held of Wahull[e], including the manor and share of the advowson of Pitsford, belonging to Geoffrey de Malesoures, who, however, obtained restitution of them on returning to his fealty in 1 Hen. 3 (1216)[f]. In that division of the Testa de Nevill compiled about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), Robert de Icofne of Northampton, and William de Lisle with Mabel his wife, were returned to hold two fees in "Pitesford" of the fees of Saher de Wahull[g]. Neither of these names occur again, and there is little doubt but their right originated in, and was limited to, their having married the widows of Malesoures and Pitsford. The latter family obtained both manors prior to the statute of Quia Emptores 18 Edw. 1, which compelled all subsequent aliences to hold not of the mesne but of the paramount lord; and in 24 Edw. 1 (1295), Thomas Fitz Philip (de Pittesford) held Pitsford of Richard Malesoures of Walgrave, and Richard of the barony of Wodhull[h]. The rise and extinction of the Pitsfords are imperfectly traced in the subjoined pedigree, but the middle descents, and the Landwath branch, are well authenticated.

GREEN MANOR. The family of Green acquired one portion of this estate towards the close of the reign of Edw. 3. In some inquisitions it is described as the moiety of a manor[i], in others as an entire manor[j], and its descent is identified with Boughton * down to colonel Vyse, the present proprietor.

HAUTON OR HANTON MOIETY OR MANOR. The other moiety or manor of the Pitsfords came into possession of Robert de Hauton or Hanton, who, in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), conjointly with Laurence de Pisford, held one fee here of the honor of Wahull[k]. From him there is an hiatus to John Hauton, who is styled in the pedigrees lord of a mediety of the manor, and who leaving three daughters and coheiresses, it probably remained in undivided shares till 6 Edw. 6 (1552), when it was conveyed by fine to John Shuckburgh, esq.† one of their representatives, by William Chauncey, esq. and the other co-representatives. This estate is no longer reputed a manor, and was alienated in parcels many years since.

MORETON FEE‡. Honor of Leicester§ and Winchester‖. Osmund¶ had lands at "Pidesford" in the time of Edward the confessor, worth 3s. yearly, which at the domesday survey were rated at 10s. yearly, and held by Humphrey under the earl of Moreton. The arable land was half a carucate cultivated by a bordar, and there was a mill worth 2s. yearly[l]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, the earl of Leicester had six small virgates here[m]. By inquisition after the death of Roger Quincy earl of Winchester, it appears that Richard de Hanred had three virgates in Pitsford, which, with lands in Haselbech, Walgrave, and Nortoft, he held by the service of one fee. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), Maud, widow of Robert de Holand, claimed view of frank-pledge in "Pisseford" as parcel of the honor of Winchester[n]; and in 33 Hen. 6 (1455), William lord Lovell died seised (int. al.) of half a fee of the same honor in Haselbech and Pitsford, formerly held by Hugh Scales[o].

The family of Stephens had an estate here, and entered a pedigree of three descents in the visitation of 1681.

ST. LEONARD'S HOSPITAL NEAR NORTHAMPTON. Ascelin, son of Philip de Pitesford, by deed without date gave a virgate of land in Pitesford to the brothers and sisters of the house of St. Leonard's of Northampton[p], which, with nine roods, a close, and meadow ground, late parcel also of the possessions of the said hospital, were sold by the corporation of Northampton, about the year 1621, to Robert Hayward for £160.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. CATHERINE'S IN NORTHAMPTON had certain lands and tenements in Pitsford, which were granted to sir Thomas Tresham in 5 Edw. 6 (1551)[q].

MANSION. There is no manor-house remaining, but the late colonel Money, who had a freehold here of about 80 acres, erected a handsome house with detached offices, on a leasehold estate, which is now the property of his son, but has been occupied several years by colonel Corbet.

THE VILLAGE is pleasantly situated, between five and six miles from Northampton, and to the east of the Harborough road. On the 18th Aug. 1619, a dreadful fire broke out here at nine o'clock a. m. which, before three o'clock, consumed above 20 dwelling-houses, including some of the best farm-houses, with all their barns, ricks, and hovels; the whole damage being estimated at upwards of £3000[r]. In the time of Bridges it was 'a village of three and thirty houses, besides the poor's-houses, which are five'; by the census of 1801 it contained 76 houses and 339 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 84 houses and 423 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £92. 6s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2284. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £667. 12s. 6d. at 14s. in the £. The wake follows the feast of All Saints.

The Advowson appears to have belonged to the feudatories of Wahull, who presented alternately. The Pitsford's turn passed to the Bucktons, and the Greens ultimately obtained the whole; the Bucktons' by inheritance, and the Hautons probably by purchase. It is now vested in colonel Vyse (p. 33).

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), it is rated at eight marks (£5. 6s. 8d.) per ann.[t]; in that of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1), at £5. 13s. 4d. per ann.[u]; and in the ecclesiastical survey, or king's books, 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £18. 10s. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[x]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that "Pisford" was a parsonage presentative worth £70. per ann. in the patronage of lord Vaux, and William Ward was the resident incumbent[y]. The rectorial land consists of 195 a. 1 r. 8 p. allotted under the inclosure act in lieu of glebe lands, and of all tithes whatsoever. The parsonage is a genteel residence, east of the church-yard.

In 4 Edw. 3 (1331), Thomas de Buckton and Joan his wife, had a plea with Adam, parson of Pysford, respecting the manor of Braunston[z], which proves him to have been a branch of that family. He exchanged for the rectory of Yardley Hastings with

Thomas Saxby, by George Lane, gent. by grant from Thomas lord Vaux, 30 June 1544. He was rector of Polebrook 1541. On his decease

Nicholas Herman, A. M. was presented by Augustin Cryspe, and instituted 29 Dec. 1558. He was rector also of Boughton till his death, when the same patron presented

John Ringrose, who was instituted 9 Feb. 1559-60[a]. He was buried here 13 May 1594[b], and

Edmond Skinner, clerk, compounded for the first fruits in 1595[c]. He was buried here 21 May 1628[b], and on the following day his son, Robert Skinner, B. D. was instituted on the presentation of Richard Mottershed of Kingsthorp, and Richard Stockwell of Northampton, gents. p. h. v. Anthony à Wood is mistaken in stating that he was a native of this place[d], for his baptism is not recorded in the parish register, and on a comparison of dates he was four years old when his father obtained this living. He received the rudiments of education at the neighbouring village of Brixworth, and at the age of 16 was removed to Oxford, and entered of Trinity coll. in 1607. His first ecclesiastical preferment was this rectory, which he resigned in Feb. 1636, and in July following was elected bishop of Bristol, and about the same time was presented to the rectories of Launton in Oxfordshire and Greens Norton, both of which he held in commendam. In 1642 he obtained the see of Oxford, and soon after, joining eleven of his episcopal brethren in a protestation against the proceedings of the parliament, was impeached of high treason and committed to the tower, from whence, being released, he retired to his rectory of Launton, which he was permitted to retain, and lived there in seclusion till the restoration, when he was restored to his bishopric, and in 1663 was translated to Worcester. He died there in 1670, and was buried in the cathedral, where a marble slab records his memory. He published two single sermons.

Henry Wylde, A. M. was instituted 10 Feb. 1636, on the presentation of the rev. Robert Skinner, p. h. v. vice the said Robert Skinner; and consequently Maurice Tresham[e], whom Bridges introduces between Edmond Skinner and this incumbent (omitting Robert Skinner), could only have been curate and not rector. Wylde was also rector of Ashton, and was buried here 6 Dec. 1640[b], when

Edmond Vaughan, of Corpus Christi coll. Oxf. B. D. was presented by the rev. Samuel Clerke, S. T. P. of Kingsthorp, and Leonard Rawlin, and instituted on the 30th of the same month. He was ejected by the committee of sequestration at Northampton, who, on the 10th June 1644, joined the parishioners in recommending Mr. White, the then officiating minister, "a man "of pious and painfull life and conversac'on," to be admitted to the parsonage[f], and on the 14th

Richard White, A. M. was appointed "rector" by the committee of the house of commons[g].

Afterwards one Ventris supplied the cure, and paid a fifth of the rectorial profits to Mr. Vaughan[i], who, at the restoration, was reinstated in his living. During his ejectment he was subjected to poverty and many other hardships. He was learned but diffident, and published nothing, except the life of Dr. Thomas Jackson, president of Corpus Christi coll. prefixed to the doctor's works in 1653 and 1672. He was buried here in 1669, and

John Barbon, of Exeter coll. Oxf. A. M. was presented by sir Richard Raynsford, p. h. v. and instituted 22 Feb. 1669-70. He was son of Enoch Barbon of Holcot, where he was born in 1624. Expelled from the university by the parliamentary commissioners in 1648, he lived in depressed circumstances till his patron sir Richard Raynsford gave him the vicarage of Dallington about the year 1661, which he appears to have resigned in 1675. He died here 23 June, and was buried — June 1688. He published a defence of episcopacy and the liturgy, under the quaint and diffuse title of "Liturgie a most divine service; in answer to a late "Pamphlet stiled Common Prayer Book no divine "service, wherein that Author's 27 Reasons against "Liturgies are wholly and clean taken away; his 69 "objections against our most reasonable service Book "are fully satisfied; as also his 12 arguments against "Bishops are clearly answered, and his 6 first also re-"torted, and his odious and insidious disparallel 'twixt "our Bishops and Timothy and Titus utterly null'd," &c. by John Barbon, M. A. and vicar of Dallington, Oxf. 1663, 4to. He was succeeded by

Thomas Nixon, of Trinity coll. Camb. A. B. 1672, A. M. 1676, S. T. P. 1690, presented by Nicholas earl of Banbury, and instituted 10 July 1688, who held it but two years, when

Samuel Rose, of the same coll. A. M. was presented by sir John Briscoe, and instituted 20 Dec. 1690; on whose resignation for the rectory of Whilton,

Charles Briscoe, A. M. already noticed under Boughton (p. 37), was presented by the same patron, and instituted 29 June 1699. On his decease

John Woodford, A. M. was instituted 30 Mar. 1748, on the presentation of William earl of Strafford. He died here 20 Feb. 1769, when the same noble patron presented

William Jackson, A. M. who resigned the rectory of Boughton, which he had held more than 20 years, and was instituted 14 Apr. 1769. He died at Northampton 27 Feb. 1795, æt. 80, and was buried in St. Giles's church, where a neat marble tablet is erected to his memory. The present incumbent, Robert-Charles Blayney, of Worcester coll. Oxf. A. M. was instituted 5 Mar. 1795, on the presentation of sir William Howe, K. B. field-marshal sir George Howard, K. B. Levison Vernon, esq. and R. W. H. Vyse, esq. a minor. He is also a prebendary of Salisbury.

The Register of this parish commences in 1560, but to 1599 is a transcript from the old one.

The Church, dedicated either to All Saints or the blessed Virgin, is at the north-west angle of the village; and consists of a low western tower containing five bells, nave, north aisle, and chapel, south porch and chancel. The west front of the tower is flanked by two buttresses at each side, which are separated from each other by a small circular pillar, banded at intervals, and terminating with the upper stage of the buttresses. All the windows of the church have been altered or despoiled of their mullions, except the two at the east end. The inner entrance of the south porch is a rich specimen of the early norman style. The door is square-headed, and the lintel stone or semicircular interval to the arch is filled with rude sculpture, representing animals feeding on a tree, and a man with a large bill or knife in his hand; but whether for the purpose of attack or defence is very problematical. The arch is surrounded by a series of chevron mouldings on a flat surface, interrupted in their course to the base by the impost, and having a head or ball within every indenture of the innermost row. The outer arch is supported by two columns with ornamental capitals: the dexter shaft is composed of a succession of indentations, and the sinister one of irregular beaded lozenges. The arch consists of two mouldings; a hollow one, on which grotesque heads are placed with beaks extending over the inner one, which is round. The interior is well paved, and has been recently pewed and a west gallery erected. The tower is 11 ft. long, by 8 ft. 4 in. wide; the nave and north aisle, which are of one pace, the pillars having been removed, are 34 ft. 5 in. long, by 33 ft. 1 in. wide; the chancel and north chapel are 19 ft. 7 in. long, the chancel 14 ft. 7 in. and the chapel 12 ft. 11 in. wide. The font has been removed into the north chapel. The base is gone, and part only of the shaft remaining; it is octagonal, with small buttresses at the angles; the upper part or basin also is of the same shape, and has a cinquefoiled ogee arch within a plain arch in each division. The nave is divided from the chancel by an open arch. Another open arch separates the chancel from the north chapel, which has a piscina, and a plain bracket on the south side of the east window. In the north wall is a low obtuse monumental arch.

LONGMAN'S HILL, a tumulus, is described by Morton as "of an oblong shape, about 10 yards wide[k]," but it is now planted, and its original form broken into by the hedge which separates it on the south from the road leading out of the turnpike road into the village.

Morton mentions also a square entrenchment called BARROW DYKE upon Pisford heath; two sides of which were then remaining, one of them above 80 yards in length[k]. It is now an inclosed field, south of the lane leading to Brampton, and a tree is planted at the angle, but the plough has only left partial and indistinct traces of it, and in a few years no vestige will remain.

SPRATTON

Includes the hamlet of LITTLE CRETON, an account of which will be given under Guilsborough hundred, in which it is locally situated.

SPRATTON is written in domesday "Sprotone and Spretone," and in later records Sprotton. The lordship consists of about 2280 acres including the old inclosures; the open fields were inclosed by act of parliament (5 Geo. 3 (1765). The principal proprietors are Francis Beynon Hackett, of Moor Hall in Warwickshire, esq. who has about 520 acres; the representatives of the late Thomas Beet, of Great Houghton, esq. and of the rev. George Beet, of Harpole, about 300 acres; Edward Barker, of Rudgeley in Staffordshire, esq. about 160 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 144 acres; Mr. Thomas Chapman, about 140 acres; Mr. William Lantsbery about 120 acres; William Zouch Lucas Ward, of Guilsborough, esq. and Mrs. Bosworth, of Highgate-house, about 100 acres each. It is an insulated parish surrounded by other hundreds, being bounded on the north by Creton in Guilsborough hundred; on the east by Brixworth in Orlingbury hundred; and on the south and west Teton brook divides it from Brampton, Holdenby, and Teton, a hamlet to Ravensthorp, in Newbottle Grove hundred. The soil is principally red land or a lightish red loam, except towards the east part of the field, which is partly a harsh clay. The following scarce plants have been found. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Cichorium Intybus, wild Endive. Geranium disectum, jagged Crane's-bill. Tanacetum vulgare, common Tansy. Ornithopus perpusillus, Bird's-foot. Dypsacus sylvestris, wild Teasel. Hyoseris minima, Small Swine's Succory. There are no quarries used for building. There is a small brick-kiln towards Brixworth field. It is well supplied with springs; one of which, called Moorswell, is slightly chalybeate. Neither of the mills mentioned in domesday are remaining, nor is there any tradition where they stood.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. Osmund, who had the principal estate here in the time of Edward the confessor, valued at 20s. yearly, was dispossessed by William the conqueror, who bestowed Kelmarsh and Great Houghton on William Peverel[l], and Little Billing, Pitsford[m], and "Spretone," on the earl of Moreton, under whom this estate was held at the domesday survey by William and Durand, and its estimated value trebled, being then rated at 60s. It contained three hides, deducting one virgate. The arable land was six carucates; of which one and a half were in demesne with a servant, and six villeins and six bordars had three and a half, leaving one carucate waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 6s. yearly, and six acres of meadow[n]. In the reign of Hen. 2, the earl of Leicester, who obtained a portion of the Moreton fee on its confiscation, had two hides and a half and a large virgate in "Sprotton[o]." The lands of William and Durand formed distinct manors, and on the subsequent partition of the earldom of Leicester, the former became parcel of the honor of Leicester, and the latter of the honor of Winchester.

HONOR OF LEICESTER. BARONY OF DODFORD*. MONTACUTE MANOR. William was the ancestor of the family of Keynes of Dodford, and in the Testa de Nevill about 20 Hen. 3 (1235), Simon de Creton was certified to hold one small fee in Creton and Spratton of the fees which were Ralph de Keynes in the wardship of Simon Montfort[p]. By a further subinfeudation this manor passed to the Montacutes. The jurors of Spelho hundred, in 4 Edw. 1 (1276), presented that Simon de Montacute held eight virgates in "Sprotton," which used to pay geld, do suit to the hundred court, and ought to render 3s. 9½d. to the sheriff's aid, but which services had been subtracted for 20 years without warrant[q]; and in the certificate of knight's fees 24 Edw. 1 (1296), John, the son of Simon de Montacute, was found to hold this estate of Hugh de Creton, who held of the fee of William de Keynes lord of Dodford, and he of the earl of Leicester[r]. The next mention I find of this manor is in "a Rentall renewed and made" 28 July 3 Hen. 7 (1488), of the tenants who hold of the manor of Dodford, wherein it is stated that "John, the son of Symonde of the Sharpe Hill,"—the literal translation of Montacute,—formerly held half a fee in Spratton which William Gosage lately held, and now William "Coope" (Cope) holds in right of his wife, the daughter of the said William Gosage, by the same service, and value £8. per ann.[s] Anne Cope, widow of John Cope, died 3 Dec. 1512, seized of the manors of Helmdon, Clipston, and Newbold, Guilsborough, and Spratton, leaving Anne, daughter and heiress of Edward Cope, of Denshanger, esq. and wife of William Lovett, of Astwell, esq. her grand-daughter and heiress, aged 12 years[t]. By a memorandum in a later hand, subjoined to the document already referred to[u], it appears that the lands holden in Spratton were then, by purchase, 13 Eliz. (1570), in possession of Sprigg, Miller alias Brown, and Chapman. The families of Miller and Chapman, probably descendants from the above, are still freeholders here.

HONOR OF WINCHESTER†. ARDEN OR CHAMBRE MANOR. By the inquisition after the death of Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, 54 Hen. 3 (1269), Eustachia de Arden and Thomas Arden her son, were found to have held one fee in "Sprotton," and half a fee in Holdenby in tenure of Peter de Holdenby, both which were held under Henry de Pinkney, the intermediate lord between them and the earl[v]. In plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329) against Maud, widow of Robert de Holand, one of the coheiresses of Quincy, she substantiated her claim to the view of frank-pledge twice a year in Walgrave, Nortoft, Haselbeck, Pitsford, Spratton, and Holdenby, members of her manor of Hawes, in any one of them indifferently at her pleasure[x]. In some inquisitions this manor is found to be of the fee of Ferrars of Groby‡, the other coheir of the honor of Winchester[y]. It is still subject to the earl of Bridgewater's leet for the honor, and a court is occasionally held in the court-house, now the property of Mr. W. Lantsberry.

The baronial family of Pinkeney§ were early enfeoffed in the lands of Durand, and in the reign of Hen. 3 Eustachia de Pinkeney carried them in marriage to the Ardens of Warwickshire. Thomas Arden of Ratley in Warwickshire, son of Eustachia, by fine, 46 Hen. 3 (1261), conveyed the moiety of the manor of "Sprotton" to his cousin Thomas Arden of Hanwell in Oxfordshire, in exchange for lands in Ryton, Stoke, and Napton in Warwickshire, and Drayton in Oxfordshire[z]. The annexed pedigree embraces the collateral branches of the family, in order to exhibit at one view the whole of their possessions in this county. In 46 Edw. 3 (1372) sir John Swinford died seized of this manor and its member in Holdenby in right of his wife Joan Arden[a]; and in the 48th of the 'same reign[b], a fine was levied by William Alderbury and Elizabeth, of the manor called Ardern's-manor in Spratton, and of another manor in Holdenby.'

This Elizabeth I apprehend to have been the heiress of Swinford, and afterwards wife of Roger de la Chambre, who presented to Holdenby in 1585 (9 Ric 2), in whose male line it continued till 1505, when, on the death of John Chambre, s. p. Henry Maxe, son of his sister Ellen, and his sister Elizabeth, wife of Richard "Inguersby," were found to be his heirs[c].

Maxe Moiety. Laurence Manley of Northampton died, 30 Dec. 1557, seized of Downhall's manor, Maxe's moiety of Chambre's manor, the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Spratton, and lands in Spratton, Creton, Wood Burcote, and Northampton[d]. A pedigree of this family is entered in the visitation of 1681, but being unfurnished at present with materials for a satisfactory continuation, it is reserved for Northampton, where they principally resided. Their property here remained entire more than a century, when the impropriation, advowson, and lands were separately alienated.

Ingersby Moiety. 'In the twenty-fourth of queen Elizabeth[e] a fine was levied between William Andrews, 'gent. and Thomas Ingersby, of a moiety of Maxe's (Chambre's) manor, and of tenements in Spratton.'

Judith Fee or Honor of Huntingdon*. At the domesday survey Robais held under the countess Judith one hide in "Sprotone." The arable land was two caracutes; of which one was in demesne, and one villein with eight bordars had one and a half, making an excess of half a caracute. There was a mill worth 64d. yearly. The whole had been valued at 10s. yearly, but was then rated at 20s.[f] In the reign of Hen. 2 this estate is described as nine small virgates in "Sprotton" of the fee of king (earl) David[g]; and about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), Robert Fitz-Robert held two parts, and Walter Fitz-Theobald the third part, of half a fee in Sprotton of the honor of Huntingdon of the part of William de Fortibus and John Baliol[h]. This portion of the honor of Huntingdon will be treated of under Fotheringhay, but, to account for the tenants of this manor doing suit and service to Kingsthorp[i] court, it is necessary to mention here, that, on the accession of John Baliol, son of the above, to the throne of Scotland, he renounced his homage to Edw. 1, and consequently all his English estates escheated to the crown, on which occasion they were granted to the earl of Britanny, but subsequently vesting again in the crown, the feudal services of this manor appear to have been transferred to the royal manor of Kingsthorp[i].

Roys or Downhall Manor. Roger Roys of Spratton, son, I presume, of Robert Fitz-Robert, attested Simon de Montacute's release of Sprotton church to the abbot of St. James, between the years 1269 and 1274, and his descendant, Roger Roys, in a plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), obtained a confirmation of view of frank-pledge twice a year in his manor of "Sprotton," parcel of the honor of Huntingdon, with other privileges there enjoyed by his ancestors, in common with all the immediate tenants of that honor, by charter enrolled in the king's court[k].

'In the first year of Edw. 6 (1547), a fine was levied of the manor of Spratton between Lawrence Manley, 'plaintiff, and Thomas Downhall and other deforciants[l],' from which time it has been blended with Chambre's manor by unity of ownership.

Buci Fee. Barony of Basset*. Ulmar had a small freehold in "Spretone" before the conquest, which, at the domesday survey, was held under Robert de Buci by one Radulf. It consisted of a virgate and a bovate or oxgang. The arable land was half a carucate. One thane was there with six bordars. It had been, and was then valued at 5s. yearly[m]. In the reign of Hen. 2 there were three small virgates in "Sprotton" of the fee of Richard Basset[n]. The scanty information which can be retrieved respecting this property has been anticipated in Boughton, and from this connection it may with great probability be identified with the capital messuage and lands in Spratton, held of Thomas Vaux lord Harrowden by William Lane, of Clendon, esq.[o] and which may be traced through inquisitions to his descendants as late as the reign of Jac. 1.[p]

All the above manors are now fallen into disuse.

Francis Beynon, esq. by his marriage with Miss Okell, and by successive small purchases, acquired a considerable estate here, which is now vested in Francis Beynon Hackett, of Moor-hall in Warwickshire, esq.

St. James's Abbey near Northampton had the church of Sprotton and an acre of meadow, of the gift of Simon de Creton during the abbacy of Walkelin, between the years 1180 and 1205, which grant was confirmed by his grandson, Simon, son of Henry de Creton, in the time of Hen. 3, and again by his grandson, John, son of Hugh de Creton, 4 Edw. 2 (1310)[a]. The temporal possessions of the abbey in "Sprotton" were valued at 6s. per ann. in the taxation of P. Nicholas in 1291[c]; and at 40s. per ann. in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535[s]. They were granted (int. al.) 35 Hen. 8 (1543), to Henry Cartwright in exchange for other lands[t], who had licence to alienate them to Laurence Manley the same year[u].

Mansion. Bridges states that the Manleys 'had here a very good mansion-house,' then in possession of Mr. Randolph Malcher, who bought it of the late Lawrence Manley, esq.[x] It stood west of the church, and is now reduced to a small farm-house.

Spratton Place, built by F. Beynon, esq. has been recently purchased by, and is now the residence of Robert Ramsden, esq.

The Village, which occupies above 50 acres, stands on the summit of a hill, about seven miles north from Northampton, and a short distance east of the Welford road. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'one hundred and thirty-four houses, whereof six are for the use of the poor[x];' by the census of 1801 it contained 175 houses and 776 inhabitants; and by that of 1811 the same number of houses and 801 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £130. 13s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4130. The amount of the poor's-rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £922. 14s. 2d. at 10s. in the £. 'The wake is kept on the Sunday following the feast of St. Luke's.'

The Advowson was appendant to the Keynes portion of the Moreton fee, and the grant of it to the abbey of St. James by the Cretons has already been stated. Simon, the son of Simon Montacute, who probably claimed an interest as mesne lord of the Creton manor, remised all his right to the advowson to Adam Kelmarsh, abbot of St. James's, about 1270, for 20 marks[y]; and on the ground of the abbot having subsequently appropriated the church without licence, by which it had escheated to Edw. 1, and descended to Edw. 2, the crown claimed the advowson; but a legal appropriation being proved in the time of Hen. (3), grandfather of the king, a solemn judgment was given in parliament 8 Edw. 2 (1314), in favor of the abbey[z]. On the dissolution it fell to the crown, and in 34 Hen. 8 (1543), the king, in exchange for other lands, conveyed (int. al.) the rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Spratton, at the reserved rent of £1. 12s. 3½d. per ann. to Anthony Stringer[a], who, the following year, had licence to alienate it to Laurence Manley, of Northampton[b].

The Rectory was valued at £10. 13s. 4d. per ann. in the taxation of pope Nicholas, 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[c]; at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was on lease at £14. per ann. subject to a yearly pension of 13s. 4d. to the church of Lincoln[d]; and in the minister's accounts at the dissolution of the abbey, the farm of this rectory was rated at £15s. 13s. 4d. per ann.[d] The impropriate rectory now consists of 258 a. 2 r. 21 p.; the commissioners of inclosure having allotted 195 a. 1 r. 3 p. in lieu of six undivided eight parts of the great tithes of the open fields and old inclosures, and of all moduses or compositions, to the rev. Thomas Hide and Milicent his wife, and John Walker, gent. and Anne his wife, now vested in the representatives of the late Thomas Beet, of Great Houghton, esq. and the rev. George Beet, of Harpole; and 63 a. 1 r. 18 p. in lieu of the two remaining parts to F. Beynon, esq. now vested in F. B. Hackett, esq.

The Advowson of the Vicarage was severed from the rectory by Laurence Manley, esq. who sold it to Michael Bateman, gent. from whom it descended, I believe, through the heiress of Okell to F. Beynon, esq. of whose devisee, F. B. Hackett, esq. it has recently been purchased by Mr. John Bartlett, of Buckingham.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the vicarage of "Sprotton" is rated at 7 marks (£4. 13s. 4d.) per ann.[e]; if this be correct it was soon after diappropriated; for Giles Rous is expressly styled rector, and Richard (Gravesend) bishop of Lincoln in 1266 appropriated this church to the abbot and convent of St. James, to enable them to support a more extended hospitality[f], and in 1309 John (Dalderly) bishop of Lincoln confirmed the ordination of the vicarage made by his predecessor Richard, and which in its circumstantial minuteness presents a striking contrast to the brevity and simplicity of the Moulton endowment. It was ordained to consist of the demesne land of the church, the demesne meadow, a pasture called Broomhill well, and a meadow called Pindar's meadow belonging to the said land; the tithes of wool, lambs, calves, milk, hens, pigs, geese, ducks, hemp, and flax, and of the curtilages, and of all other small tithes, oblations, and mortuaries, and all manner of obventions offered at the altar of the church from all parts of the parish; together with the tithes of corn and hay in Creton belonging to the said church, but reserving the tithes of corn and hay arising in the town (and fields) of Spratton to the abbot and convent, who shall take care that the chancel of the church be rebuilt and repaired whenever necessary, and shall furnish books and other necessary ornaments for the church as far as the rector for the time being was accustomed to provide the same. They shall also bear all the ordinary charges except synodals, and three parts of all extraordinary burdens, but the vicar shall bear the fourth part of the extraordinary burdens and pay the synodals: and the abbot and convent shall have part of the mansion built on the church farm, with the barns, stables, oxhouses, and dovehouses, and all other buildings within the limits of the court of the grange. The vicar shall support the charge of residing and keeping hospitality, and shall have the hall belonging to the said farm-house, and the chambers and a little garden and the kitchen and all the buildings on the north side of the house: and disputes having arisen between the abbot and convent and the vicar, it was agreed that the said abbot and convent and the vicar for the time being shall entertain the archdeacon of the place in alternate years, and that the abbot and convent shall have of the buildings belonging to the church farm all those in the court-yard, and access to view and repair them when needful[g]. In the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the vicarage was rated at £15. 10s. 7d. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[h]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that Spratton was a vicarage worth £60. per ann. in the patronage of Laurence Manley, sen. and Laurence Manley, jun. gents. and that John Ward was the resident incumbent[i]. The vicarage now consists of 143 a. 3 r. 5 p. allotted by the commissioners of Spratton inclosure, in lieu of the glebe lands and all vicarial tithes; and 64 a. 18 p. and a rate-tithe of 16s. 9¼d. per ann. allotted under the Creton inclosure act 22 Geo. 3 (1782), in lieu of the glebe lands, tithes, and moduses in Little Creton. The vicarage-house is situated west of the church.

The Register commences in 1538, but to 1598 is a transcript signed by the vicar and churchwardens.

The Church, dedicated to St. Luke, stands near the western extremity of the village, and consists of a tower (in which are five bells) and spire, nave, north and south aisles and porches, chancel, and north chantry chapel. The tower furnishes an interesting example of the intermediate style of architecture which blended the decline of the circular with the rise of the pointed arch. It is divided into four stories or stages in height. In the west front is a norman entrance with two pillars on each side; the capitals of the outer ones are beautifully foliated, the inner ones are nearly plain, and both are surmounted by a deep flat impost from which the arches spring; the inner arch and soffit are plain, but the outer one is composed of a bold chevron moulding. The archivolt or dripstone terminates above the impost with corbel heads, and is divided into long narrow compartments richly ornamented. In the centre of the second stage are three small circular arches on columns, with plain bases and capitals, and the interstices filled up with masonry of a later date. The north and south sides correspond with the west in the upper divisions. The third story presents an arcade of five arches, on columns of the same character as the preceding, the end ones standing detached from the tower; the fourth story has a broad circular arch between two small pointed ones on columns and capitals, and flanked by two small flat buttresses; the centre arch, which forms the belfry window, is divided by a mullion, and trefoil headed: this division is finished by a cornice tablet with heads, which probably terminated the original building, but is now surmounted by battlements with oylet perforations, and an octagonal spire ribbed at the angles. No other portion of the building, with the exception of the south entrance, which is circular with zigzag mouldings, is probably earlier than the end of the 13th century. The nave has been embattled, but only a single battlement on the north side remains. There are buttresses of two stages with triangular heads attached to the south aisle; the north chantry chapel was erected in the reign of Hen. 7, and is of the same face with the north aisle, but the point of junction is marked by a deeply projecting buttress with several set-offs; and another is placed at the east end, collateral with the chancel. The interior has been partly new pewed, and has galleries at the west end of the nave and south aisle. The tower is 11 ft. 9 in. long, by 9 ft. wide; the nave and aisles are 48 ft. 10 in. long, the nave 17 ft. the north aisle 14 ft. 5 in. and the south aisle 14 ft. 1 in. wide; the chancel and chantry chapel 30 ft. 8 in. long, the chancel 15 ft. and the chapel 16 ft. 7 in. wide. Under the western arch of the south aisle is a massy font, with a plain octagonal shaft and trefoil headed pannels in the upper faces. The nave is divided from the north aisle by four norman arches on circular pillars with extremely shallow capitals slightly foliated, and from the south aisle by four pointed arches on circular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings. In the windows of the north aisle are slight fragments of painted glass; and at the east end of the south aisle is a recess with a mutilated ogee canopy and finial, between two brackets supported by corbels. The chancel is separated from the nave by an open pointed arch. On the south side, near the altar, is a seat under a depressed arch, and at the east end a piscina under a trefoiled arch. The chantry chapel is kept in repair by Mr. Chapman. The entrance from the north aisle, and the two arches communicating with the chancel, are walled up, leaving only a small door. The east window has been ornamented with painted glass, of which the only relics are a crucifix, crown of thorns and nails, between two scourges, and the following arms, ... in chief a mullet S. ....., impaling Arden; and Chambre impaling Arden.

NORTH CHANTRY CHAPEL. Under the arches which divide the chapel from the chancel, are two altar tombs. On the western one, is a well executed alabaster figure of a knight in plate armour with pointed helmet, mail gorget, and skirt, a collar of SS, a richly studded belt, from which is suspended a long strait sword with ornamental hilt and chain, and a short dagger at his right side. His head rests on his crest, a boar's head, and his feet against a lion, whose tail is twined round the sword; the moulding or edge of the tomb is formed of broad capped battlements; on the north side the arms of Arden are repeated three times, on shields within reversed trefoils; the south side is rendered inaccessible by a large pew in the chancel. This monument is conjecturally appropriated to sir John Swinford by Bridges, partly from the circumstance of the letters I. S. occurring on the belt; but the arms and crest identify the family, and from a comparison of the costume with contemporary figures, it may with far more probability be assigned to the last sir Thomas Arden.

X. The other tomb has neither figure nor inscription, but is a plain high altar of free-stone, with a deep plinth, having in three square pannels on the side blank shields within quatrefoils.

XI. A plain mean tablet on the north wall; inscribed,

John Chambre, clerk, by deed 12 Dec. 21 Hen. 7, enfeoffed trustees to the uses of his will, by which he demised a messuage called the "Bedehouse," with a virgate of land in Sprotton, to found and endow a chapel which he had lately built on the north side of the chancel of the church of Sprotton, for a chaplain to perform divine service there for the souls of himself and his parents and his brother William Chambre and Elizabeth his wife. He also amortised his manor of Clipston to the said chapel, and directed his executors to purchase lands to the amount of £10. or £12. per ann. in additional endowment of the said chapel, or for the support of almsmen, at their discretion[t]. By the survey previous to the dissolution of chantries, 2 Edw. 6, it was worth £5. 18s. 7½d. per ann. deducting rents resolute 6s. 7½d. and to "Barnard Brandon preest Doctor of Dyvinitie mete to "serve a cure of the age of xl yeres and hath no other living £5. 16s. WESTON FAVELL,

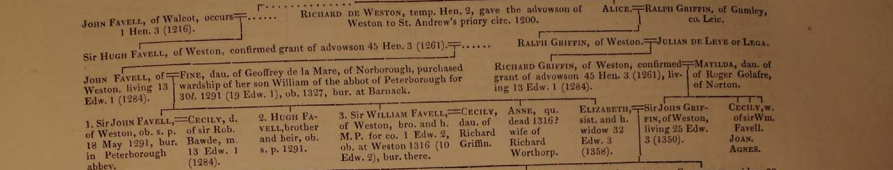
In domesday "Westone," is compounded of the saxon ꝑeſt, west, and ꝺone, a town; with the addition of Favell from its ancient lords. The lordship contains about 1030 acres, and was inclosed by private agreement in 1666. The principal proprietors are J. H. Thursby, of Abington, esq. who has about 390 acres; Edward Bouverie, of Delapré, esq. about 360 acres; and the rector, in right of his church, about 104 acres. It is bounded on the north by Moulton, and north-west by Moulton Park; east by Little Billing; south by the river Nen, which divides it from the long meadow in the parishes of Houghton and Brayfield in Wymersley hundred; and west by Abington. The soil is various; in the north a tenacious marle, in the middle a light red loam, and towards the river fine grazing land. The following scarce plants have been found here. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Ophrys ovata, Twayblade. Polypodium Filix fœminea, Female Fern. Raphanus Raphanistrum, wild Radish. Stachys arvensis, corn Woundwort. Rumex pulcher, fiddle Dock. Chelidonium majus, common Celandine. Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Antirrhinum spurium, round-leaved Snapdragon. Pastinaca sativa, common Parsnep. Cichorium Intybus, wild Endive. In Spelho field is an extensive quarry of slatey limestone, intermixed with hard iron veins, well calculated for agricultural purposes, but not adapted for building. The mill mentioned in domesday is situated on the Nen, and at the sale of the Ekins estate was purchased by Mr. George Spokes.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee*. Barony of Abrincis or Crevequer†. Leuric‡, a considerable saxon proprietor, had an estate at "Westone," valued at 40s. yearly, which, on his dispossession by William the conqueror, was bestowed on the earl of Moreton, and valued at 60s. yearly. It consisted of two hides and a half. The arable land was five carucates, of which two were in demesne with four servants; and twelve villeins and two bordars had three carucates and a half. There was ten acres of meadow, and two virgates and a half in Little Billing were in the soke of this manor[a].

On the attainder of the earl of Moreton, this estate seems to have been included in that portion which descended to Crevequer, under whom the family of Boys or Boso§ obtained an intermediate seignory. Amongst the small fees of Moreton in the scutage of 19 Hen. 3 (1234), Hugh Favell was assessed 16s. 8d. for one in "Weston" of the fees of Nicholas de Haversham[b], of Haversham in Buckinghamshire, who married Emma, sister of Ernald de Bosco; and in the same record, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), John Favel and Richard Griffin are certified to hold two parts of a small fee in Weston of the fees of Ernald de Bosco[c]. In the book of knight's fees, 24 Edw. 1 (1295), John Favel (lately deceased) was found to hold Weston, by service of one fee, of the heirs of Nicholas de Haversham, who held of Robert (Ernald) de Boys, and he of Robert de Crevequer, who held from the king in capite[d]: in 10 Edw. 3 (1336), sir William de la Plaunch, one of the coheirs of Haversham, died seised of one fee in Weston, in tenure of sir John Griffin, held of William Zouch, of Harringworth, the other coheir of Boys, as of his manor of Claybrook in Leicestershire[e].

Favell or Griffin Manor. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Richard de Weston was returned to have four hides in Weston[f], one division of which descended to the family of Favell, who held also two fees in Walcote and Southorp in this county, and Hibaldstone in Lincolnshire, of the abbey of Peterborough. In 17 Joh. (1215) a writ was directed to the sheriff of Northamptonshire to deliver to Robert de Roylecart all the lands late belonging to John Favell if they were worth £20. yearly, and if not, other lands in his bailiwick to that amount[g]; but in the following year, 1 Hen. 3, they were restored to him on returning to his fealty[h]. In 13 Edw. 1 (1284), John Favell, son of sir Hugh Favell, gave his manor of Weston near Northampton, to his son John Favell and his wife Catherine Bawd; for which marriage her father, sir Robert de Bawd, agreed to give the said John Favell 160 marks[i]. On the extinction of the male line by the death of sir William Favell s. p. in 1316, the whole of the original estate of Richard de Weston, became united in



Sir John Griffin, who enjoyed one portion by inheritance, and the other in right of his wife, the heiress of Favell, agreeably to the annexed pedigree, which will be continued under Braybrook, where the family established their residence when they succeeded to the extensive possessions of the Latimers. Sir Thomas Griffin of Braybrook, the seventh in lineal descent from the above sir John, by his will, dated 25 Ap. 8 Eliz. (1566), devised his manor of Weston Favell (int. al.) to trustees for the life of his son Thomas Griffin, with remainder in special tail male "by his second wife which he hereafter shall fortune to marrye," and in default to his brother Edward Griffin of Dingley, in tail male; but by the inquisition after his death the following year, Mary Markham, wife of Thomas Markham, daughter of Rice Griffin his eldest son, was found to be his heir general[k]. Edward Griffin, esq. died 16 Dec. 12 Eliz. (1569), seised of this manor, and was succeeded by his son and heir Edward Griffin[l], who appears to have entered into an amicable arrangement with the Markhams, for, in 5 Jac. (1607), he joined the above Thomas Markham, of Allerton in Nottinghamshire, esq. and Mary his wife, in a fine and recovery of this manor; and the same year Mary Markham, then a widow, conveyed it to Henry Travell, gent. in fee[m].

FAVELL AND GRIFFIN OF WESTON FAVELL.

From Vincent's MSS. 113. Coll. Arm. and Antiq. Soc. MSS. 60. collated with other authorities.

Arms. FAVELL. Argent, a bend within a border Gules, bezantée. GRIFFIN. Sable, a griffin segreant Argent.

The Travells entered their pedigree in the visitation of 1618, and bore for their arms, per pale Azure and Gules, on a bend Or between two eagles displayed Argent three mullets Sable; on a chief of the fourth three garbs Vert. Henry Travell, the purchaser of this manor, was 5th son of Alexander Travell, of Weston, gent. and is denominated of Coventry in the pedigree; he only retained his newly acquired property nine years, for, in 14 Jac. (1617), he conveyed it by feoffment to Alexander Ekins, esq. in fee[m]. His successor, of both names, was deputy to James earl of Northampton, master of the leash to Charles 2; and the earl's warrant, announcing the appointment "to all Justices of Peace, "Maiors, Sherriffs, Bayliffs, Constables, and other his Majesties Officers and Ministers to whome it shall or may "appertain," is a curious memorial of an exploded arbitrary custom: after the preamble reciting his own authority, it proceeds, "Now know yee, that I the said James Earle of Northampton, master of his said Ma'ties said "Leash, have licensed and authorized Alexander Ekins, of Weston Favell, in the county of Northampton, esq. "to bee my deputy and assignee during the will and pleasure of mee the s[d] Earle of Northampton, to take to his "Ma'ties use, and in his Ma'ties name, within all places within tenne miles any way of Weston Favell aforesaid, "as well within franchises and libertyes as without, such and so many greyhounds, both doggs and bitches, in "whose custody soever they bee, as the said Alexander Ekins shall thinke meete and convenient for his Ma'ties "disport and recreation, and in such and as ample manner and forme, as I the said Earle of Northampton may "or might have done. And likewise I the said Earle of Northampton doe hereby authorize and depute the said "Alexander Ekins by himself and his serveants, to seize and take away all such greyhounds, beagles, or whippetts, as may any way be offensive to his Ma'ties game and disport, as fully and amply as I my selfe, by virtue "of the said authority, may doe; I the said Earle of Northampton ratifying and allowing whatsoever the said "Alexander Ekins shall lawfully, by virtue of the said l'res patent, and this my deputation or assignement, doe "and execute." Dated 26 Mar. 18 Car. 2 (1665), and signed NORTHAMPTON[n]. In 1726 Hervey Ekins, esq. settled the manor of Weston, and Tyringham's manor in Weston, with the mansion-house, and all his lands, except those which he had given in marriage with Elizabeth-Piers, his eldest daughter, then deceased, on Justinian Ekins, esq. and Rebecca his wife, only surviving daughter of the grantor, in fee: which Justinian having reunited the estate by purchasing the Piers portion in 1762, by his will in 1765 gave the whole to his nephews Hervey Ekins, and Justinian, William, and Robert Kerry, successively in tail male. By the determination of these interests, the reversion in fee becoming vested in Mrs. Elizabeth-Ellen Ekins, under the will of her late husband, Hervey Ekins, esq. in 1796, she, by a codicil to her will in 1803, devised it in trust to be disposed of, and the proceeds to be divided amongst the representatives of her husband's sisters in specified proportions; and the performance of the trust being confirmed by a decree of chancery, the estate was sold in 1814 for £23,970. Edward Bouverie, of Delapré, esq. purchased the two principal farms, and Mr. Thomas Butcher, solicitor, of Northampton, the manors in gross.

Honor of Chokes. At the domesday survey John held under Gunfrid de "Cioches," or Chokes, half a virgate in "Westone," which was in the hands of a villein with three beasts[o]. It occurs in some of the early inquisitions of the Prestons[p] who held Little Billing from this honor, and at a later period, probably with a small addition from the Kingsthorp fee, constituted Tyringham's Manor; but though named from that family, I have met with no direct proof of its having been in their possession, and can only inferentially connect them with it. In 1 Hen. 8 (1509), Richard Heigham and Anne his wife levied a fine (int. al.) of a moiety of Weston Favell manor called Tyringham's manor to Thomas Edon and others[q]; and in 38 Hen. 8, Thomas Edon and others passed it by fine to John Damport[r]. The Tyringhams are said to have been again lords of this manor in the reign of James 1, at which time they were resident here, and entered their pedigree in the visitation of 1618.

Ancient demesne. At the domesday survey a hide and a half and a bovate in Moulton and Weston Favell were appendant to the manor of Kingsthorp*; and in 18 Ric. 2 (1394), Aland de Stokes, clerk, died seised of five messuages, one carucate and a quarter of land, and 30s. rent in Weston Favell, held of the king in capite by service of 8d. yearly to the manor of Kingsthorp; and Matilda, wife of William Smith of Stoke Albany, daughter of his sister Emma, and Agnes, wife of Thomas Knight of Kelmarsh, daughter of his sister Joan, were his heirs, and of full age[t].

Francis Hervey, esq. brother of Stephen already mentioned, had a considerable estate here, which was purchased by William Thursby, esq. and has descended with Abington to J. H. Thursby, esq.[u]

St. Andrew's Priory had the advowson of this church of the gift of Richard de Weston, who also, by his will, bequeathed to the prior and convent a virgate of land in Weston, his palfrey and harness and saddles of all kinds, and his barn and ten measures of corn therein to make wafers, &c.; also seven silver spoons, and a silver cup with a carved or ornamented border, and a silver gilt ring[x]. In 45 Hen. 3 (1260), Hugh Favell and Richard Griffin levied a fine of the church and tithes of Weston to the prior and convent, which they further confirmed to them the following year, as of the gift of their ancestor sir Richard de Weston[z].

Mansions. At the commencement of the last century there were three mansions in this village, not one of which was remaining at its close. The residence of the Ekins family immediately south of the Wellingborough road, and of the Herveys in the road leading to Little Billing, are still marked by the walled inclosures. The mansion of sir John Holman, bart. with about 10 acres attached, comprizing the whole of his property in the parish, stood in a field south of the parsonage. It passed from his widow to lady Twisden, of whom it was purchased, in 1724, by Mr. Thomas Gooding and Mr. Robert Peach, of Northampton, who soon after pulled it down.

The Village is between two and three miles east from Northampton, skirted by the turnpike road to Wellingborough. In the time of Bridges it consisted 'of about fifty families[y].' By the census of 1801 it contained 64 houses and 354 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 70 houses and 350 inhabitants. The statute for hiring servants for the hundred of Spelho, has been lately removed here from Kingsthorp. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £96. 16s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2261. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £328. 16s. at 8s. in the £. The wake follows St. Peter.

The Advowson, though given to the priory of St. Andrew at Northampton, was never appropriated. After the dissolution it was probably granted to sir Thomas Brudenell of Deene, who died seised of it in 1549[z]. A recovery was suffered of the advowsons of Weston Favell, Collingtree, and Milton, 28 Car. 2 (1676), to the use of Francis Hervey for life, remainder to his son William Hervey, and the heirs of the survivor, to whom the two former advowsons lineally descended till the death of the rev. James Hervey, s. p. in 1758, when they were directed by the will of his father in 1748 to be sold for the benefit of his surviving children; but by a family arrangement in 1777 it was agreed that the rev. Robert Knight and Mary his wife should take the advowson of Weston, and William and James Hervey, grandsons of the testator, the advowson of Collingtree, which, however, they subsequently sold to the said Robert Knight, who gave it to his daughter in marriage, and the advowson of Weston passed to his son, the rev. R. H. Knight, the present patron and incumbent*.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Haddon. In the taxation of pope Nicholas, in 1291 (20 Edw. 1), it is rated at £6. per ann.[b]; and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £17. 6s. 8d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[c]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that "Weston Favell" was a parsonage presentative worth £70. per ann. in the gift of Francis Hervey, esq. and that Lucas Ward the incumbent was resident[d]. The rectorial land consists of 104 a. 2 r. 13 p. allotted at the inclosure in lieu of glebe and of all tithes whatsoever. The parsonage, a neat brick building pleasantly situated west of the church, was built by the rev. James Hervey, who did not live to inhabit it. Considerable additions have been made to it by the late and present incumbents.

In 1739 Park hill close, containing 3 acres, was purchased by the trustees with money given by Justinian Ekins, esq. and Rebecca his wife, and W. Ekins Piers, esq. for the augmentation of the master's salary. By a decree of chancery in 1819, the salary of the master was further augmented, the number of children increased to 15 boys and 12 girls, and the apprentice premium raised to £20. The endowment (exclusive of the school-house), consists of 19 a. 16 p. and the present income is £45. 14s. per ann.[1] The school house is situated at the entrance of the village on the north side of the Wellingborough road.

Lady Holman's charity now lets for £14. per ann.

Newbottle Grove Hundred.

In domesday "Nivebotlegrave, Neubotle grave, Niwebotlegrave, Niwebotle, Niwebold, Nivebot, and Niwebolt," derives its name from Newbottle grave, or wood, in the parish of Brington.

This hundred is bounded on the north and north-west by Guilsborough hundred; west by Fawsley hundred; south by Towcester hundred; and east by Spelho hundred; and consists of the following parishes and hamlets: Brampton, Church (including Chapel Brampton); Brington (including Great and Little Brington, Newbottle, Althorp, and part of Clasthorp); Brockhole (including Muscote); Bugbrook; Dallington (including the north side of St. James's End); Duston (including the south side of St. James's End); Flore (including part of Clasthorp); Haddon, East; Harleston; Harpole; Heyford, Nether (including Upper Heyford); Holdenby; Kislingbury; Ravensthorp (including Teton; and Coton in Guilsborough hundred); Upton (a parochial chapelry to St. Peter's, Northampton); and Whilton.

In the saxon certificate[a], "Neovboele grave" was divided into two half hundreds; one of which was thane land rated (or taxed) and consisted of 45 hides deducting a half yard (or half virgate); and the other contained 22 hides of inland (or demesne) and 33 hides and a half yard of waste, making a total of 100 hides: and thus it was in the days of king Edward the confessor[b].

The bailiwick of this hundred was annexed to the manor of Upton, and granted to Robert Fitz-Sewin by Henry 2[c], to hold by sergeanty of finding a servant to execute the sheriff's writs within the hundred in behalf of the king, and rendering to the sheriff 13s. 4d. yearly for the profits[d]. In that portion of the Testa de Nevill compiled about 20 Hen. 3 (1235), John Cancellis, or Chanceux, was certified to hold the manor of Upton with the hundred thereto belonging by sergeanty*. His son Hugh Chanceux incurred a forfeiture to the crown, when the hundred was probably annexed to the manor of Newbottle; for Margaret countess of Derby gave the manor and hundred of Newbottle, with the advowson of Brington, to her son William de Ferrars by deed without date; but being witnessed by John abbot of St. James's, fixes the time within three years, as he presided only from 1266 to 1269[e]. It appears however to have been soon after resumed by the crown, and by charter 29 Edw. 1 (1292), the king granted the hundred of Newbottle grove to Thomas Chanceux[z], to hold as freely and by the same services as his father Hugh previous to his forfeiture. The following year he impleaded the sheriff for encroaching on his privileges, when the above grant was confirmed, and a writ issued to the sheriff to permit him to enjoy all the immunities belonging to the bailiwick[h]. From this period it has uninterruptedly descended with the manor of Upton down to Thomas Samwell Watson Samwell, esq. the present lord, but no hundred court has been held for several years past.

BRAMPTON

PARISH includes Church and Chapel Brampton. In domesday it is written "Brantone," and may possibly be compounded of the saxon bpan, burnt, and tone, town, which may be allusive either to the colour of the soil, or to the village having been built on the scite of a former one destroyed by fire. The lordship was inclosed by private agreement in the reign of Charles 2, and Church and Chapel Brampton were divided by a deed dated 26 Mar. 1670[a]. It is bounded on the north by Brixworth in Orlingbury hundred, and Spratton in Spelho hundred; on the east by the Naseby branch of the Nen, which divides it from Pitsford and Boughton in Spelho hundred; on the south by Kingsthorp in Spelho hundred, and Dallington; and west by Harleston and Holdenby.

CHURCH BRAMPTON consists of about 1140 acres, of which about 770 acres are the property of earl Spencer, and the rector in right of his church has about 332 acres. The soil is principally a brownish or reddish loam on a loose stoney under stratum, but the north west part of the field is what is termed black land or harsh clay. There is about 100 a. of heath bordering on Dallington. The following scarce plants have been found here. Galium procumbens, trailing Goose-grass. Erica vagans, Cornish Heath. Onopordum Acanthium, Cotton Thistle. Thymus Acinor, Basil Thyme. Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock. Rumex pulcher, Fiddle Dock. Chelidonium majus, common Celandine. Geranium rotundifolium, Round-leaved Cranes-bill. Vinca minor, Small Periwinkle. Inula dysenterica, middle Flea-bane. Rosa arvensis, corn Rose. Malva moschata, musk Mallow. Both the mills mentioned in domesday are in Chapel Brampton.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. BARONY OF DYVE. "Brantone," at the Domesday survey, was one of the manors retained by the earl of Moreton in his own possession, and contained four hides deducting five acres. The arable land was eight carucates; in demesne was one hide with two ploughs and two servants; and three carucates and a half were distributed amongst three villeins, five bordars, and twelve socmen. The mill was worth 28s. yearly, and there was ten acres of meadow and five acres of underwood. The whole had been rated at 60s. yearly in the time of Edward the confessor, but was now raised to 100s. yearly. Half a hide of the land was the property of Ulmar in the time of the confessor: all the rest then lay and now continues in (the soke of) Creton and (East) Haddon[b]. In a subsequent entry Ulmar is recorded as holding under the earl of Moreton the half hide of land in "Brantone," of which he had been the saxon proprietor, the arable land of which was one carucate, valued at 20s. yearly[c]. On the confiscation of the Moreton estate, both the Bramptons were included in that portion which was subsequently held of the honor of Leicester, parcel of the duchy of Lancaster; subordinate to which they formed part of Hugh Dyve's barony of EAST HADDON. In 4 Joh. (1202), Hugh Dyve claimed against Henry Dyve, his mesne tenant, the service of inclosing a certain hay upon the vallum of the king's castle of Pevensey in Sussex, being the alleged tenure appertaining to a knight's fee which he holds of him in Brampton in the county of Northampton. Henry denied that his fee was chargeable with the service, and put himself on the great assize[d]. A day was assigned, and in the following year Hugh renewed his claim, and offered to prove his allegation by one Ralph, the associate of Henry in the service. Henry protested against any other than the ordinary service of a knight's fee, which he acknowledged to be due from him to the said Hugh[e], and no ulterior proceedings are recorded. By inquisition 25 Edw. 1 (1296), after the death of Edmond (Crouchback) earl of Lancaster, Walter Ratinden (a coheir of Dyve), held half a fee in Brampton, value £3. 10s. per ann. and Alice de Musegros (another coheir) two fees and a half in Brampton Magna, Brampton Parva, and East Haddon, value £17. 10s. per ann.[f]; and in 5 Hen. 5 (1417), Lisle's manor with the advowson, were found to be held of Reginald Ragon as of his manor of East Haddon[g].

Roger Quincy earl of Winchester, whose father divided the earldom of Leicester with Montfort, appears to have had a share in these fees, for it was found that William Rocelin, possibly husband of John Musegros's widow, held of him two fees and a half in Brampton[h], which descended to Ferrers of Groby‡, in whose inquisitions they occur as late as the reign of Hen. 6[i].

DYVE or NEVILL MANOR. Henry Dyve the mesne lord of Brampton, and Hugh Dyve who claimed the feudal services, were probably of one common origin, as well as the Dyves of Wyke Dyve or Wicken, with whom this family has been erroneously identified[k], though they bore different arms, and the contemporary christian names do not correspond. In 17 Joh. (1215), a precept was directed to the sheriff to deliver the lands of the late William Dyve in "Branton" to the custody of Robert Nevill[l]; and another the same year describing them as the lands of Henry Dyve, perhaps a minor, as they were granted to be held only during pleasure[m]. This Henry Dyve, lord of both Bramptons, and of Oxendon and other manors in Glocestershire, unfortunately killed a servant of sir Robert Treaunt, or Tryan, the king's chamberlain, for which offence his body and lands were consigned to the mercy of sir Robert, who retained the whole of his estate except the moiety of Little or Chapel Brampton[n]; where he afterwards resided, and of which place his descendants were usually designated till they acquired Harleston and Quinton, between which places they divided their residence, but at length deserted this county on obtaining Bromham in Bedfordshire with the heiress of Wyld.

DYVE AND PICOT OF BRAMPTON.

Sir Robert Treaunt was succeded by his sister and heiress, who carried Brampton in marriage to Ralph de la Hay, of Layer de la Hay in Essex, who is certified, in 25 Hen. 3 (1240), to hold a fee and a half in the two Bramptons of Simon Montford of the honor of Leicester[o]; and by inquisition 38 Hen. 3 (1253), he died seised of certain manors in Essex and Sussex, and of Brampton and Holdenby manors, held by the courtesy of England of the heir of Eustachia his (late) wife[p]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1275), the jurors of the hundred presented that "Christiana de Neyvil," widow of sir Robert de Nevill, and daughter and heiress of sir Ralph de la Hay, had appropriated to herself a free and several fishery in the water which divides the fields of Boughton and "Brampton," which used to be in common[q]. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315), Philip Nevill was returned lord of both Bramptons[r], and the same year levied a fine of Great Brampton manor to the use of Philip Nevill his son[s], from whom, or his immediate representative, I apprehend it passed to the family of Holt *.

Arms. De la Hay. Argent, on a fess Gules, between six martlets Sable, two mullets of the field. Nevill. Gules, three fusils in fess Argent, within a border engrailed Or.

This manor was included in those restored, in 14 Ric. 2 (1390), to John Holt, son of sir John Holt, one of the justices of common pleas, who had been attainted and banished[t]; and in 6 Hen. 5 (1418), he died seised (int. al.) of the manor in Church Brampton called Nevill's manor, held of the heirs of Philip de Nevill by service unknown *. On the extinction of the Holts it vested in their heir general,

Simon Norwich, of Brampton by Dingley, esq. and by an office taken 4 Hen. 8 (1512), after the death of John Norwich, esq. it was found to be held by the same tenure as above, and valued at £10. per ann.[x] It appears to have been sold by one of this family to the Dyves, for, by inquisition 34 Eliz. (1592),

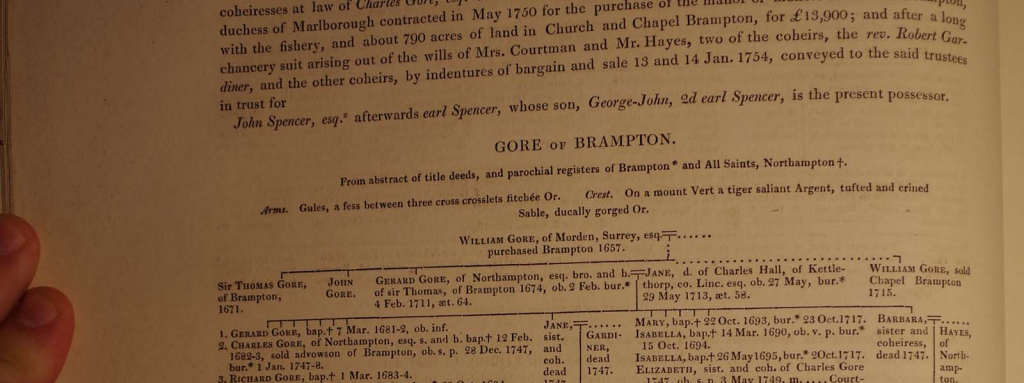
Sir Christopher Hatton, late lord chancellor*, is stated to have recently purchased it of sir Lewis Dyve, and its estimated value was raised to £14. 11s. 8d. per ann.[y] Sir Christopher died seised also of Picot or Cecil's and Tresham's manors in Church Brampton, and Dyve's, Green's, and Nevill's manors in Chapel Brampton[z]; all of which, with his other settled estates, on the failure of male issue in his adopted nephew and heir sir William Newport, alias Hatton, devolved, by the provisions of his will, to his godson sir Christopher Hatton †, whose son, lord Hatton, sold them by indenture 17 Dec. 1657, to



William Gore, esq.[z] In his family they descended, according to the annexed pedigree, to the four sisters and coheiresses at law of Charles Gore, esq. with whom, or their representatives, the trustees under the will of Sarah duchess of Marlborough contracted in May 1750 for the purchase of the manor or manors of Church Brampton, with the fishery, and about 790 acres of land in Church and Chapel Brampton, for £13,900; and after a long chancery suit arising out of the wills of Mrs. Courtman and Mr. Hayes, two of the coheirs, the rev. Robert Gardiner, and the other coheirs, by indentures of bargain and sale 13 and 14 Jan. 1754, conveyed to the said trustees in trust for

John Spencer, esq.[z] afterwards earl Spencer, whose son, George-John, 2d earl Spencer, is the present possessor.

Picot Manor. Henry Dyve, previously to the forfeiture of his estates, gave a fourth part of Great Brampton, with the advowson of the church, to Pouncey Picot in free marriage with his daughter[a]. In 4 Edw. 1 (1275), the jurors of the hundred presented that Peter Picot, grandson of Pouncey, had exercised the privileges of free warren in "Magna Brampton" for twenty-four years past, but they knew not on what authority[b]; and in 24 Edw. 1 (1295), he was certified to hold half a fee here of the earl of Leicester[c]. His son, John Picot, sold his manor and advowson of Brampton to Mast. Peter de Leyk, the rector, who conveyed them to sir Robert Peverel ‡, against whom a counter-claim was established by Alice, successively the wife of sir Gerard de Lisle, and Nicholas lord Segrave, to whom it had been demised by her father Geoffrey de Armenters §, who had been enfeoffed in them by Peter Picot on marrying his daughter[a]. '[d] In 'the 9th of Edw. II. a fine was levied of lands in Great Brampton, and of the advowson of the church, by Maud 'de Segrave;' (or rather, I suspect, to her in joint settlement with Edmund Bohun:) and 'in the third year of 'Edw. 3 an action was brought by Edmund Peverel, in the court of common pleas, against Edmund de Bohun and 'Maud his wife, for the recovery of one messuage, two caracates of arable land, eight acres of meadow, a rent-'charge of lxs. a year, and the advowson of the church of Great Brampton, as parcell of the manor of Great 'Brampton claimed by the said Edmund Peverel[e]. The premises were likewise claimed by sir Gerard de L'Isle, 'knight, but the said sir Gerard making default, the cause did not come to an hearing;' to him, however, they subsequently resorted by heirship, on the decease of the aforesaid Maud s. p. and thenceforward accompanied the other Lisle property as detailed under Stowe. On the division of the last lord Latimer's possessions amongst his four coheiresses, this manor was included in the property of the second daughter, Elizabeth, wife of sir Thomas Cecil, afterwards earl of Exeter ‖, who joined with her husband in conveying it to sir Christopher Hatton[f].

Tresham Manor. There was another manor evidently formed out of and subordinate to the last, being held of the heirs of lord Latimer by fealty and 6d. rent[g]. The first mention of this estate under the description of eight messuages, 18 virgates of land, 20 acres of meadow, and 5s. and a pound of cummin rent, occurs in two grants to John Donn, one of the esquires of the body to king Edw. 4, on the attainder of sir Thomas Tresham of Sywell[h]. Entails being exempt from confiscation till the statute 4 Hen. 8, this grant, I conceive, was rendered null by the inquisition 17 Edw. 4 (1477), which found that sir Thomas Tresham prior to his delinquency, by deed 36 Hen. 6 (1457), had vested this and other manors in feoffees to the use of Margaret his wife for life, with remainder to John his son and heir[i], who, in the succeeding reign, obtained a reversal of his father's attainder, and the restitution of all his possessions[k], and whose great grandson, sir Thomas Tresham of Rushton, sold this manor to sir Christopher Hatton[l].

No manorial courts are held.

St. James's Abbey had lands in Brampton, rated at 10s. per ann. in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[m], and in 38 Hen. 8 (1546), William Hatton of Holdenby, died seised of 20 acres of pasture and 40 acres of heath in Church Brampton, late parcel of this abbey[n].

The Village is about five miles distant from Northampton. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'twenty-six houses, with one inn-ship in the grounds[o].' By the census of 1801 it contained 32 houses and 173 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 33 houses and 150 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £82. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1338. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £305. 15s. at 5s. in the £. 'The wake is not observed.'

The Advowson has been partly anticipated in the manorial history. It subsequently passed from the Hattons to the Gores, and was sold by Charles Gore, esq. to the rev. Joseph Knapp, of whom it was purchased for £1000. under the will of Arthur Parsons, M. D. who bequeathed £3000. to be invested in advowsons for the benefit of Corpus Christi college, Oxford[p].

The Rectory is in the deanry of Haddon. It is valued at 23 marks (£15. 6s. 8d.) per ann. in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[q], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[r]; and in the ecclesiastical survey, or king's books, 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £26. 10s. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[s]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified that it was a parsonage presentative worth £110. per ann. in the patronage of sir Thomas Hatton (in trust); and that John Ventriss the incumbent, presented by the lords commissioners of the great seal, was resident[t]. The rector has 332 a. 2 r. 37 p. of land in lieu of the glebe, and of all tithes whatsoever in Church and Chapel Brampton. The parsonage is a large irregular building, standing in a close south of the church-yard.

Thomas Canon was reinstated in his benefice, and soon after became a prebendary of Carlisle, and a residentiary or prebendary of York. During his ejectment he had officiated as chaplain in the king's army under the earl of Northampton. He died, and was buried here 26 Mar. 1668[c], upon which a contest arose respecting a successor between sir Thomas Gore, the mortgagee of the advowson, who presented John Proctor, B. In 1670 Rolfe obtained the rectory of Stoke Bruern, which he continued to hold with this benefice, and was buried there 6 Sept. 1693. He was succeeded by

The Register commences in 1561.

The Church stands at the western extremity of the village, and consists of an embattled tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The windows of both aisles are of the 14th century and uniform, having two mullions with three quatrefoils in the head, and a dripstone terminating with corbels. The chancel is of later erection, and all the windows are square-headed, those on the south side having a row of quatrefoils above the mullions. The tower is 14 ft. 1 in. long, by 8 ft. 8 in. wide; the nave and aisles are 52 ft. 8 in. long, the nave 15 ft. 10 in. and the aisles 12 ft. 4 in. each wide; and the chancel 37 ft. 4 in. long, by 16 ft. 5 in. wide. The interior is only partially pewed, many of the old horizontal benches remaining. The nave is divided from each aisle by four widely pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals; and from the chancel by an open arch. The font is a large circular shaft and bason. At the east end of the north aisle is a stone staircase which formerly led to the rood-loft.

CHAPEL BRAMPTON,

An ecclesiastical chapelry to Church Brampton, but in its civil capacity a separate parish, maintaining its own poor and appointing its own officers, is situated in the eastern part of the lordship of Church Brampton, to which it is superior in point of extent; containing about 1260 acres, the whole of which, with the exception of about five acres, is the property of earl Spencer. The soil is nearly similar to Church Brampton, with a greater proportion of meadow and grazing land. The following scarce plants have been found here. Colchicum autumnale, meadow Saffron, abundantly near the bridge. Scrophularia nodosa, knobby-rooted or great Fig-wort. Polygonum minus, creeping Snakeweed. Rumex palustris, yellow marsh Dock. Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock. Poterium Sanguisorba, Burnet. Stellaria glauca, glaucous-leaved Marsh-Stitchwort. Stellaria uligonosa, bog Stitchwort. Galium procumbens, trailing Goose-grass. Cotyledon umbelicus, common Navel-wort. Prunus avium, black Cherry tree. The north or Naseby head of the Nen first assumes the name of the river in this lordship, and at the point of junction with Boughton is crossed by a long stone bridge, three arches of which formerly belonged to each parish, but the whole is now kept in repair by the commissioners of the Welford road. Of the two mills, the upper one is used as a corn-mill; the lower one, near the bridge, is not now worked, but the house is still standing.

Dyve Manor. It will be recollected that when Henry Dyve forfeited his possessions, he was permitted to retain a moiety of Little Brampton; and in the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), he is certified to hold half a fee in "Branton Parva," of the fees of Simon Montfort of the honor of Leicester[a]. By his distribution of this property it was subsequently converted into two distinct manors. On the marriage of Robert Dyve, his second son, with Mabel Whelton, he settled on them in fee tail a moiety of all his lands and tenements here, reserving to himself the capital messuage, in which he resided, near the chapel[b]. The other moiety was inherited by Ralph Dyve, his eldest son, on whose decease s. p. it devolved to his said brother Robert, who sold it to John de Bukton[c]. His great grandson, Henry Dyve, was found by inquisition 10 Edw. 3 (1336), to hold in "Brampton Parva" four messuages and seven and a half virgates of land, parcel of the manor of East Haddon, of John de Rutingden, the mediate lord between him and the earl of Lancaster, by the service of the fourth part of a fee[d]. William Dyve, esq. died seised of it (int. al.) 30 Hen. 8 (1538), and was succeeded by his son Lewis Dyve, aged 20 years[e].

Bucton or Green Manor. 'In the third year of Edw. 3, Ralph, the son of Richard le Dyve, released to 'sir Thomas de Bucton, kt. his heirs and assigns, all his rights in those lands, tenements, rents, and services in 'sir Thomas de Bucton, kt. his heirs and assigns, all his rights in those lands, tenements, rents, and services in 'aforesaid Ralph, and which John de Bukton, grandfather to sir Thomas de Bucton, had purchased of the said 'aforesaid Ralph, and which John de Bukton, grandfather to sir Thomas de Bucton, had purchased of the said 'Robert le Dyve.' The claim of this Ralph Dyve must have arisen from a settlement; certainly not by inheritance, and his point of connection with the subjoined pedigree is conjectural, but the place assigned him seems the most rational if not the only mode of reconciling the above statement of Bridges with the verified descent of the leading line. From sir Thomas de Bucton this manor followed the same course of inheritance as Boughton down to Anne, wife of sir Nicholas afterwards lord Vaux, 'who in the third year of Hen. 8 levied a fine of it.'

Nevill Manor. The Treaunt or Tryan moiety of Chapel Brampton remained with the Nevills till the extinction of the male line, when Maud, daughter and heiress of sir Philip Nevill, transferred it, with the extensive possessions of the family in the counties of Lincoln, Leicester, Derby, and Devon, in marriage to sir John Bussy, of Hougham in Lincolnshire, one of the leading ministers of the unfortunate Richard 2, in defence of whose cause he was taken prisoner and summarily beheaded at Bristol in 1399. On the accession of Hen. 4 a bill of attainder was passed against him[h], and his lands escheated to the king, who gave this manor, and Enderby in Leicestershire[i], another of the earliest Nevill estates—though the specific grant does not appear in the patent rolls—to his half-brother,

John Beaufort earl of Somerset, who, in 11 Hen. 4 (1409), died seised (int. al.) of a moiety of the manor of Brampton Parva, held of the king as of his honor of Leicester, and value 10 marks yearly[k]. The term moiety is here used merely to distinguish it from, and exclude the other moiety of the vill in the tenure of Dyve and Green, and includes the whole of the Nevill manor, which from this period attended the succession of Overston till they merged in the crown in the person of Henry 8. A rental of the manor of "Chappell Brampton" in the time of Elizabeth, remains in the land revenue office[l]; and in 17 Eliz. (1575), Christopher Hatton, esq. afterwards knighted and lord chancellor, "for his fidelity and acceptable services," obtained a grant in fee of the manor and lordship of Chapel Brampton, with mills, fishery, £11. 11s. 1½d. rents of assize, and advowson of the parish church of Chapel Brampton, to be held in socage by fealty only, and a fee farm rent of £20. 4s. 1½d. yearly[m]. From the Hattons all the above manors passed with Church Brampton to the Gores. In 1715 William Gore and John Gore, esqrs. sold the principal part of the estate to Mrs. Anne Isted[n], from whom it descended to Samuel Isted, esq. of Ecton, who sold it in 1793 to the present earl Spencer, who has subsequently purchased the remaining portion of this lordship.

ST. ANDREW'S PRIORY LANDS. Henry Dyve, by charter s. d. gave a virgate of land in "Bramton" to this priory, subject to the yearly rent of 3s. 6d. and eight hens to William de Huntyndon; and afterwards a second virgate of his demesne[o]. By deed between 18 and 29 Edw. 1, John de Boketon bound himself to pay to the prior (int. al.) 3s. yearly for lands in "Brampton Parva," formerly held by Robert de Huntyndon[p]. In the taxations, of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[q] and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[r], the temporalities and lands of this priory in "Brampton Minor" were rated at 4s. per ann.

MANOR HOUSE and CHAPEL. Bridges says, 'Here is supposed to have been formerly an antient manor 'house, in a close which still retains the name of Hall-close. Of the chapel, from which this village receives its 'name of distinction, there are no remains, and but a very imperfect tradition[s].' The site of the manor house is contiguous to the site of the chapel, and leaves no doubt therefore of its having been the mansion of the Dyves alluded to in Henry Dyve's grant to his son: the field is on the east side of the south entrance to the village, but is no longer generally known by the appellation of Hall-close. A small modern seat, late the property and residence of Mr. Pearce, now belongs to earl Spencer, and is in the occupation of William Rose-Rose, esq.

THE VILLAGE is four miles from Northampton, on the turnpike road to Leicester through Welford. In the time of Bridges it was 'an hamlet containing thirty houses and two water-mills.' By the census of 1801 it consisted of 31 houses and 170 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, of 35 houses and 168 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax is £85. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2238. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £283. 11s. 10d. at 3s. 6d. in the £.

BRINGTON

PARISH comprehends GREAT and LITTLE BRINGTON, NEWBOTTLE, ALTHORP, and part of CLASTHORP; and is bounded on the north by Long Buckby in Guilsborough hundred, East Haddon, and Holdenby; east by Harleston; south by Harpole and Flore; and west by Brockhole and Whilton.

Brington, in modern pronunciation Brighton, is written in domesday "Brinintone and Brintone." Many of the british names for hills, rivers, and other unchangeable objects of nature, are retained in local etymology: the derivation of this place may therefore be referred to the british bryn, a hill, or the saxon bpymm, brink, and tone, a town, i. e. the town on the hill or brink, either of which exactly accords with its situation.

Great and Little Brington were inclosed by act of parliament 16 Geo. 2 (1742), and contain, including the old inclosures, about 2210 acres; of which about 1490 acres belong to earl Spencer, about 326 acres to the rector in right of his church, and about 180 acres to the feoffees of the town land. The soil is in general a dark coloured loam, with a small tract of clay towards the north. Nearly four-fifths of the whole field is pasture and feeding land. The following scarce plants have been found here. Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock. Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Salvia verbenaca, wild Sage or Clary. Geranium dissectum, jagged Crane's-bill. Epilobium tetragonum, square-stalked Willow herb. Viburnum lantana, Wayfaring-tree. Ophioglossum vulgatum, Adder's-tongue.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PEVEREL FEE. Brington, though ecclesiastically the head of the parish, yet in its civil relations is a member of Newbottle, and is thus surveyed in domesday amongst the other berewicks of that manor. In "Brinintone" William Peverel has an hide and a half. The arable land is two carucates. There are six socmen there, with a priest, who has half a hide of the said land[t]. That this estate continued in its original dependance is evident from a curious undated agreement about the time of Edw. 1, by which sir William de Ferrars retained Nicholas de Grendale to serve him in all places for life, on payment of 100s. yearly rent out of "Cherche Brynton" within the manor of "Neubottle"." Being included in the demesne lands, it is seldom specifically named in the inquisitions post mortem, but the advowson is in various records expressly stated to be parcel of the manor of Newbottle*.

MORETON FEE*. BARONY OF KEYNES†. At the domesday survey, William (ancestor of the family of Keynes) held of the earl of Moreton half a hide in "Brintone." The arable land was three carucates, of which one was in demesne with two servants; and three villeins and two bordars had two carucates. Aluric held one virgate freely before the conquest, and the other virgate was in the soke of the earl's manor of Edone (East Haddon). The whole had been rated at 5s. but was then quadrupled in value[v]. In the Testa de Nevill about 20 Hen. 3 (1235), the heirs of Richard de Brinton are certified to hold two parts of a fee in "Brintonn," and the third part in Charwelton, of the barony of Richard de Keynes, of the small fees of Moreton[x]; and in a subsequent part the same fee was returned to be held by Agnes, daughter of Roger de Heyford[a], whose possessions will be found, under HARLESTON and HEYFORD, to have passed to Roseles, Lumley, and Bulmer, in marriage with her daughters and coheiresses. [b] In the twentieth of Edw. 3, upon levying the aid for the knighthood of the 'king's son, Margery de Bingham, John Cheynell, and John de Cotesbroke, accounted for a third part of one small 'fee in Brington of the fee of Keynes.' The share of Margery de Bingham, widow of sir Thomas de Bingham, was only held in dower, and the whole was the inheritance of Isabella, daughter of William le Fysshere, the wife of John de Cotesbroke of Northampton, with whom she joined, 23 Edw. 3 (1349), in levying a fine of a moiety of 14 messuages, a toft, 13 virgates and 12 acres of land, 13 acres of meadow, and 14s. rent, in "Chirche Brynton, West Brynton, Neubotle, and Horpol," to John Wolfe of Easton (Mauduit) in fee. In 11 Hen. 6 (1432), the feoffees of Nicholas de Rygely of Hawksyard (in Staffordshire) and Edith his wife (daughter and heiress of —— Waldeif), conveyed it to John Holdenby in fee-tail, from whose family it was purchased by the Spencers[c].

St. James's Abbey Lands. Roger, son of Ilbert de Paveley, with consent of his brothers Geoffrey and William, gave by deed s. d. all his lands in "Brinton," consisting of two virgates in demesne, and reserving a yearly rent of 32s. out of three other virgates, to the abbey of St. James, in consideration of 30 marks (£20.) in aid of his pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Robert Mauntell released his interest in the three virgates, and William Ferrars earl of Derby confirmed the whole grant, and all other lands of the abbey belonging to his fee in Newbottle, Harleston, and Flore, and remitted all services, except two suits yearly at his court of Newbottle, by deed dated at Buckby 19 Aug. 32 Hen. 3 (1248)[d]. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the temporalities of the abbey here were rated at 43s. 4d. per ann.[e]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) at 25s. per ann.[f] which decrease may be accounted for by some of the lands having been granted out in the interim at a small reserved rent. In the minister's accounts at the dissolution 30 Hen. 8 (1539), they were valued jointly with lands in Horton and other places[g].

Lenton Priory, near Nottingham, had rents in Brington and Flore, rated at 11s. 8d. per ann. in the taxations of 1254[h] and 1291[f].

Merkeyate Cell, near St. Alban's, had possessions here, which were granted (int. al.) 37 Hen. 8, to George Acworth and Edward Butler[i].

The Village of Great Brington is between seven and eight miles from Northampton, and from the point selected in the accompanying vignette combines a pleasing assemblage of rural objects. Bridges states, that 'the parish contains three townships or hamlets, Great Brington consisting of sixty-one houses, Little Brington 'of fifteen, Newbottle of twelve, and Althorp the magnificent seat of the earl of Sunderland[k].' By the census of 1801 this parish contained 159 houses and 772 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 155 houses and 787 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £266. 0s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5,549. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 was £1035. 0s. 9d. at 5s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin.

survey was probably the original glebe or endowment on the formation of the parish. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[l] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[m], this rectory is rated at 26 marks (£17. 6s. 8d.) per ann. and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £40. per ann.[n] The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that "Brinton Magna" was a parsonage presentative worth £120. per ann. in the patronage of lady Dorothy Spencer, and that Thomas Pierce the incumbent was resident[o]. The present rectorial rights in Great and Little Brington consist of 318 a. 9 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe and of all tithes of the open or common fields, about 8 a. of old inclosed glebe near the parsonage house, and the tithes of about 33 a. in Great Brington and 47 a. in Little Brington of homestead and old inclosures, when broken up or converted into tillage; in addition to which the rector has 31 a. 3 r. 34 p. in Newbottle, set out on the inclosure in lieu of all tithes and dues whatsoever; a modus of £7. 13s. 4d. per ann. for all tithes and dues arising out of Althorp; and a modus of £6. 2s. per ann. for that portion of Clasthorp which is within the parish of Brington. The parsonage-house, adjoining the south side of the church-yard, is stated by Evelyn to have been built by Dr. Jeffryes, a misnomer for Jessop, "and made fit for a person of Quality to live in, with gardens and all accommodations according therewith[p];" since which time, however, it has been in a gradual course of deterioration: a small addition has been made and the grounds improved by the present incumbent.

Robert de Mertinton, in palm week, 1250.

William de Grendon, priest, by sir William de Ferrars, 22 Nov. 1275.

John de Everdon, clerk, one of the barons of the exchequer, on the presentation of the king, the lands of Walter (de Langton) bishop of Coventry and Lichfield (grantee of the advowson for life), being then in his hands, 3 Edw. 2 (1309)[q].

Roger de Wyngefeld, chaplain, on the same presentation, 20 Dec. 1309.

Robert de Clypston, by the bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, 2 Jan. 1314-15. He was rector also of Church Brampton, which he resigned in 1317, but held this benefice till 1 Aug. 1331, when he exchanged for the rectory of Brisingham in Norfolk, with John de Clypston[r], presented by sir Henry de Ferrars, baron of Groby in Leicestershire. On his institution to Brisingham the preceding year, when only an acolyte, the bishop, in consideration of his youth, granted him a dispensation for non-residence, with licence to postpone taking deacon's or priest's orders, on condition of his being ordained subdeacon within a year, and of his certifying to the bishop every succeeding year the regularity of his life and conversation, and the progress he made in his studies[r].

Philip de Barton, clerk, by sir Thomas Ferrars, 17 Sept. 1344.

Thomas de Brembre, priest, by the king, as custos of the lands and heir of sir Henry Ferrars deceased, 3 Mar. 1344-5. He was appointed the following year chirographer of the common bench, and was also rector of Barnwell All Saints, and prebendary of Sutton in Lincoln. He exchanged this rectory with Geoffrey de Cornucam, of Exton, parson of Lantressan in Landaff diocese, 31 Mar. 20 Edw. 3 (1346)[q].

Adam de Carleton.

Geoffrey Lumbard, by the king as custos of the lands and heir of sir Henry Ferrars deceased, 20 Sept. 20 Edw. 3 (1346)[q].

Robert de Kendale of Nassyngton, Oct. 1347.

William de Eremyn, by the king, as custos of the lands and heir of sir William de Ferrars deceased, 22 Sept. 49 Edw. 3 (1375)[q]. He was probably the same person as William Eyremyn, or Armyne, rector of Castle Ashby from 1367 to 1401, in the chancel of which church a fine brass figure in ecclesiastical vestments, richly ornamented, still remains to his memory.

William de Hasilbech, by Henry Ferrars baron of Groby, 6 Sept. 1385. He was rector of Slipton 1368.

John Wynchester, priest, by the king, 14 May 1386.

Mast. William Esyngwalde, 19 Jan. 1390-1.

Nicholas Bubwyth, then vicar of Naseby, was ratified by the king in the rectory of Brington and prebend of Ryton in the diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, by pat. 10 July, 17 Ric. 2 (1393)[q], and confirmed rector of Brington by a papal bull 4 Feb. 1395-6. He soon resigned both his Northamptonshire benefices for more valuable preferments; in 1406 he was advanced to the bishopric of London, at which time he was a prebendary of Salisbury, master of the rolls, keeper of the privy seal, and lord treasurer; and in the two following years was successively translated to the sees of Salisbury and Bath and Wells.

Thomas Hardy occurs 13 Sept. 1398.

Henry Chicheley, clerk, by William Ferrars baron of Groby, 1 July 1400. He was afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, and founder of All Souls college in Oxford; but being a native of Higham Ferrers, an extended notice of him will be more appropriately placed there. On his promotion to the bishopric of St. David's, he was succeeded here by John Morehous, priest, on the presentation of the same patron, 11 Mar. 1410.

He had also the archdeaconry of Bucks and deanry of York, and distinguished himself as a zealous promoter of the reformation, and one of the most active commissioners for visiting the monasteries preparatory to their dissolution.

John Stokes, A.M. was presented by sir Nicholas Strelley, in trust for John Spencer, esq. a minor, and instituted 9 July 1544, vice Layton deceased. He survived but a few months, and Sir Nicholas Cooke, priest, rector of Wicken, was, on the presentation of the same trustee, instituted 18 Nov. 1544.

Robert Dunne, presented by John Marshe, esq. and inst. 23 Apr. 1559, on the death of the last incumbent, was inst. also to the rectory of Hardwick the same day and on the same presentation.

William Proctor, clerk, presented by Robert Spencer, esq. compounded for the first fruits 14 Feb. 1601[r]. Bridges introduces here '[s] Will. Chamberlayne, occur. 'Min. 1604,' and '[s] Tho. Campian, Rect. ob. 11 Aug. '1613;' but neither of them were rectors, for the former is expressly described as curate in 1604[t], and the entry of the burial of the latter is simply "minister of this church[t]," nor is he styled rector in his epitaph. Proctor exchanged the rectory of Wicken for Boddington in 1596, which he appears to have held with Brington till his death in 1627, when he was succeeded here by William Catelin, A.M. presented by William baron Spencer of Wormleighton, K.B. and instituted 19 Feb. 1627-8.

Thomas Pierce occurs 1656, D.D. 1660. Soon after the restoration he was appointed president of Magdalen coll. Oxford, where he had been educated, canon of Canterbury, and prebendary of Lincoln. He resigned his headship in 1672, was installed dean of Salisbury in 1675, and died at Tudworth in Wiltshire 28 Mar. 1691. Whilst resident here "he was much followed and admired for his smooth and edifying way of preaching." There was more, however, of the bitterness of gall than the smoothness of oil in his controversial writings. A list of his voluminous publications will be found in Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses. On his cession,

Constantine Jessop, of Magd. coll. Oxf. D.D. 1685, and inst. 4 May 1676, on the presentation of Robert earl of Sunderland, and obtained one of the prebends of Durham in 1686. He was buried here 16 Mar. 1695-6[t], when

Charles Trimnell, of New coll. Oxf. D.D. 1699, was presented by the same patron, and inst. 10 June 1696. He had resigned the rectory of Boddington the preceding April, and only retained this benefice about three years, vacating it for other preferments which followed in rapid succession till his elevation to the bishopric of Norwich in 1707, from whence he was translated to Winchester in 1721, and died in 1723. On his resignation he was succeeded by his curate[t],

Henry Downes, of New coll. Oxf. A.M. 1693, D.D. .... presented by the same patron, and inst. 12 May 1699. He was successively elevated to the Irish bishoprics of Killala in 1716, Elphin 1720, Meath 1724, and Derry 1726, and dying 14 Jan. 1734, was buried in St. Mary's church, Dublin. On his promotion to the episcopal bench, the king, by virtue of his prerogative, presented

William Trimnell, of King's coll. Camb. A.M. 1698, D.D. 1717, who was inst. 13 Mar. 1716-17. He was also rector of Wicken, and resigned both rectories in 1721, on his installation to the deanry of Winchester, when

Nicholas Clagett, of Christ's coll. Camb. A.M. D.D. 1705, vacated the rectory of Pulham in Norfolk for this benefice, on the presentation of Charles earl of Sunderland, and was inst. 5 Oct. 1721. He was archdeacon of Bucks, dean of Rochester, bishop of St. David's 1731, and Exeter 1742, and died in London 8 Dec. 1746. His translation to Exeter led to the advancement of his curate[t],

William Mayo, of Hart hall, Oxf. A.M. who was inst. 30 Sept. 1742, on the presentation of the king, p. h. v. by virtue of his prerogative. He was buried here 23 Oct 1775[t]; and

Benjamin Preedy, of Queen's coll. Oxf. D.D. was inst. 11 Dec. 1775, on the presentation of John earl Spencer, and soon after vacated the rectories of the abbey church, St. Alban's, and Dunton in Buckinghamshire. He died near Burnley in Lancashire 26 Aug. 1796[u], and was succeeded by his son,

James Preedy, of Queen's coll. Oxf. A.M. who was presented by George-John earl Spencer, and instituted 20 Sept. 1796; on whose cession, Lewis John Vigoureux, of Merton coll. Oxf. A.B. was inst. 1 Nov. 1799, on the presentation of the same patron.

The Register commences in 1560.

The Communion Plate consists of a cup, chalice and plate.

The Church, dedicated to the blessed virgin, stands at the north-east angle of the village, and consists of an embattled tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, modern south porch, chancel, and north chapel. The tower is flanked by corner buttresses of two stages, and has a corbel tablet below the battlements, which have a broad capping continued both vertically and horizontally. The windows of the south aisle are despoiled of their mullions and tracery, except the east and west windows, which have rectilinear tracery; at each end is a buttress terminating in triangular headed pediments. The figure of an ecclesiastic in stone was discovered a few years since, under an obtuse arch in this wall*, surmounted by a high pedimental canopy with finial of three faces, nearly similar to the heads of the buttresses, with which it may therefore be considered coeval. This tomb, which, from its exterior situation, is perhaps unique in this part of the kingdom—though parallel instances are occasionally met with in the north—cannot be appropriated with confidence, but may with some degree of probability be assigned to Roger de Wyngfield, who was rector here the beginning of the 14th century, about which period the erection of the present fabric may be dated, though destitute of any very decided characteristics. The windows of the north aisle are of two lights, headed with three quatrefoils. The chancel and north chapel were rebuilt by sir John Spencer, the purchaser of the estate, and afford one of the latest and chastest specimens of the Tudor style. The tower is 15 ft. 11 in. long, by 11 ft. 1 in. wide; the nave and aisles 70 ft. 8 in. long, the nave 19 ft. 1 in. the north aisle 13 ft. 2 in. and the south aisle 11 ft. 10 in. wide; the chancel and north chapel 40 ft. 10. in. long, the chancel 18 ft. 7 in. and the chapel 21 ft. 4 in. wide. The regular arrangement of low open benches with ornamented ends, in general use before the reformation, still prevails in the nave; but the east end and both the aisles are pewed. There is a neat gallery at the west end. At the west end of the north aisle, attached to one of the pillars, is a large circular font of two nearly equal divisions: the lower, or base, has three or four slight depressions, marked by a vertical moulding of four small open pyramids conjoined at the top—an ornament which preceded and probably gave rise to the beautiful four-leaved flower of the decorated english style—the upper division, or bason, has a series of rude arches, and is separated from the base by the nail-head moulding. The nave is divided from the north aisle by six pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals; and from the south aisle by the same number of arches springing from pillars of the same general outline as on the north, but loftier, and the faces slightly fluted or hollowed. At the east end of the south aisle is a piscina, and two brackets on each side of the window. The entrance to the chancel from the nave is through a wooden screen richly decorated with armorial bearings, and over the entablature under the arch is the spacious and handsome pew of the Spencer family. In the south wall of the chancel are two stone seats for the officiating priests, under two cinquefoil-headed arches divided by a plain pier; and to the east of them is a piscina. In the centre of the east window, which is of five lights, is a figure nearly the size of life, of St. John, with a lamb on a book resting on his left arm; and traces of painted glass remain in other parts of the window. The north chapel is divided from the chancel by three pointed arches completely built up with monuments, and from the north aisle by an arch closed with a wooden screen. It is lighted by three uniform windows, in some of which are arms and other relics of painted glass. There is a piscina at the east end of the south wall.

THE NORTH CHAPEL, or cemetery of the SPENCERS, exhibits an interesting and almost connected series of sepulchral memorials from the reign of Henry 8 to the present time. The two subjoined perspective views, for which the author is gratefully indebted to the present representative of this noble family, will give a more correct idea of the designs, grouping, and general effect of the coup d'œil, than could possibly be given by verbal description. The entrance from the chancel is at the east end, by a narrow space at the foot of an altar tomb, which, chronologically considered, claims priority of notice.

I. On it repose the recumbent effigies of sir John Spencer and his lady, Isabella Graunt. The knight is uncovered, and has strait hair short on the forehead; his head rests on his helmet; his feet on his gauntlets. He is in plate armour; with mail skirts, ornamented elbow gussets, and genouailles or knee-pieces, and jointed shoes with broad puckered toes; his tabard bears the arms of Spencer ancient, and a scarlet robe lined with green is fastened across his breast, and flows to his feet; a short dagger is at his right side, and a long sword at his left. The lady has a close reticulated head-dress, with long lappets; her hair braided in front, but flowing behind her shoulders to her waist; her necklace, with a heart appendant, encircles her neck, below which are suspended three gold chains; she is habited in a low long scarlet gown concealing her feet, over which is a white boddice bordered with gold, hollowed out at the sides; and on a girdle beneath hangs her rosary: an heraldic mantle, quartering Graunt and Ruding, is looped across her bosom with a tasselled cordon, and falls back to her feet. Beneath her head are placed two cushions; the hands of both figures are devotionally elevated. Over the tomb is raised an arched canopy of free stone flanked by pannelled turrets, with an elaborately enriched and purfled entablature. On the south side are three armorial shields; On the first, in the centre of the frieze, quarterly, Ar. and G. on the second and third quarters a fret O.; over all, on a bend S. three escallop shells of the field, Spencer; Crest, out of a ducal coronet O. a griffin's head Ar. gorged with a bar gemell G. between two wings erect of the second; with mantling and helmet. V. as No. II. and VI. Graunt and Ruding quarterly. The soffit of the arch is divided into three rows of pannels with quatrefoils at regular distances, and in the centre an angel supporting arms, VII. Spencer. Round the sides of the tomb are shields within quatrefoils; on the south side, VIII. Spencer, impaling, quarterly Erm. and paly of six O. and G. within a border Az. Knightley. IX. Spencer, differenced by a crescent. X. Knightley, impaling Spencer. At the east end, XI. Spencer, impaling Graunt. On the north side, XII. Paly of six Ar. and Az. Strelley, impaling Spencer. XIII. Ar. two lions passant S. crowned O. Catesby, impaling Spencer. XIV. Graunt, impaling Ruding. Within the soffit at the east end, below the arch, is the following inscription:

III. The centre arch is occupied with a sumptuous monument, gaudily gilt and painted, in memory of sir John Spencer and his lady, Catherine Kitson, whose figures are recumbent. The head of the knight is placed on his helmet and his feet on his gauntlets. His hair is cropt, leaving his ears and forehead exposed; and he has mustachios and a short beard. He is habited in a suit of plate armour, with a double frill round his neck in small plaits, and black trunk hose appearing below his surcoat; there is neither sword nor dagger at his side, but on his left arm is a small circular shield, charged with Spencer and the five quarterings on the tomb; and Spencer is repeated on the arms and breast of his surcoat. His lady reposes on flowered cushions with tassels. Her hair is filletted, and over her head is thrown an enormous hollow hood or calash, covered with folds converging to a point in the centre, and extending below her waist behind. She has on a white vest, laid in narrow regular plaits up to the throat, and finished with a large open frill in nebule folds; a boddice fitted to the shape, pointed at bottom and slightly open in front, falls over the shoulders, forming a cape, and terminating with a narrow fringe. A coverlid is spread over her, and rolled down to the waist, the sides being disposed like an heraldic mantling. The canopy is attached to the tomb, and has a pyramidal pillar at each angle; at the dexter end of the entablature is a moorhen proper, one of the ancient crests of Spencer; at the

IV. Opposite to the last, in front of the centre window, is a large monument for sir John Spencer and his lady, Mary Catelin. The table, which is unusually long and wide, leaving a considerable space between the two recumbent figures, has a square pilaster or pillar at each corner, supporting a lofty canopy, the soffit of which is coved, and decorated with roses on square pannels; and at each outer angle is a circular corinthian column of black marble with white capitals gilt, having shields on the dados of the pedestals. The knight is in an ornamented suit of plate armour, with trunk hose. Spencer is blazoned on his right and Spencer ancient on his left arm; and Spencer is repeated on his tabard. His hair is straight at the sides and short on the forehead; his beard falls over a double plaited ruff. His head is on his helmet, his feet on his gauntlets. His lady reposes on two flowered cushions. The whole of her dress is black, excepting a double plaited ruff which ornaments the top of a plain pointed boddice adapted to the shape, with a scolloped border at bottom and full jacket. The sleeves are puckered, and scolloped at the shoulders. Her hair is turned back, and a fluted hood encircles her head and neck. On the south side of the tomb are four shields. I. Spencer. V. Under the third or western arch is a sarcophagus altar tomb, on which are placed the recumbent effigies of Robert the first baron Spencer, and his lady, Margaret Willoughby. The baron is completely cased in a rich suit of plate armour, with helmet plumed and the visor up. On the tassettes are blazoned Spencer, and seven quarterings as in No. V. of the last tomb. He is girded with a leathern belt, from which was suspended a long straight sword, now loose and displaced. He has small mustachios, but no beard. His head rests on a high cushion; his feet are on his gauntlets, and beyond them is a talbot sejant Ar. eared S. The lady reclines on two flowered cushions, and over her head is a hood with beaded edge, similar in form but larger and still more outré than the one described in the third monument. Her hair is combed back at the sides and edged with pearls, but concealed on the forehead by a plain cap rounded in front and expanding at the ears. An heraldic counterpane, bearing Willoughby, and the 11 quarterings impaled in No. VI. of the last tomb, is spread smoothly over her body and folded down to the waist, displaying a plain white vest conforming to the shape, laid in narrow formal plaits, and finished with a large open ruff. Over the tomb, but completely detached from it, is an arched canopy supported by four fluted corinthian columns with black capitals gilt, and the soffit of the arch decorated with escallops and flowers. From the frieze, at regular distances, depend three long pendants, and over them, above the cornice, are circles enclosing shields, surmounted by pyramids with the crests of Spencer and Willoughby. On the south side of the tomb, on a large shield. VII. In the north east angle of the chapel is a singular monument for sir Edward Spencer. On, or out of an inscribed urn rises his bust in plate armour:

VIII. The east window is built up, and in the upper part is a monument for the late earl Spencer by Nollekens, R. A. from a design by Cipriani. Benevolence represented by a female figure standing in the clouds with a cornucopia at her feet, is suspending a circular medallion on which is a profile of the deceased; and on a square tablet beneath is an elegant poetical tribute by his son in law, the late duke of Devonshire.

To the Memory of JOHN EARL SPENCER
Nat: 19 Dec. 1734, ob: 31 Oct. 1783.

If e'er Sincerity inscribed the Stone,
Giving the Dead no Merits but their own,
Behold it here. This Verse with Sculpture's aid Records the Debt by Love and Duty paid;
That Strangers and Posterity may know,
How pure a Spirit warmed the Dust below:
For they who felt the Virtues of his Life,
Whether the Orphan, Friend, or Child, or Wife,
Need not the Poet's or the Sculptor's art,
To wake the Feelings of a grateful Heart.
Their Love, their Grief, his Honours best proclaim,
The living Monuments of SPENCER's Fame.

IX. Underneath the last is a tabular monument of statuary marble for the late countess Spencer, by Flaxman, R. A. who has rendered it truly emblematical of her character by the introduction of exquisitely beautiful personifications of Faith and Charity. The monument is about four feet in height, and of striking simplicity in its design; the inscription being on the central space between the figures, and the whole connected by a plinth and cornice of plain mouldings in an unbroken line. Faith is in an erect attitude, with eyes elevated towards heaven, in her right hand the book of life, and in her left a cross—the symbol of christian hope. Charity is fondly cherishing an infant reposing on her right arm, whilst her other arm is affectionately placed behind the head of the eldest of two children at her side, in fond approval of their mutual caresses.

VI. Opposite to the last is a noble monument of black and white marble for William second baron Spencer, and his lady, Penelope Wriothesley, executed by, or rather under the superintendance of, the celebrated statuary Nicholas Stone, at an expence of £600[a]. Though this was the largest sum received by him for any of his works, yet neither of the figures are from his own chisel, but were consigned to John Hargrave and Richard White; to the former of whom he paid £14. for the baron, and to the latter £15. for the lady[a]. They are placed recumbent on a low table or altar raised upon a large basement table, under a canopy supported by eight black circular corinthian pillars with white capitals. The baron is in ermined robes of state very tastefully disposed. He is bareheaded with curling hair, mustachios, and piked beard; a large embroidered frill round his neck, and a long sword at his side. A veil encircles the crown of the lady's head and falls behind her shoulders, concealing her hair in front and displaying it in ringlets at the sides. To a pearl necklace is attached a long pendant, with corresponding ear-drops. Her mantle is lined with ermine, and on the rich border round the top is a collar of SS. Her vest, which has embroidered ruffles at the wrists, is slightly drawn up under her arms, and flows in graceful folds to her feet. Round the upper table are shields. On the south side. I. Spencer, impaling Warsted. At the west end. II. Spencer, impaling (Az.) a cross (O.) between four falcons close (Ar.) Wriothesley. III. Spencer, impaling Lincolne. On the north side. IV. Spencer, impaling Wriothesley. At the east end. V. Spencer, impaling Deverell. VI. Spencer, impaling Catelin. At the south west angle, over the canopy, is an arm embowed holding a wivern's head, the ancient crest of Spencer; at the south east angle, an owl ducally crowned, the crest of Willoughby; and in the centre, between two scrolls, on a large shield, VII. Spencer, and nineteen quarterings, as in No. I. of the last monument, with supporters, helmet, crest, and motto. At the north east angle, a fleur de lis; at the north west a leopard's head erased, ducally gorged and lined, the crest of Catelin; and in the centre, VIII. 1. (Az.) a cross (O.) between four falcons close (Ar.) Wriothesley. 2. (Ar.) a fret (G.) within a border engrailed (S.) on a canton (of the second) a lion passant gardant (O.) Dunstanville. 3. Crest, a bull statant (S.) armed, unguled ducally crowned, ringed in the nose, and lined (O.) At the west end. IX. Spencer, impaling Wriothesley; and X. the same repeated at the east end. On a compartment of black marble at the east end of the lower table is inscribed:

Edmund Peverel died 5 Edw. 3 (1331), possessed of this estate, subject to the above life-interest, held by service unknown, and leaving John Peverel, his son and heir, an infant only half a year old[n]; whose widow Isabella, then wife of Robert Rigge, in 21 Edw. 3 (1347), joined her husband in releasing her dower of the third part of the manors of "Brynton," Ashley, and Coton near Rockingham, to

Sir William de la Pole and Margaret his wife[o], sister and heiress of the said John Peverell; and in 13 Ric. 2 (1389), Joan, daughter and heiress of John de la Pole, and granddaughter and heiress of John baron Cobham of Kent, jointly with sir Robert de "Hennihale," or Hemenhale, of Norfolk, the first of her five husbands, conveyed the manor of "Brynton" to

Sir Nicholas "Lyllyng" in fee simple[o]; who by deed 16 Dec. 4 Hen. 5 (1416), having previously vested it in feoffees, directed them to enfeoff Thomas Bernard, (second) son of Robert Bernard, esq. (by his daughter Elizabeth), in fee-tail when he attained his legal age; and from whom it lineally descended, agreeably to the pedigree in Abington, to Francis Bernard, esq. who, with Baldwin his son and heir, by indenture of bargain and sale 2 May, 34 Eliz. (1592), sold it for £2150. under the description of "the lordship and manor of Newbottle and Brington Parva, alias lytell Brington," with its members and pertinencies, court leet, and 28s. rent out of lands in Great Brington, to

Sir John Spencer of "Oldthroppe," and Robert Spencer, esq. his son and heir, in fee[o]; since which time it has attended the inheritance of Althorp to George-John 2d earl Spencer, the present proprietor.

The manor house, now reduced to a farm house, has been severed from the manor, and belongs to Mr. Kenning.

NEWBOTTLE,

In domesday written "Nevbote and Neubote," presents an obvious etymology in the saxon neov, new, and bοel, an habitation, in contradistinction probably to Oldthorp or Althorp. It is situated in the southern part of the parish of Brington, and is all old inclosure. It contains about 660 acres, the whole of which is the property of earl Spencer, with the exception of about 30 acres belonging to the rector of Brington in right of his church. The soil is in general a strong clay. Newbottle wood was selected in the time of the saxons to designate the hundred. It was surveyed in domesday at 8 acres only, but that term did not then imply any determinate measurement. In 5 Joh. (1203), William earl Ferrars obtained a charter for inclosing his wood of "Nedbeold," Newbottle[p]; and by indenture 20 June 19 Ric. 2 (1396), William de Ferrars lord of Groby, for £14. 6s. 8d. sold to Robert Holdenby (whose seal, bearing five cinquefoils, is attached to the deed), 120 trees growing on the ditch of a close at "Newbotle" called "Newbottlewode," with free ingress and egress for a year for his servants to cut down and carry away the same[o]. The present extent of the wood is between 70 and 80 acres. The following scarce plants have been found in it. Scabiosa Succisa, Devil's-bit Scabious. Hypericum hirsutum, hairy St. John's-wort. Chironia Centaurium, common Centaury. Hypnum proliferum, proliferous Feather moss. The mill mentioned in domesday was probably a horse mill, as there is no tradition of a water mill, and windmills are said not to have been invented till the close of the 13th century; one occurs here in a survey of the manor as early as 16 Edw. 1 (1288)[q].

Manorial History. Peverel Fee. Ferrars Manor. In the time of Edward the confessor, Gitda, a powerful thane, held freely or independently of any superior lord an estate of considerable extent in this county, comprising Higham (Ferrars) with its nine berewicks, Rushden, Chelveston, Caldecote, Knuston, Irchester, Raundes, Easton (Mauduit); and Farndish, and Puddington in Bedfordshire; Newbottle with its five berewicks, Althorp, Brington, Harleston, Clasthorp, and Flore; Duston, Blisworth, Courtenhall, (Paveli's) Pery, Catesby, Naseby with part of Clipston, and a share of Guilsborough, Blakesley, and Milton[r] (Malsor). The policy of William the conqueror frequently led him to subdivide the estates of the principal ejected saxons in unequal allotments to his norman followers, but in the present instance he transferred the whole to William Peverel * his reputed illegitimate son, amongst whose demesne manors "Nevbote" and its dependencies is thus recorded in domesday. It contains a hide and half a virgate. The arable land is three carucates in demesne with a servant, and one carucate in the occupation of four villeins and four bordars. There is a mill worth 7s. yearly, and six acres of wood. To the soke or legal jurisdiction of "Neubote" belongs,

In "Olletorp" (Althorp) the third part of an hide and half a virgate. The arable land is a carucate cultivated by three socmen.

In "Herovelstone" (Harleston) is an hide and an half. The arable land is three carucates, and there are three socmen there, with a priest.

In "Clachestorp" (Clasthorp) is half an hide. The arable land is a carucate cultivated by a socman.

In "Flore" is half an hide. The arable land is a carucate in the tenure of three socmen. All these lands when received by William (Peverel) were valued at £4. but are now worth £7. yearly[s].

BENEFACTIONS. CHANTRY LANDS, &c. A small part only of the poor's land referred to in the abstract of charitable donations (p. 80), was the gift of Alice Hykedon; the far greater proportion was the reputed endowment of a Chantry. In the ecclesiastical survey 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the chantry at "Brington" was rated in rents and profits at £6. per ann. and William Duncley was returned to be the chantry priest[b]; but John Gryffyth and other inhabitants of Brington, by presentment to the king's commissioners, certified that there was no chantry here, and that 4 messuages 7 cottages and 4¼ yards (virgates) of arable land in Church Brington and Little Brington, now supposed to be to the use of a chantry priest, were given by "auncyent benefactors unto the seyd Towneshyppe" and put in feoffement uppon trust" to employ the revenues and profits "as they should seme good," as in payment of fifteenths, finding of soldiers and arms, and such other charges; and that sometimes the said rents have been applied to maintaining a priest, sometimes a year, sometimes half a year, sometimes a quarter, to pray for the said benefactors, and to help him to visit at times needful; the parish being wide and many villages therein, some of them being two miles distant from the parish church; that there was never known to be any ornaments, jewels, chattels, or mansion-house belonging to such priest; and that when tenths were demanded for the said lands as belonging to a chantry, they were advised by Thomas Heritage, clerk, deceased, then one of his majesty's chaplains, surveyor of his works at Westminster, and parson of Brington, to resist the payment, but for fear of a contempt, and having spent in the suit all they were able to raise, they were of "force driven to pay the said tenths hitherto, when of right they ought to have paid none[c]." This remonstrance appears to have produced the desired effect, for on the dissolution of chantries 2 Edw. 6 (1548), their lands were valued at £4. 9s. 9½d. per ann. reciting a feoffment of them dated 1 Dec. 30 Hen. 8, "to divers of the parisheners of Brington wherein is "declaryd no use but to be employed by the parisheners to suche use as to them shall seme good and necessary[b]." The commissioners of inclosure allotted 122 a. 28 p. to the feoffees of the poor's land, which, with the farm-house attached, is now let for £170. per ann. besides which the feoffees have 29 cottages and about 9 a. of old inclosure in Great and Little Brington, producing £34. 13s. per ann. (exclusive of 13 of the cottages being occupied rent-free); and about 12 a. at Napton in Warwickshire, purchased some years since by the feoffees, and now let for £20. per ann.

MANORIAL HISTORY. It is seldom that the origin of an affiliated manor or hamlet can be so satisfactorily developed as the one now under consideration, which was severed from the paramount manor of Newbottle and village of Great Brington, in the time of Henry the third, by William earl Ferrars, who settled it on John de Vipont baron of Appleby * and his heirs, in free marriage with Sybil, his fourth daughter[d] by his first wife, and one of the coheirs of her mother, Sybil, sister and coheiress of the Mareschalls earls of Pembroke.

In 12 Edw. 1, Roger de Leybourn† was found by inquisition post mortem to have been, in right of his wife Idonea (Vipont), then twenty-two years of age, tenant for life, by courtesy, of lands and tenements in "Brynton Parva" and "Neubottle," of the value of £13. 12s. 5d. per ann. and held, not of the king in capite, but free from all services[e]. Accordingly, being a mesne tenure under the lord, it is unnoticed in the return of knight's fees in the 24th of this reign, when the earl Ferrers accounts for one fee in the manor of Newbottle and Brington[f] as heretofore. Idonea afterwards married John de Crombwell†, but died without issue[g]. This manor had previously passed, probably by gift, to her nephew Robert Clifford baron Clifford†, who enfeoffed Walter de Langton, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield‡[h]. The bishop procured a grant of free warren (int. al.) in his demesne lands at "Brinton" and "Neubottle" to him and his heirs for ever, provided they were not within the bounds of the king's forests[i]. During a temporary confiscation of his estates, the king consigned (int. al.) his manor of "Neubottle" to John de Ferrars§ during pleasure, at the annual rent of £60. 5s. 4½d.[k] The prelate was, however, speedily restored to favor, for within four years after, he, and Hamon de Vieleston, are certified to be lords of "Bryngton with Neubotle and Olthorpe[l]." He died seised (int. al.) of a moiety of the manor of "Neubotle," with a capital messuage, value half a mark, and certain lands and tenements in "Olthorp," of all which a minute survey was taken, held in free socage of the earl of Lancaster of the honor of Tutbury (by forfeiture of the earl Ferrars), and Edmond Peverel‡ was cousin and heir, aged fourteen years[m]. He demised this manor, with reversion to himself and heirs, to Thomas de Pateshull‖ for life[n], who, in answer to a writ of quo warranto to shew cause why he claimed certain immunities, pleaded the charter of bishop Langton for free warren, and prescription for view of frank pledge.

for the furtherance of this object, or from a feeling of spontaneous gratitude, he renounced his paternal arms and adopted those of Quincy, which continued to be borne by his descendants till they became the head of the noble house of Ferrars by the extinction of the elder male line in William baron Ferrars of Chartley*. He died 16 Edw. 1 (1288), when another extent of this manor was made, differing materially in several points from the preceding one; but both are perhaps worth preserving, as separately and comparatively furnishing materials for a commentary on the occupancy and value of lands in the 13th century. The capital messuage, with garden, dovecote, and all the inclosure, is worth 20s.; there are in demesne 200 acres of arable land worth 4d. per acre; 11 acres of meadow worth 16d. per acre; certain pasture by the ways and footpaths, worth 4s.; rents of assize of free tenants at St. Michael, 50s. 11½d. at the nativity 7s. 6d. at easter 47s. and at the nativity of St. John the baptist 7s. 6d.; other rents at St. Michael, viz. half an ell of scarlet cloth worth 2s.†; 2¾ lb. of cummin worth 2¾d. and a pair of buckskin gloves worth 12d.; 21 virgates of land in villenage, each of which pays at the four usual terms 18s.; 9 cottagers who pay at the usual terms 24s. 1½d.; a windmill worth 40s.; 4 tenants, each of whom performs one days ploughing in the year, worth 6d.; there are freemen there whose services are worth 11d.; the work of the cottagers is worth 2s. 8d.; and the pleas and perquisites of courts are worth 26s. 8d.; the total value being £35. 6s. 2¾d. out of which 2d. is paid to the king[g]. Though Groby in Leicestershire has been always considered the principal residence of this branch of Ferrars and the head of their barony, yet the capital messuage there and at Newbottle are, in this inquisition, returned of equal value. A demise for life of the manor of "Neubotle" and advowson of "Brynton" was made in 33 Edw. 1 (1304-5), by William baron Ferrars, stiling himself simply William, son of William Ferrars, to the bishop of Coventry and Lichfield under the still more loose description of sir (Dn') Walter de Langton; for, that the bishop was the lessee is evident from his presenting to the church, and there is scarcely less doubt that in this transaction originated the charge brought against him by John de Ferrars (of Chartley), who appears to have endeavoured to invalidate the grant of his grandmother, and in 35 Edw. 1 impleaded (Walter Langton) the bishop of Chester and Coventry and Lichfield, treasurer of England, of champerty against the form of the statute, in having supported one of the parties in a plea before the justices of the bench, in a suit respecting the manor of "Newbotle" wherein the said John was demandant and William de Ferrers tenant. The bishop produced the king's charter for his pardon, but the writ for summoning a jury to try the issue was directed to the coroner instead of the sheriff, who having to account to the bishop as treasurer, was presumed to be under his influence[h]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), a writ of quo warranto was exhibited against Henry de Ferrars to shew cause why he claimed view of frank pledge at "Newbotell," with assize of bread and beer and tumbril and waifs and free warren in his demesne lands and park there; to which he pleaded prescription; the jurors presented that he had no warren in other men's lands nor within the bounds of the king's forest, nor any park-keeper or ranger in his park, that he had no beasts in his possession taken as waifs within a year and a day, nor had he appropriated to his use any beasts so taken, and that he had incurred a forfeiture of the view of frank-pledge, by punishing offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 40d. contrary to law, instead of the corporal punishment of pillory and tumbril; the view was accordingly seised into the king's hands, but restored again on petition for a fine of half a mark[i].

On the decease of William baron Ferrars in 23 Hen. 6, all the family estates entailed on the heir male went to Ferrars of Tamworth, and those which were unsettled, including Newbottle, descended to his granddaughter and heir general Elizabeth, wife of sir Edward Grey, who was in her right summoned to parliament as baron Ferrars of Groby, and whose grandson Thomas second marquis of Dorset, conveyed (int. al.) the manor of Newbottle by fine in 3 Hen. 8 (1511), to John Spencer, esq. from whom it has passed with Althorp down to George-John second earl Spencer, the present proprietor.

The court leet and court baron for this manor and its appendages have been discontinued many years.

† This tenure is identified with the Holdenby lands in Brington by an indenture of agreement 11 July 12 Hen. 8 (1520), between John Spencer, of Wormleighton in Warwickshire, esq. and John Holdenby, of Holdenby, esq. respecting the chief rent; wherein the latter alleged that the original grant from earl Ferrars reserved but "half an eine of scariet" for all services.

The anomalies involved in the apparently confused manner in which manors and parishes are often blended and designated, will admit of some elucidation from the above survey. The origin of parishes has been briefly adverted to in p. 12, and the existence of a church being presumed wherever a priest in his professional capacity is mentioned in domesday, the saxon manor of Newbottle may be considered the parent of the two parishes of Brington and Harlestone. If it be asked why neither of them adopted the name of the manor within whose circuit they originated, it may be remarked that local nomenclature was antecedent to the formation of parishes, and where several berewicks were attached to a manor, the one selected as the site of the church would naturally be adopted for the name of the parish. Various regulations and expedients were resorted to where parishes were compounded of different fees; in some cases a co-parish was founded, having distinct portions and advowsons, as at Clipston, &c.; in others alternate presentations were adopted, as at Heyford, &c.; sometimes a simple consolidation took place; and sometimes the lands of different lords in the same vill were joined to neighbouring parishes founded within their own fees, or in which they felt a greater interest; the two last modes were the most customary, and are illustrated in the constitution of the two parishes under consideration. The parish of Brington embraced the western division of the manor of Newbottle, including the vill itself, Brington with the subsequent affiliation of Little Brington, and those parts of Althorp and Clasthorp which were integral portions of this manor; but the larger proportion of both those vills being of the fee of the earl of Moreton, his lands in Althorp were annexed to the parish of Brington, whilst those in Clasthorp were consigned to the parish of Flore; and the small berewick of Newbottle manor in Flore was also united to that parish, instead of passing with the other western berewicks to the parish of Brington.

In the eastern division of this manor was founded the parish of Harleston, to which was added all the lands in that vill of the fee of Moreton and of the royal fee of Upton; but the original nucleus must have been the Newbottle berewick, as Peverel was the sole and undisputed patron.

Newbottle, though dwindled to an insignificant hamlet, retained its civil or territorial superiority. Here the lords court was always held, and the dependance of its manorial members may be regularly traced through inquisitions post mortem, down to the abolition of the feudal system.

William Peverel, grandson of the grantee, forfeited all his immense possessions to the crown, which were bestowed soon after by Hen. 2 on his son John earl of Moreton, afterwards king John. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Neubottle and Brynton" are certified to contain six hides[u]. In the return of knight's fees 14 Hen. 2 (1167), amongst the new feoffments,

*William de Ferrars earl of Ferrars, who had married Margaret daughter and heiress of William Peverel, is found to hold Higham (Ferrars), with an hundred and an half, together with the park, and "Nevbote" and Blisworth, by the service of one fee[x]. John, on his accession to the throne, appears to have claimed this estate by virtue of his father's general grant to him of the Peverel lands, and William de Ferrars earl of Derby, great grandson of the former, was compelled in 1 Joh. (1199), to give the king 2000 marks (£1320), the receipt of which is accounted for by the sheriff, for a confirmatory charter in fee, on the additionally hard condition of renouncing for ever and releasing to the king all right and claim to any other of the castles, forests, and lands of Peverel[y]. In the same year Isabel de Peissi impleaded the earl for "Newbotle" and Blisworth, but was nonsuited by the king's writ, the king testifying that she had no interest in them except through her husband, Robert de Peissi deceased, who held them by grant from king Hen. 2 when the honor of Peverel was in his hands, and that it had been agreed between him (king John) and the earl, who is the heir of the said honor, that the lands now in question, as well as others parcel of the said honor, should be given and warranted to the earl[z]. His son, William de Ferrars earl of Derby, in 32 Hen. 3 (1247-8), obtained a charter for free warren in "Neubotle and Brinton," and his other manors in this county[a], which privilege was ratified by a second charter three years afterwards[b]. He died 24 Mar. 1253-4 (38 Hen. 3)[c], and this manor was (int. al.) assigned in dower to his widow Margaret, daughter and coheiress of Roger Quincy earl of Winchester, on which occasion the following extent was taken upon oath by inquisition; the capital messuage with curtilage, garden, and dovecote, exclusive of the park, is worth 13s. 4d.; there are in demesne 63 acres of arable land worth 12d. per acre; 15 a. of meadow, with other small particular lands, worth 18d. per acre; 6¼ virgates or yardlands, each containing 20 a. worth 12d. per acre; 7 cottagers, who pay a yearly rent of 6s. 2¼d. and do 14 days work yearly in autumn worth 21d.; a cottage place rented at 12d.; in services of freemen 8s. 4d. and 1 lb. of cummin worth 1½d. besides work in autumn worth 4d.; the blacksmith of the village holds the lands formerly in tenure of Ulfric Beccerius and certain other particular lands for which he pays 6s. 8d. and does work in autumn worth 4d.; there is pasture for 200 sheep within the liberties of the manor, the profits of which are worth 26s. 8d.; and in like manner pasture for 12 beasts of burden ("Averiū") worth 2s. 6d.; and pasture for 60 swine, the profits of which are worth 5s.; there is a park which can support in pasture 12 cows, 1 bull, 18 oxen, and 8 geese, and is worth 40s.; there is also an inclosure in the park of underwood, acorns, brushwood, and other easements as wood for fuel, building, and the like, worth 60s.; the rents of assize and view of frank-pledge, perquisites of courts, of free men and others, with heriots, fines to the lord on the marriage of a tenant's daughter (marchettis), and other escheats, are worth 26s. 8d.; the total value being £20. 19s. 4d.[d] By deed s. d. but which from the attestation of John, abbot of St. James's near Northampton, may be placed between 1266 and 1269, the countess granted the manor of "Neubottle," with the hundred of "Neubottle grave," and advowson of the church of "Brinton," to her (second) son, William de Ferrars, in fee tail, rendering annually a sparrow hawk at the feast of the assumption of the blessed Mary for all services[e]; which grant was confirmed in perpetuity by her eldest son Robert earl of Derby[f]. She also settled on him her purparty of the lands and knight's fees of the Honor of Winchester, with a view, probably, of rescuing the remembrance of her own family from merging in her husband's, and either in pursuance of a stipulated condition

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE.* HONOR OF BERKHAMPSTED. Tosti and Snoterman in the time of Edward the confessor held lands in "Olletorp;" rated at 5s. yearly, which at the domesday survey were quadrupled in value, and held by Humphrey under the earl of Moreton. It comprised two parts of a hide. The arable land was two carucates; of which one was in demesne with three servants, and the other was in the tenure of a knight with three bordars. There was eight acres of meadow and two acres of thorney ground[m].

On the dismemberment of the Moreton fee this estate was annexed to the extensive honor of Berkhampsted in Hertfordshire, afterwards parcel of the duchy of Cornwall. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 "Holtrop" was certified to contain a hide and a small virgate of the fee of Berkhampsted[n]. In the scutage of that portion of the Testa de Nevill, which may be placed about 18 Hen. 3 (1233), Hugh Russel accounted for eight fees of Berkhampsted of the small fees of Moreton, of, or under which one fee in Haselbech and one fee in "Olttorp" were of the fee of Geoffrey de Lucy[o]†; and in the inq. p. m. of Edmund earl of Cornwall, 18 Edw. 1 (1289-90), he was found to have died seised (int. al.) of certain fines or profits arising out of the views of frank-pledge belonging to the honor of Berkhampsted, composed of divers baronies, amongst which are Carlton, Haselbech, "Olthorp," and Harleston, of the barony of Lucy[p]. The Berkhampsted court is now kept at Blakesley, but it may be held indifferently at any place in the county within the honor. Althorp is still subject to a yearly payment of 4s. to this court, probably the original fine for relaxation of suit and service.

MANOR. Humphrey, the mesne lord in domesday, held lands also under the earl in Carlton, Dingley, Arthingworth, Pipwell, Sibbertoft, East Farndon, Little Bowden, Oxendon, Haselbech, Harleston, Pitsford, and Cosgrave; but as they became dispersed amongst different families at an early period, his connection with any of the succeeding proprietors is very dubious. It appears by the sheriff's return 5 Joh. (1203), that Peter de Stokes† owed £100. and a palfrey for the wardship of the lands and heir of Jordan de "Avenill," deceased, and the marriage of the said Jordan's widow to one of his brothers[q]. The heir alluded to was sir Jordan de "Avenyle," or Avenill, who dying s. p. was succeeded in the manor of "Olthorp" by his nephew and heir,

Sir Hamon de Vieleston[r], whose family assumed their local surname from Vieleston, now called Filston, a hamlet to Shoreham in Kent. After holding it 30 years he enfeoffed his son, Hamon Fitz Hamon de Vieleston, in fee tail, and confirmed the settlement, with remainder to John de Vieleston, another of his sons, by fine 52 Hen. 3 (1267-8)[r]. In 26 Edw. 3 (1362), Nicholas de Vieleston, by deed of feoffment sealed with his arms, a chevron between three fishes hauriant, conveyed the manor of "Althorp" to his brother John de Vieleston in fee[s], by whom it was vested in feoffees, who re-conveyed it to him for life, and then passed the reversion by fine 38 Edw. 3. (1364), to Robert Lumley‡ and Margaret his wife in fee tail.

In 5 Ric. 2 (1381), a feoffment in trust of the manors of "Althorp" and Harleston, lands and tenements in Over Heyford, Nether Heyford, Brington, Collingtree, and Brockhole, and advowson of Heyford, was executed by Robert Lumley; and in 13 Ric. 2 (1389), the feoffee surrendered the manor of "Olthorp" to the use of the said Robert for life, with remainder to Thomas Statham and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of the said Robert, in fee tail. This settlement on Statham seems to have been subsequently revoked in exchange for the lands in Heyford, &c.; probably in consequence of the title to this manor being litigated by the representatives of the Vielestons; for though Joan, daughter of Thomas Vieleston, released her right prior to her marriage, and again, in conjunction with her husband Thomas Gyles, yet, regardless of honor and principle, they jointly with Guy Dunkley, son and heir of Isabel the other daughter of Thomas de Vieleston, in 1 Hen. 4 (1399), brought an action against Robert Lumley to recover this manor as heirs under the entail of Hamon de Vieleston. The legal verdict is unknown, but in 8 Hen. 4 (1407), Robert Lumley granted a messuage and half a virgate with other small parcels of land in Althorp, to Guy Dunkley, in bar of any future claim by him or his heirs; and in 12 Hen. 4, Joan de Vieleston, widow of Thomas Gyles, without any specific consideration, released all her right to John Lumley, son and heir of Robert; by whom this manor was unquestionably sold—though the deed of conveyance is not extant amongst the Spencer evidences—to

John Catesby§, who, in his attestation to a deed 9 Hen. 5 (1421), styles himself lord of "Olthorp." Having strengthened his title by obtaining releases from Richard Lumley, of Harleston, esq. brother and heir of the vendor, and John Dunkley, son and heir of Guy Dunkley, one of the former claimants, he and his wife Mar-

The Manor-house was situated a short distance from the wood, but has been long destroyed, and the site can only be traced by slight inequalities of surface.

Lenton Priory, near Nottingham, had a yearly rent of 6s. 8d. in Newbottle, as appears from an inquisition taken 30 Hen. 8, after the attainder of Nicholas Heath, the late prior[1].

ALTHORP,

In domesday "Olletorp and Alidetorp," and in later records Oldthorp, is probably compounded of the saxon alb, old, and thopp, a village. It occupies the eastern side of Brington parish, and is the entire property of earl Spencer, containing about 790 acres, of which the park constitutes about 500 acres. The soil throughout is a rich dark-coloured loam. The following scarce plants have been found here. Parnassia palustris, Grass of Parnassus; Scabiosa Succisa, Devil's-bit Scabious; Hypericum hirsutum, hairy St. John's-wort; Sanguisorba officinalis, Blood-wort Burnet, and Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder, in Chinkwell meadow. Carduus eriophorus, Friar's Crown, opposite the west lodge. Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock; Hydnum floriforme, flower Hydnum; Boletus bovinus, sponge Boletus, and Agaricus ferruginascens, brown Agarric, in the park. In a small spincy in Chinkwell meadow is a powerful petrifying spring, which possesses the property of encrusting vegetable substances with calcareous earth.

Houghton, and Church Brampton. Extensive and valuable as were these accessions, they were not effected by the accumulations of avarice or extortion; he was "a noble housekeeper," a liberal benefactor to the poor and the church, and so scrupulously just, that by his will "he requires his executors to recompence every one that can "lawfully prove, or will take oath, that he has hurt him in any wise, so that they make their claim within two "years, tho' (as is recited) he has none in his remembrance; but he had rather charge their souls, than his own "should be in danger: and requires his executors to cause proclamation thereof to be made, once a month, dur- "ing the first year after his decease, at Warwick, Southampton, Coventry, Banbury, Daventry, and Northampton." Sir William Spencer, his son and successor, died in 1532, leaving an only son, sir John Spencer, two of whose younger sons became the heads of considerable houses. On Thomas, his second son, he settled the manor of Claverdon, in Warwickshire, and Green's Park and lands in Blakesley; to William, his third son, who fixed his residence at Yarnton, in Oxfordshire, he assigned the manor of Ufton and Beaudesert Park, near Henley, in Warwickshire; and to Richard, his fourth son, the manor of Offley, in Hertfordshire, and a manor in Earl's Barton. Sir John Spencer, his son and heir, inherited all the manors and lands recited above in the inquisition of his great grandfather, with the addition of the manor and rectory of Byfield, a manor in Harleston, and lands in Woodford, Maidford, Orton, Northampton, and Hardingston; and was succeeded by his only son sir John Spencer, father of sir Robert Spencer, who was raised to the dignity of baron Spencer by king James 1. at Hampton Court, before his coronation, and the same year was selected by that monarch to invest the duke of Wirtemberg with the order of the garter; a mission which he executed with a degree of splendour and dignity that attracted the admiration of the spectators, and won the respect and esteem both of the king and the duke. He was an active and patriotic senator; being "in most committees on public affairs, a constant maintainer and promoter of the manufactures, "trade, and liberties of the realm, an opposer of all arbitrary grants, monopolies, or other indirect practices; and "finally, was seasoned with a just tincture of all private and public virtues." Of William, second baron Spencer, little is known; but his son Henry, third baron Spencer, created earl of Sunderland in 1643, was one of the most promising young noblemen of his time. He was born at Althorp in 1620, and scarcely had he attained his legal age, when he distinguished himself by opposing the arbitrary measures of the court; but no sooner did he perceive an open rupture approaching between the king and the parliament, than he rallied round the throne, and joined the royal standard with a loan of £15,000. That he was not actuated by a blind and implicit approval of the royal cause, but by an almost chivalrous sense of honour, combined with the fear of his neutrality being imputed to cowardice, some highly interesting letters to his lady (the celebrated Sacharissa of Waller) abundantly testify, whilst they equally tend to illustrate the severity of the domestic sacrifices which he made to his sense of duty. In a letter from Shrewsbury, dated 21 Sept. 1642, he writes, "My Dearest Hart, the king's condition is much im- "proved of late; his force increaseth daily; which increaseth the insolency of the papists. How much I am un- "satisfied with the proceedings here, I have at large expressed in several letters. Neither is there wanting hand- "some occasion to retire, were it not for gaining honour. For let occasion be never so handsome, unless a man "resolve to fight on the parliament's side, which, for my part, I had rather be hanged for, it will be said a man "is afraid to fight. If there could be an expedient form'd to salve the punctilio of honour, I would not continue "here an hour. The discontent that I, and many other honest men, receive daily, is beyond expression." In another letter, dated from the camp before Gloucester, 25 Aug. 1643, after alluding to the solitariness of his quarters in a private cottage, he adds, "which often brings into my thoughts, how infinitely more happy I should "esteem myself quietly to enjoy your company at Althorp, than to be troubled with the noises, and engaged in "the factions of the court, which I shall ever endeavour to avoid, &c. When we were at Bristol, sir William was "there, but I hear he is now lately gone to Hereford, for which I envy him, and all others, that can go to their "own houses; but I hope ere long you will let me have your company, the thought of which is to me most "pleasant, and passionately desired by yours, &c." These hopes, however, were never realized, for within a month after, he fell a victim to the fortunes of war, at the early age of 23 years, being killed at the battle of Newbury in Berkshire, by a cannon ball, whilst preparing to charge the enemy at the head of a division of the king's cavalry. He left an only son, Robert, second earl of Sunderland, of whom too much cannot be said of his talents, nor too little of his principles. To enter into the political transactions in which he was engaged, would be to epitomize the reigns of Charles 2, James 2, and William 3; for opposite as were their characters, views, and interests, he contrived to obtain an almost unbounded influence over those three monarchs. Hated by the tories, and distrusted by the whigs, the king gave a reluctant assent to his resignation in 1697, when he retired to Althorp where he died in 1702. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, Charles third earl of Sunderland, who inherited his father's talents, with a larger portion of political integrity. When offered an annuity of £3000. for life by queen Anne, on his dismissal from the secretaryship of state, after Sacheverel's trial, he nobly and indignantly replied, "he was glad her majesty was satisfied he had done his duty, but if he could not have the honour "to serve his country, he would not plunder it." On the accession of George 1, he became a leading member of administration, but resigned in April 1721; though he retained his ascendancy over the king till his death the year following. His second, but eldest surviving son, Robert, fourth earl of Sunderland, dying of a fever at Paris in 1729, unmarried, the title and estates devolved on his next brother, Charles, fifth earl of Sunderland, who, on the decease of his aunt, Henrietta, duchess of Marlborough, in 1733, succeeded to that dukedom, under the limitation of the patent, as heir of Anne, second daughter and coheiress of the great duke of Marlborough. In pursuance of a proviso in the will of the late duke, on entering into possession of the Marlborough estates, he, by indentures of 11 and 12 Jan. 1733-4, conveyed Althorp, and the other Sunderland estates, in the counties of Northampton, Warwick, and Bedford, to his younger brother

The honourable John Spencer, in tail male, previous to whose marriage, the duke joined in executing deeds of settlement, dated 12 and 13 Feb. 1733-4, whereby the late earl Spencer on coming of age acquired the fee simple. He was also the adopted heir of his maternal grandmother, Sarah, duchess dowager of Marlborough, who, by garet made a feoffment of this manor in trust; and in 29 Hen. 6 (1450), Margaret, then a widow, gave it to her (second) son, John Catesby, in fee. In 19 Edw. 4 (1479), he vested it in feoffees to the uses of his will, and devised it in fee to his nephew John Catesby, son of his brother sir William Catesby by his second wife. The validity of his will was however contested, and a counter claim put in by the guardian of his great nephew John Catesby, son of his nephew William Catesby deceased, by Margaret Zouch his wife; which Margaret deposed that whilst she was pregnant, John Catesby, the alleged testator, had promised her if the child should prove a son, and be named John, he would give him his Althorp estate. In support of the will the depositions of sir John Wylde, the priest and confessor of the testator, and nine others, were taken, to which was subjoined, "for the more evident recorde of these premisses to be trewe and not forgyved nor feyned in no man[9] wise, we the persones aforenamed to this our writyng have set our sealls, and bycause that our sealls to every people be unknowen, therefore the seall of office of the mairalte of the town of Northampton at our speciall instaunce request and desire is procured to be putt." The surviving feoffee refusing to surrender the estate to either claimant, a bill in chancery was filed against him, and a decree was issued 18 June 3 Hen. 7 (1488), in favour of the devisee[t].

After alienating this manor 24 Hen 7 (1508) to John Spencer, esq. afterwards knighted by Hen. 8, he removed to HINTON near Woodford, where a pedigree will be introduced of this branch of the ancient and far spreading family of Catesby.

THE SPENCERS claim a collateral descent from the ancient baronial house of Le Despenser. The name is indicative of the office of steward, but the primary derivation of the family is a genealogical problem not easily solved, and an elaborate research having failed in reconciling conflicting statements, a parallel view of three of the principal authorities, down to the point of coalition, is embodied in the subjoined pedigree in preference to the implicit adoption of either. The general descent in blood however is not irreconcileable, though considerable confusion prevails in the arrangement of the individuals and the appropriation of the alliances. Almaric Despenser, who married Amabel Chesnei, left an only daughter and heiress, as will be incontestably shown under DALLINGTON; Edmondson therefore, in deducing the line from him, is decidedly incorrect, and the error has been transplanted into all the modern peerages. The connection of the Althorp branch with the parent stem has been controverted by a modern genealogist, who prefaces his "painful task" by observing, that "the present family of Spencer are sufficiently great; and have too long enjoyed vast wealth and high honours, to require "the decoration of feathers in their cap which are not their own. Sir John Spencer their undisputed ancestor, "and the immediate founder of their fortune, lived in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII.; and three hundred years of riches and rank may surely satisfy a regulated pride[u]." The detection of error needs no apology, and the present noble proprietor of Althorp would be as far from requiring one for the free discussion of his ancestral honors, as he would be from sanctioning, and certainly is from needing, any distinctions to which he is not justly entitled. Without imputing improper motives to the writer, it may be permitted me to remark, that the glaring discrepancies in the leading line of Despenser have escaped his animadversions, whilst he has minutely scrutinised every step of the descent from Geoffrey to sir John Spencer; and it may be added, without incurring the charge of "an idle sacrifice of truth to flattery and vanity," that in the absence of positive, there is all the circumstantial evidence which the nature of the case will admit. The reign of Henry 6 was the period of their first migration into this county, when Henry Spencer, who had been educated in the abbey of Evesham, obtaining from the abbot a lease of the demesnes and tithes of Badby, was induced to settle there[x]. By his will in 17 Edw. 4 (1476), sealed with the present arms of Spencer—the baronial coat of Despenser differenced by three escallop shells—he made his sons John and Thomas executors, and appointed Isabel his wife overseer[x]. John Spencer, his son and heir, removed to Hodnell in Warwickshire, and in honor of his mother and wife, who were both heiresses, adopted their arms; affixing his seal of Lincolne and Warsted quarterly to certain deeds of feoffment in which he joined with sir Edward Raleigh of Farnborough near Banbury. John Spencer, his second son, had Hodnell and lands in 18 lordships, as appears by his will in 1486, by which he settled his estate, in default of issue male of his son Thomas, on his nephew (and brother in law) John Spencer; which Thomas altered the entail in favour of Thomas Spencer of Everdon, son of William Spencer of Badby, with remainder to sir William Spencer of Althorp. Thomas Spencer, his third son, omitted in the peerage and confounded with the brother of sir John Spencer of Althorp, had Badby assigned to him, and was the immediate ancestor of the Badby or Everdon branch. William Spencer, his son and heir, resided at Radbourn in Warwickshire, and it was to him, probably, the grant of arms, Az. a fess Erm. between six sea mews' heads erased Ar. was made in 1504, and which was partially adopted by his son and heir, sir John Spencer of Althorp. These armorial changes are adduced by the writer already referred to, in support of his genealogical doubts; but similar instances are not unfrequent, and a striking one presents itself in William Cope, esq. cofferer to Hen. 7, the cousin in law of this sir John Spencer, and from whom he purchased Wormleighton, who abandoned his paternal coat, Ar. a boar passant S. for Ar. three coffers S. allusive to his office, and subsequently took Ar. on a chevron Az. between three roses G. slipped proper, as many fleurs de lis O. the present bearing of the family. The arms of his great grandfather, Henry Spencer, which had been disused for several generations, were resumed by sir John Spencer, as is evident from their being blazoned on his monument, and that they were not deemed a "late assumption where the want of authority is fatal to the right," needs no other proof than the simple fact of their having been uninterruptedly borne by his noble descendants under the sanction of the college of arms. Sir John Spencer added to his patrimony the manors of Wormleighton and Fenny Compton, in Warwickshire, and Stoneton, Newbottle (including the paramount manors or courts leet of Great Brington, Little Brington, Althorp, Harleston, Clasthorp and Flore), Wicken, or Wyke Dyve, and Wyke Hamon, Althorp, Upper Bodington, Nether Bodington, and Hinton, and lands and tenements in Badby, Daventry, Barby, Guilsborough, East Haddon, Holdenby, Brockhole, Hanging her will, 11 Aug. 1744, devised her manors and estates in the counties of Northampton, Surrey, Oxford, Buckingham, Huntingdon, Bedford, Berks, Hertford, Stafford, Norfolk, and Leicester, and the residue of her personal property to be vested in the purchase of freehold estates, in trust for him, in fee tail, subject to certain annuities and conditions long since determined. He died 21 June 1746, and was succeeded by his only son

John, who was elevated to the peerage in 1761, by the titles of viscount and baron Spencer, and in 1765 was still further advanced to the rank of earl Spencer and viscount Althorp. " He possessed the virtues of humanity " and benevolence in a degree so eminent as to render his character as much distinguished through many parts " of Europe for its goodness, as that of his illustrious ancestor, the duke of Marlborough, was for its greatness." He died at Bath after a lingering illness, 31 Oct. 1783, when his honors and estates descended to his only son

George-John the present earl Spencer, who has filled some of the most responsible public situations with honour to himself and advantage to his country. Under his administration the british navy attained the pinnacle of renown; and many of the local, literary, and charitable institutions with which he is officially connected, have been essentially benefited by his influence and exertions. His love of literature is hereditary; but he has far eclipsed both predecessors and contemporaries in his bibliographical career, and by his refined taste, unwearied zeal, and ample fortune, has formed the richest private collection of books, perhaps, in Europe. In 1815, his numerous tenantry, to the number of nearly 200, presented him with a splendidly ornamented silver vase, in testimony of their grateful sense of his liberality as a landlord.

In the north side of the park is a heronry; the only one it is said in this part of the kingdom.

ALTHORP has been the residence of its proprietors from the "olden time." The Lumleys, who succeeded the Vielestons, were seated at HARLESTON, but occasionally resided here, and appear to have had an oratory or private chapel; for in 8 Ric. 2 (1385), John, bishop of Lincoln, granted licence for the marriage of Thomas Statham and Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Lumley, in the chapel within the manor of Robert Lumley in the parish of Brington[g]. Since it has been in possession of the present noble family, it has been honored with two royal visits. In June 1603, the queen of James 1, with the prince her son, on their first entrance into this kingdom from Scotland, rested some days at Althorp in their way to London. The exhibition of masques being one of the principal diversions of the court at this period, Ben Jonson wrote one expressly for the occasion, which was performed here for the amusement of her majesty, and is now inserted in his works. By the royal progress or diary of William 3, in 1695, it appears that the king left Newmarket on the 21st Oct. and arrived the same evening at Althorp, where he spent a whole week, during which an immense concourse of the nobility, gentry, and principal inhabitants of the county resorted to pay their respects to his majesty.

It is not known when the present structure was erected, but it was restored by Robert second earl of Sunderland, in 1688; and has undergone a complete reparation, and a new disposition of the apartments, under the direction of the present earl. The south front consists of a centre with deeply projecting transverse wings, forming an half H; and the west front presents an unbroken façade without an entrance. The simplicity of the exterior, is strikingly contrasted by the twin attractions of the interior—the LIBRARY and the PAINTINGS. The nature and limits of the present publication, however, will admit only of a very rapid and imperfect sketch of the literary and pictorial treasures of this interesting mansion. The Library occupies a suite of five apartments, extending about 300 feet in length, "garnished from 'top to toe'" with the choicest copies of the choicest editions of the choicest authors in the choicest bindings." On turning to the right from the first or principal library—80 feet long—a perspective view opens to the fourth room*, from the north west angle of which a corridor leads to the fifth, or new library, recently erected, principally for the reception of large paper copies of some of the rarest and most splendid works. The only painting admitted into this room is the peculiarly appropriate portrait of SPENCER, the father of english pastoral and heroic poetry, who was allied to this illustrious house, and whose Fairy Queen has been stiled by a celebrated historian "the most precious jewel of their coronet." The precise link of genealogical connection cannot now perhaps be ascertained; but it is observable that in some of the early editions of his works the name is written Spencer, though in modern orthography the c is transformed into s; and three of his poems are dedicated to three of the daughters of sir John Spencer, in each of which are direct references to his relationship to his patronesses, and in two of them are implied recognitions of the claim. In another poem, when enumerating the reigning beauties of queen Elizabeth's court, he introduces an elaborate eulogium on these three sisters, by thus pointedly but humbly alluding to their affinity:

"Ne lesse praiseworthie are the sisters three,
The honor of the noble familie:
Of which I meanest boast myselfe to be,
And most that unto them I am so nie,
Phyllis[h], Charillis[i], and sweet Amarillis[k],
Phyllis the faire is eldest of the three:
The next to her is bountifull Charillis,
But th' youngest is the highest in degree[l]."

The books at Althorp are estimated at 33,000 volumes, comprehending every class of literature except law, medicine, and botany, which are restricted to standard works of reference and general utility. The theological and classical departments are considered unrivalled by any private collection: but the most select and valuable portion of his lordship's library, including all the curious specimens of early printed books prior to the sixteenth century, are deposited at Spencer house, in St. James's-place, London.

The extensive and valuable collection of Paintings at Althorp is dispersed through almost every apartment; but the grand repository is the picture gallery—a noble room, 115 feet long—filled with portraits which arrest attention by their intrinsic merit as works of art, or as representations of individuals eminent for beauty, rank, or talent. Some of the most prominent in point of execution or historic interest, are Hans Holbein, by himself; sir Peter Paul Rubens, by Vandyck; sir Anthony Vandyck, by Rubens; Pedro van Mol, by himself; Verrio, by himself; Artemisia Gentileschi, with her pallet, by herself; Frobenius, the printer, by Holbein; Ignatius Loyola, by Titian; Mons. de St. Evremond, by Kneller; Henry 8, with Mary, afterwards queen of England, and Somers the jester, by Holbein; Mary queen of England, by Holbein; Philip 2, king of Spain, by More; lady Jane Grey, by Lucas de la Hire; Cardinal Pole, by Perino del Vaga; Henrietta, queen of Charles 1, by Vandyck; William (Ca-

Moreton Fee. The following entry in domesday, though not absolutely identified with Althorp, can be assigned to no other place with equal probability. Fulcher holds of the earl of Moreton a hide and the third part of a hide in "Alidetorp." The arable land is three carucates; one of which is in demesne with two servants; and ten villeins and eight bordars have the other two carucates. Edwin held it in the time of Edward the confessor, and it was then, and is now, valued at 30s. yearly[a]. No clue is afforded by ancient records, by which this estate can be separately deduced, and it may be presumed, therefore, to have been absorbed in the manor already noticed, parcel of the same fee and of the honor of Berkhampsted.

Peverel Fee. St. James's Abbey Lands. At the domesday survey, William Peverel held in "Olletorp" the third part of a hide and half a virgate, appendant to his manor of Newbottle. The arable land was a carucate, cultivated by three socmen[b]. A considerable share of this portion of Althorp was, by an accumulation of small grants, bestowed at an uncertain but early period on the abbey of St. James near Northampton, founded by William Peverel. In the Norwich taxation 1254 (38 Hen. 3), their temporalities here were rated at 25s. per ann.[c]; in that of pope Nicholas, 1291 (20 Edw. 1), they were reduced to a (reserved) rent of 3s. per ann.[d]; and in the survey at the dissolution the name of Althorp does not occur.

St. John's Hospital, at Northampton, had revenues in "Olthorp," valued at 8s. per ann, in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8)[e].

The Park originated in a licence granted in 4 Hen. 8 (1512), to sir John Spencer, then John Spencer, esq. to impark 300 acres of land, 100 acres of wood, and 40 acres of water, in "Oldthorpe," with free warren there, and in Great Brington[f]. The park, which is well stocked with deer, is now increased to about 500 acres, and is entered by two lodges in the direction of Northampton and Brington; the former has been recently removed to a more eligible site, and rebuilt in a simple but elegant style. The soil is well adapted to the growth of oak, beech, elm, and lime, and the park is luxuriantly shaded with fine old timber, disposed in large masses, or elongated in the rectilinear avenues which mark the geometrical style of gardening in the seventeenth century. Evelyn, in his Sylva, recommends to general adoption the practice of recording the time when any considerable plantation is begun, but remarks, "the only instance I know of the like in our country, is in the park at Althorp." The custom still prevails here, and there are now six of these commemorative stones: the first records a wood planted by sir John Spencer, grandfather of Robert lord Spencer, in 1567 and 1568; the second, a wood planted by sir John Spencer, father of Robert lord Spencer, in 1589; the third, a wood planted by Robert lord Spencer in 1602 and 1603; the fourth, a wood planted by sir William Spencer, K. B. (afterwards lord Spencer) in 1624. This stone is ornamented with the arms of Spencer impaling Wriothesley, and on the back is inscribed, "Up and MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. BARONY OF KEYNES†. In the reign of Edward the confessor Leuric‡ and Lewin§ held "Brocole" and "Misecote" freely, at which time they were valued at 40s. yearly, and the same rate was retained in domesday, when they were held by William under the earl of Moreton, and surveyed at three virgates only. The arable land consisted of two caracates; of which one was in demesne, and six bordars had the other. There were six acres of meadow[b]. William was ancestor of the family of Keynes, and the mesne manor was accordingly subordinate to, and within the jurisdiction of the leet of DODFORD, the head of their barony in this county. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Ralph de Keynes is certified to have one hide in "Brockehole," and "Muscote[c];" in the division of the Testa de Neville compiled about 24 Hen. 3 (1240), Matthew Wake is returned to hold one small fee and a half in "Brochole," of the fees of Simon Montfort, of the honor of Leicester[d]; and in the book of knight's fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295), the vills of "Brockhole" and "Mescote," except seven virgates of the fee of Warwick, were in the tenure of Joan de Lucien, by the service of a knight's fee and a half, and held of the heir of Robert de Keynes, who held of the earl of Leicester, and the earl of the king in capite[e]. By the inquisition after the death of sir Robert Tirwhit in 3 Edw. 6 (1549), the manor of "Brokehole," extending into Muscote, was found to be held of Humphrey Stafford, esq. as of his manor of Dodford, by service of a knight's fee and a half, and 2s. rent[f], or "certain silver" as it is sometimes termed in the old court rolls[g]. The constables for Brockhole and Muscote continue to be appointed at the Dodford court.

MANOR. By an early subinfeudation from Keynes, this manor was obtained from the family of Wac or Wake, who had possessions in Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, and Somersetshire, and appear to have been totally unconnected with the baronial house of Wake, whose collateral representative is still seated in this county ¶. The early descents of the annexed pedigree are rather problematical, but several small grants of Matthew Wake are extant[h]; he married the third of the four daughters of Henry Luvell, or Lovell, of Castle Cary in Somersetshire, between whom the manor of Weston Gordana in that county, held by barony, was divided by their father[i]; he died 32 Hen. 3 (1247-8), leaving three daughters and coheiresses[k], of whose husbands the king took homage for their lands the same year[l], and in the following year, on a partition probably of the estates, Berenger de Welles and Christiana his wife, and Richard de Wigbery and Ela his wife, by fine released their right and interest (int. al.) in the manor and advowson of Brockhole to Philip Lucien and Joan his wife, with remainder to Joan in fee[m]. Joan survived her husband, and was succeeded by her son sir Philip Lucien, whose widow had this manor in dower, and afterwards married Edmund Pinkney, who, in 4 Edw. 3 (1330), obtained a charter for free warren here and in his lands in Buckinghamshire and Gloucestershire[n], and dying 6 Edw. 3 (1332), left Alice, his only daughter and heiress, aged 20 years; but this manor passed to sir Philip Lucien, the son of his wife Margaret by her former husband[o]. In 18 Ric. 2 (1394-5), sir Warine Lucien made a settlement of the manors and advowsons of Brockhole in Northamptonshire and Buckhorn Weston in Dorsetshire to the use of himself for life; remainder to Katherine Spriggy for life; and the reversion in trust to be sold, and after payment of his debts the surplus to be placed at the disposal of the said Katherine or her executors[p].

Of Katherine Spriggy or her trustees, the reversion of this manor and advowson was purchased by Sir Robert Tirwhit, who, by deed 11 Hen. 4 (1409-10), demised them to the said Katherine for life.

Sir Robert Tirwhit was an eminent lawyer, and successively a justice in the courts of common pleas and king's bench. (1582), conveyed it to

Lawrence Eyton, gent. and Edward Eyton, his son and heir apparent, in fee.

The Thorntons were originally settled at Newnham; but, on the acquisition of Brockhole, its superior situation induced them to desert their former residence. THE MANOR HOUSE, contiguous to the south side of the church-yard, occupies an elevated site, flanked by plantations, and commanding a pleasingly diversified view over the valley. It is an handsome and commodious edifice of Harleston stone, three stories high, with south east, south west, and north west fronts, 'supposed to be built by the Eytons,' but considerably altered and improved by the present possessor. The south east front retains the original windows, with stone mullions and transoms. In the hall is an exquisite portrait by an unknown artist, not less deserving of notice for its delicacy of execution and chasteness of colouring, than for its being traditionally appropriated to *Robert Catesby the conspirator; which supposition is so strikingly corroborated by the characteristic attitude of careless defiance, and air of fixed and fearless resolution, as to leave scarcely a doubt of its correctness.

* Vide ASHBY LEDGER.

The Village stands on rising ground about four miles from Daventry. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'about twelve houses.' By the census of 1801 it contained 11 houses and 70 inhabitants; and by the return of 1811, 12 houses and 78 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish including Muscote is £141. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2,300. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, was £160. 14s. 2d. at 3s. in the £. The wake follows St. Peter, but has been long discontinued.

The Advowson has been uniformly appendant to the manor.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. It is valued at 9 marks (£6.) per ann. in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[p], and of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[q]; and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £13. 10s. 7d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[r]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified that it was a parsonage presentative, worth £68. per ann. in the patronage of John Thornton, esq. and that William Barlee the incumbent was resident[s]. By a decree of the court of chancery 11 Feb. 16 Jac. (1619-20), two plots of ground were set out in lieu of the glebe lands; one containing 4 acres, near the parsonage house, and the other containing about 33 acres, between the brook and the Watling street road. Part of the latter plot was sold in 1802 to redeem the land tax of the rectory, and the remainder has been recently exchanged (under 55 Geo. 3. c. 147) for a plot of land of 4 a. 0 r. 19 p. adjoining to the home close, and two others, containing together 38 a. 0 r. 1 p. in the adjoining parish of Flore. Tithes are paid from the rest of the parish, except a tract of land called Roughmer grounds, for which an annual payment is made of 13s. 4d. There is likewise a close of 3 a. 2 r. 7 p. in Muscote field belonging to this rectory, which was allotted under the Whilton inclosure act to the rector of Brockhole, in lieu of his moiety of the tithes of corn and grain in that field; and an annual payment of £1. 13s. 4d. is made to the said rector from certain old inclosures in Muscote belonging to earl Spencer. £151. 17s. 10d. four per cent. consols, also belong to this rectory, being the produce of monies received from the Grand Junction Canal Company, and a surplus remaining after the redemption of the land tax.

The parsonage house stands north of the church, and is a genteel residence built by the present incumbent.

James Cranford, A. M. was presented by John Thornton, of Newenham, gent. and instituted 25 Oct. 1627. He was born at Coventry, and educated at Baliol coll. Oxford. In 1642 he obtained the rectory of St. Christopher le Stocks in London, which he retained till his death in 1657. He joined the presbyterian party, by whom he was selected for one of the licencers of the press in London. His works are, "Confutation of the Anabaptists," 4to. "Exposition on the Prophecies of Daniel," 1644, 4to. "The Mischief which Heresies do, and the means to prevent them," a sermon on 2 Tim. 2. v. 17. Lond. 1646, 4to. He resigned this rectory to

William Barlee, 4 May 1643, who, "by reason of the wars between the royalists and parliamentarians," did not become a constant resident till Feb. 1646[u]. He was a zealous calvinist, and in conjunction with Dr. Edward Reynolds, rector of Braunston (afterwards bishop of Norwich), and Mr. Whitfield, rector of Bugbrook, carried on a spirited polemical controversy with Dr. Pierce, rector of Brington; towards which he contributed "Correptory correction of Mr. Thomas Pierce, rector of Brington, for his notes concerning God's decrees, especially of Reprobation," with an epistolary preface by his "loving friend and fellow labourer," Edw. Reynolds, 1656. To this Pierce replied, in "The Divine Purity defended, or a vindication," &c. from some censure of Dr. Reynolds' in his epistolary preface to Correptory Correction;" which drew from Barlee "A necessary vindication of the doctrine of Predestination formerly asserted, together with a full Absurtion of all Calumnies cast upon the late Correptory Correction by Mr. Thomas Pierce," (1658, 4to.); and Pierce rejoined in "The Self Revenger exemplified in Mr. Will. Barlee," and "Self Condemnation exemplified in Mr. Whitfield, Mr. Barlee, and Mr. Hickman," &c. He was buried here 8 May 1688[t], and

William Barton, A. M. was inst. 8 June 1688, on the presentation of John Thornton, esq. He resigned the vicarages of Naseby and Wedon Bec for this rectory, and was buried here 26 June 1707[t]. His successor was

The Register commences in 1561, "according to the old book."

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, consists of an embattled tower containing two bells, nave, south aisle and porch, and chancel. Though small and simple, it is not devoid of interest, as vestiges of the original structure are still discernible. The inner door of the south porch has a plain norman arch without columns. To the west of the porch is a small trefoil-headed lancet window; to the east is a plain double lancet window with a general dripstone; and at the east return of the aisle is a larger window, with a depressed arch of a much later period. At the west end of the tower is a broad flat shallow projection, having two slight set-offs at top like a buttress, and in the middle is a small lancet window, which, when viewed from the interior, displays a remarkably deep and expanding embrasure. The north front, or nave, may be referred to the 14th century, and is lighted by two windows, between three buttresses with plain upper stages, and numerous basement tables continued along the wall. The windows are uniform, each being divided by a single mullion cinquefoiled, with a flowing quatrefoil in the head. The chancel is modern. The interior has been recently paved, pewed, and fitted up with peculiar neatness. The nave and south aisle are 37 ft. 7 in. long, the nave 16 ft. 5 in. and the aisle 11 ft. wide; the chancel is 18 ft. 3 in. long, and 13 ft. 2 in. wide. At the west end of the nave is an octagonal font, having a rose or other ornament round the space between the shaft and the upper faces. The dividing arcade between the nave and aisle retains a remnant of the primitive norman edifice; the two eastern arches being semi-circular, and springing from the outer edges of the square shallow capitals of the two supporting pillars, which are low and circular with circular bases. The third arch is pointed, resting at the west extremity on a demi-octangular column inserted in the wall. The nave is separated from the tower by a lofty pointed arch closed up, and from the chancel by a similar one still open.

The Roman Watling-street road, the course of which through the county will be given in the general introduction, passes through this lordship; and, as might be naturally expected, roman coins are still occasionally found here.

MUSCOTE,

An hamlet west of Brockhole, consisting of four detached houses including the water-mill, is, in its civil capacity, a member of Brockhole, being assessed with it to the land tax and constable's rates; but in its ecclesiastical relations is dependent on Norton, to which parish it contributes poor and church rates, and under which vicarage a recent suit for the tithes of some of the old inclosure will be noticed. The rector of Brockhole receives an annual payment for tithes arising out of part of the old inclosure; and a small tract of open land called Muscote field, which is exempt from poor rates and therefore considered extra-parochial, paid tithe in moieties to the rector of Brockhole and the impropriate rector of Norton, until exonerated under the inclosure act. These parochial anomalies may be ascribed to the circumstance of its having been originally composed of two distinct fees. The portion which belonged to the fee of the earl of Warwick—the paramount lord of Norton—was held by Sampson Gerveys or North'ton, whose fee is expressly named in the endowment of Norton vicarage*; and the other portion of the vill which was held of the fee of Keynes, as it was manorially, may probably have been originally parochially annexed to Brockhole; but from the operation of causes which elude modern investigation, the primitive interests of each parish in this hamlet, and their precise boundaries, are now blended and confounded.

The old inclosures contain about 330 acres, of which about 200 acres belong to earl Spencer, and upwards of 120 acres to T. R. Thornton, esq. Muscote field, adjoining Whilton lordship, and inclosed under the same act, 17 Geo. 3 (1777), contains about 60 acres, divided amongst different proprietors.

Manorial History. Keynes Fee. This division of Muscote is included in the manor of Brockhole, and has been so from the time of the conquest, but in 25 Eliz. (1583) part of the lands belonging to it were sold by the Eyton family to sir John Spencer, ancestor of earl Spencer, the present proprietor.

Mellent or Warwick Fee*. Gerveys Manor. This estate does not occur in domesday, being then included in the general survey of Norton; but it must have been granted out within the succeeding century, as, in the hydarium of Hen. 2, Gervais Sampson is returned to hold one hide of the fee of Warwick[b]. His baptismal name was adopted by his descendants for their surname, and in 24 Edw. 1 (1295), this hide, then described as seven virgates, was in the tenure of John Gerveys[c]. In plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), Sampson Gerveys claimed to have by prescription, view of frank pledge of all his tenants in Muscote, wayf, and toll of ½d. for every cart load of salt passing through his fee for sale; but it appearing that he punished offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of 12d. and not by pillory or tumbril according to law, the view of frank pledge was seised into the king's hands, but restored for half a mark; and he and his ancestors having sometimes taken ½d. sometimes ¼d. and he, at that time, exacting as much as 6d. for every load of salt, judgment of the toll was respited[d]. Among the feudatories of Thomas (Beauchamp) earl of Warwick in the inquisition after his death, 2 Hen. 4 (1402), the heir of Philip Gerveys held the fourth part of a fee in Muscote. The first time it is specifically stiled a manor, is on its alienation by this family in 5 Hen. 8 (1513), when Anthony Gerveys levied a fine of the manor of Muscote to

Walter Mewson and Alice his wife[e]. In 17 Hen. 8 (1525), Robert Skypton, of Brockhole, died seised of this manor, held of the king as of his castle of Warwick, leaving Alice aged 15 years, Joan aged 14 years, and Elizabeth aged 13 years, his daughters and coheiresses[f]. Alice, the eldest, appears to have settled this manor on her husband, William Gent, of Norton, esq. who died 6 Eliz. (1564), and whose son by a second wife, William Gent, esq.[g] in 18 Eliz. (1576), levied a fine of it to

Sir John Spencer of 'Oldthorp'; from whom it has passed under the same title as Althorp to the present proprietor, George-John 2d earl Spencer.

BUGBROOK.

In domesday "Buchebroc," is not improbably derived from the saxon bugen and broc, and may be allusive to the winding brooks or streams with which the village and lordship are intersected. The lordship contains about 2190 acres. The open fields, comprising about 1580 acres, were inclosed by act of parliament 19 Geo. 3 (1779). The earl of Pomfret, lord of the manor, has about 80 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 380 acres; Henry Cadwallader Adams, of Anstey in Warwickshire, esq. about 250 acres; Rowland Alston, of Odell in Bedfordshire, esq. about 190 acres; Mr. John Ashby about 130 acres; and Mr. William Harris about 110 acres. It is bounded on the north by Heyford; north west by a small part of Harpole; north east by Kislingbury; east by Rothersthorp in Wymersley hundred; south west and south by Gayton and Pateshull in Towcester hundred; and west by Stowe in Fawsley hundred. The soil is chiefly loam and strong clay, well adapted for wheat, beans, and barley. The hills are a light red land, and bear excellent seeds and turnips. A considerable portion of the lordship is in pasture. Oak, elm, and arbele poplar thrive well in this lordship. The following scarce plants have been found here. Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock. Rosa arvensis, field Rose. Pastinaca sativa, common Parsnip. Cardamine amara, Bitter Cress. Rubus corylifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble. Trifolium fragiferum, Strawberry-headed Trefoil. In the limestone of this lordship there is an unusual quantity of escallop shells in good preservation, most of them exhibiting the substance of the shell itself. Morton mentions an ammonite with five wreaths[a], and petrified wood[t] as sometimes found here. There are both lime and brick kilns, but no stone quarries used for building. On the rectorial land is a remarkably copious spring, and there are two chalybeate springs, one on the estate of H. C. Adams, esq. and the other in a field belonging to Mr. John Ashby. Two mills are noticed in domesday, one only is remaining, which stands on the western branch of the river Nen.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE. HONOR OF BOULOGNE. HONOR OF CHESTER. The saxon proprietor is unknown, but at the domesday survey "Buchebroc" was one of the demesne manors of the earl of Moreton, and consisted of four hides. The arable land was ten carucates. In demesne were three carucates, and four servants; and 30 villeins and 14 bordars cultivated the remainder with 10 ploughs. There were two mills worth 40s. yearly, 30 acres of meadow, and four acres of wood[x]. To the soke or jurisdiction of this manor belonged one virgate and two parts of a virgate in Heyford held by Ralph[t]; the same quantity in the same vill held by another Ralph[m]; and one virgate and three parts of a virgate in the same vill held by Walter[m]. Robert earl of Moreton, or Mortaigne, in Normandy, was uterine brother of William the conqueror, who raised him to the earldom of Cornwall, and enriched him with lands of the ejected saxons to an extent far exceeding the most lavish allotments to any other of the norman favorites. The aggregate of this earl's manors dispersed through the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Hants, Sussex, Suffolk, York, Nottingham, Northampton, Cambridge, Hertford, Middlesex, Bucks, Oxford, Glocester, and Wilts, amounted to the almost incredible number of 793. In this county alone 99 manors were held by, or under him. Besides Bugbrook, he held in demesne the whole or parts of Little Billing, Weston (Favell), Church Brampton, East Haddon, Ravensthorp, Heyford, Yelvertoft, Helmdon, Alderton, Cosgrave, and Sywell, retaining only a paramount interest over the remaining manors, which were distributed in unequal proportions amongst nearly 20 of his retainers or dependants, under certain reserved feudal services. Before the right of primogeniture was firmly established, the eldest son frequently received a specific share only, instead of the whole of the paternal inheritance; and conformably to this practice, on the decease of William the conqueror, William Rufus, the second son, ascended the english throne in exclusion of his elder brother Robert, whom his father had previously provided for in the duchy of Normandy. The earl of Moreton joined the confederacy headed by his brother Odo earl of Kent in favor of Robert's claim to the crown, but being attacked in his castle of Pevensey in Sussex, he surrendered to king William on a stipulated promise of pardon. When he died is uncertain; but he was succeeded by his son, William second earl of Moreton and Cornwall, a man of a turbulent and ambitious spirit. King Henry 1 refusing to accede to his demand of the earldom of Kent as heir of his uncle Odo, he repaired to Normandy, and zealously engaging in the cause of duke Robert, was taken prisoner with him at the battle of Tenerchebray in 1106 (6 Hen. 1), and being brought back to England was imprisoned for life and deprived of his eyes by order of the king. Dugdale presumes that he had neither wife nor issue; but according to Lodge, in his irish peerage, he left two sons, Adelm, ancestor of the De Burghs earls of Clanrickarde in Ireland; and John, ancestor of Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent in the reign of Hen. 3. He was banished the realm, his castles razed to the ground, and all his lands and honors confiscated, on his first quitting the kingdom. The immense possessions which escheated to the crown by this forfeiture, formed one of the principal funds which supplied the two succeeding monarchs with the means of rewarding the fidelity, and sometimes the treachery of their respective adherents. In 5 Stephen (1139-40), Reginald, an illegitimate son of Hen. 1, perhaps as the price of deserting the empress Maud, whom he had previously supported, obtained the earldom of Cornwall with the lands and knight's fees annexed. Several manors in this county were attached to the honor of *Berkhampsted, parcel of this earldom; but the far greater proportion of the Moreton fee in this county became incorporated with the earldom of *Leicester, subsequently divided into the honors of Leicester † and Winchester *; and the residue contributed to augment the honors of Aquila ‡, Abrincis §, Mowbray ‖, and other seignories, which it is unnecessary to enumerate here, as they will be detailed where they successively occur.

Bugbrook probably passed with the grant from Hen. 1 of the earldom of Moreton to Stephen of Blois, afterwards king Stephen, who married the daughter and heiress of Eustace earl of Boulogne, to which honor this manor was united. In 9 Joh. (1207), it appears by the pipe roll that Hugh (Kevelioc, late) earl of Chester, owed 100 marks for a summons to enquire whether his grandfather Randle (Bricasard) earl of Chester died seised in demesne of the manor of "Buckebroc[m];" in the inquisition of knight's fees 13 Joh. "Bokebroc" is returned under the honor of Boulogne, and is stated to have been formerly held by the knights of sir Richard Lucy, but was then in possession of the earl of Chester[n]; a similar entry occurs in the feodary's account of that honor 6 Hen. 3 (1221-2)[o], and again, under the honor of Boulogne, in the Testa de Nevill for Hertfordshire and Essex, "Bokebroc" in Northamptonshire is described as formerly part of the demesne, afterwards in the hands of the knights of sir Richard Lucy, and then of the earl of Chester[p]. In the same record for this county, the earl of Chester is certified to hold this manor of the king in capite by barony[q]; and on the death of earl Randle s. p. in 1232 (17 Hen. 3), it passed with his other possessions to his four sisters and coheiresses.

FERRARS MANOR. "Buckbrook," together with Navenby in Lincolnshire, the castles and manors of Chartley in Staffordshire and West Derby in Lancashire, and all earl Randle's lands between the rivers of Ribble and Mersey, formed the purparty of Agnes, the third sister, wife of William Ferrars earl of Derby[t]. 'By a deed of 'gift made in his life-time, the earl Ferrars settled the manor of Bugbrook on Hugh his younger son[u], who, in the 'thirty-fifth year of Hen. III. obtained a grant of free warren to himself and his heirs in all his demesne lands 'here[v]. This Hugh had a daughter named Cecily, married to Geoffrey (or Godfrey) de Beaumont, who on the 'decease of Hugh her father, succeeded to this manor[w].' She died in 18 Edw. 1[x], and her husband survived three years, when, by an office taken on his decease, it was found that besides divers manors or lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in his own right, he had held by courtesy, of the inheritance of Cecily his late wife, the manor of Bugbrook, with a capital messuage and garden worth 30s. a dovehouse worth 5s. 14 virgates of land of 30 acres each in demesne, &c. &c. altogether of the yearly value of £58. 3s. 9½d. of the honor of Chester, by the service of two fees, and that John, son of Robert de Ferrers, was cousin and next heir of Cecily, aged 22 years and upwards[y].

His claim to this manor was, however, impleaded by John Bigod, and as the contest continued no less than thirteen years, and tends to illustrate the legal proceedings of a remote period, an abstract of the suit may not be altogether uninteresting. The case was in the first instance submitted to parliament; and the king issued a mandate to his escheator to take possession of all the lands held by Godfrey de Beaumont of the inheritance of Cecily de Ferrars, his late wife, and to enquire by jury what lands he held of the king within his bailiwick, of the said inheritance; what lands he held of other persons, by what services, of what annual value, and who is next heir. By which inquisition it was found that the manor of "Bokebrok" was the right and inheritance of the said Cecily, who was seised thereof in demesne as of fee at the day of her death, and that she and the said Godfrey her husband, at the suit of John Bigod, appeared collusively before the king, and acknowledged the said manor to be his right, although at that time, and previously and subsequently, they were in possession of the manor; and by reason of a certain contract between them and the said John, their servants and bailiffs were not removed from the manor, nor its condition altered; and that John de Ferrars, son of Robert de Ferrars, was next heir of Cecily, and of full age: whereupon the said John de Ferrars came and prayed seisin; but John Bigod by his attorney prayed to be heard as to his right, and in like manner Edmund, the king's brother (earl of Lancaster), by his attorney prayed to be heard as to his right. The king, desirous of doing justice to all parties, appointed Monday after St. Peter for the said John and Edmund to shew cause why seisin should not be given to John de Ferrars according to the tenor of the inquisition. On which day John Bigod came and pleaded, that, in trinity term 6 Edw. 1, a fine was levied between him the said John, querent, and Godfrey de Beaumont and Cecily his wife, deforciants, of the manor of Bugbrook, whereby they acknowledged his right, and, in consideration thereof, he granted the manor with its appurtenances to them and the heirs of their bodies for ever, but if they died s. p. that then the manor should revert to him and his heirs, quit of all claim from any of their heirs, to hold of the chief lord of the fee by the accustomed services; and he produced the chirograph of the fine, with a transcript under the exchequer seal to this effect, and contended that Cecily having only had an estate for life in the manor, it ought to revert to him in pursuance of the fine, notwithstanding the inquisition. John de Ferrars admitted his knowledge of the fine having been levied between the parties, but alleged that he ought not to be hindered of his seisin thereby, for that the fine was void of itself, nor could John Bigod take any estate thereby, because at the time of levying it, and as well before, as after, the deforciants were in seisin as the inheritance of Cecily, whose heir he is; he admitted that they might have demised the manor to the querent, but he was ready to prove that Cecily died seised of the manor in her demesne as of fee. John Bigod being asked what further he had to allege against the claim of John de Ferrars, repeated only that the fine was levied as aforesaid; and the court, after reciting the heads of the pleadings, were of opinion that he had shown no sufficient cause why seisin should not be granted to John de Ferrars, as next heir of Cecily, and commanded the escheator to give seisin of the manor to John de Ferrars accordingly, saving to John Bigod his right of action at law upon the fine[z]. Parliament being a court of equity, could not determine the question of fact whether the fine was collusive or not, and the claimant availing himself of this saving clause, renewed his claim before another tribunal. In Michaelmas term 30 Edw. 1 (1302), a precept was issued to the sheriff of the county, reciting the aforesaid fine, to require Alianore, widow of Robert de Ferrars (late earl of Derby), and John de Ferrars (her son), and Walter de Walton, to shew why the said manor ought not to revert according to the tenor of the said fine. Alianore (who appears to have had an assignment of dower out of the manor after the parliamentary decree had put her son in possession) took several exceptions: 1st, that she ought not to be ejected from her free tenement without a special writ; 2d, that the writ purports to be between them as if they were tenants in common, whereas they are tenants in severalty; 3d, that she was no party to the fine; 4th, that she holds the manor for term of life, except £10. rent, by demise from the said John Ferrars, and therefore seeks aid. Another plea touching the premises came on in Easter term 31 Edw. 1. r. 30. when John produced the king's charter of protection; and the process continued till Easter term 32 Edw. 1, when a new summons issued by another writ, to which Alianore and John de Ferrars successfully urged certain technical informalities, and it was adjudged that as to that writ they should go without day[a]. John Bigod died, pending the suit, in the 33d of this reign; but it was revived in Hilary term, 35 Edw. 1, by John Bigod, as his son and heir, against the aforesaid John de Ferrars and Hawise his wife (Alianore his mother being then dead), who pleaded the illegitimacy of the claimant; on which he withdrew, and Ralph Bigod, affirming himself to be the son and heir of John Bigod the father, put in his claim, and demanded that, as judgment had not been given, whatever had been done between John and Hawise, and John who pretended to be the heir of John

Bigod, should not be to his prejudice[b]. The case was adjourned to 15 days of Easter, when many facts were brought forward in corroboration of the fine. The court held that the word reversion is of such a nature, that he to whom, or to whose heir, any tenements ought to revert, must first stand seised of the tenements which ought to revert; because they cannot revert except to him in whose seisin they were, or to his heirs: and judgment was pronounced in the presence of all the king's council, the chancellor, the treasurer, the justices of both benches, and the barons of the exchequer, that execution of the fine should be done, and that Ralph Bigod, son and heir of John Bigod, should have writ of execution according to the form thereof[c]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), John de Dodington, chaplain, brought an assize of novel disseisin against Ralph Bigod and others, relative to the manor of "Buchbroc," to which Ralph pleaded that in the time of Edw. 1 a fine was levied between Godfrey Beaumont and Cecily his wife, plaintiffs, and John Bigod, deforciant, wherein the right of the said John (his father) was acknowledged[d]. In a few years, however, either through failure of issue in the Bigods or by purchase, it was re-obtained by the family of Ferrars; 'for in the twentieth of Edw. III. upon collecting the aid for making the king's son a knight[e], Robert 'de Ferrers accounted for one knight's fee in Bugbrook as of the honor of Ferrers;' and this manor continued in the direct male line of his descendants to its extinction in William 6th baron Ferrars of Chartley; on whose decease 28 Hen. 6 (1450), the entailed family estates resorted to his brother and heir male Edmund Ferrars; and the manor of Bugbrook, held of the king as of the duchy of Lancaster by the 20th part of a fee, descended (int. al.) to his daughter and heiress,

Anne, then 11 years of age, and wife of Walter Devereux[f], who, in her right, was summoned to parliament as baron Ferrars of Chartley in 1 Edw. 4 (1461). In the minister's accompts of his grandson, Walter lord Ferrars (afterwards viscount Hereford), for the year ending Michaelmas 19 Hen. 8 (1527), William Symondes, bailiff, and Stephen Messer, make the following return for "Bukbroke," viz. for rents of assize and at will £37. 13s. 5d. for farm of demesne land £21. 16s. 4d. for farm of mill and fishery £3. total £62. 9s. 9d.; out of which are deducted, for rent formerly paid to the marquis of Dorset, and now to the king at his manor of Grafton, 3s. for decrease of rent 5s. 4d. for fees and necessary expenses 9s. 8d. total 18s. leaving a clear receipt of £61. 11s. 9d.[g]; and another roll for 3 Edw. 6 (1549), Richard Pykering, bailiff and deputy steward, varies only a few shillings in amount. There is an allowance of 1s. in each of the foregoing accompts, for the tenants' expenses in perambulating the fields or boundaries of the lordship, on days called cross-days, which is stated in the former to be an ancient custom used there, and in the latter to be of the mere motion of the lord and also an antient custom. It appears from a licence of alienation, that Robert 2d earl of Essex, the ill-fated favorite of queen Elizabeth, great-grandson of the above Walter, conveyed the manor of "Bugbrook," in 1591, to

Sir Thomas Shirley[h], of Wiston in Sussex.

Sir Thomas Shirley retained this manor but five years, when he alienated it to Gregory Isham, esq.[1] afterwards of Barby, who alienated it in 1602 to Edward lord Zouch[k] of Harringworth, and his lordship in 1605 to Richard Mottershed and others[l]. By an inquisition after the death of Richard Ashbie in 1619, he was found to die seised of a messuage and a quarter of a virgate of land, held of Richard Cope, esq. as of his manor of Bugbrook[m]. After these rapid transitions of ownership, the descent of this manor is involved in obscurity till 1693, when it was included in a settlement made by Thomas lord Crewe of Steane, and on the partition of the Crewe estates amongst his daughters and coheiresses, was assigned (int. al.) to

Armyne, wife of Thomas Cartwright, esq. of Aynho, whose lineal descendant William Ralph Cartwright, esq. M. P. for the county, conveyed it, in 1808, to

Mr. Samuel Hughes, of Northampton, who, the following year, sold it to

George 2nd earl of Pomfret[*], the present proprietor. A court baron is held for the manor.

Grestein Abbey Lands. Pateshull Lands. The abbey of Grestein in Normandy, in addition to the advowson, had a hide of land, or four virgates as it is afterwards termed, in Bugbrook; which, in the Norwich taxation 1254 (38 Hen. 3), is rated, amongst the temporalities of the abbey, at 25*s. per ann.* but does not occur in the subsequent taxations, having been granted to the Ferrars family, and the reserved rents or services annexed to the abbey-manor of Grafton, to which manor it has been seen a small chief rent was paid by Walter lord Ferrars temp. Hen. 8, and certain inhabitants still pay to the honor of Grafton. The family of Pateshull† were the mesne lords of this estate. Simon de Pateshull died 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), seised of four virgates of land in "Bockebroc," held of John de Ferrars by 6*d.* rent[o]; and on the death of sir William Pateshull, s. p. it passed to his third sister and coheiress, Katherine, wife of sir Robert Tudenham[p], and is included in all the inquisitions of that family to the reign of Hen. 4, but can be traced no further.

The Village is about six miles from Northampton; at the western extremity is a considerable wharf on the Grand Junction canal. Bridges states that 'the town, including the mill, contains an hundred and six houses. 'Seven houses are appropriated to the poor.' By the census of 1801 this parish contained 128 houses and 611 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 133 houses and 651 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £204. 18*s.* at 4*s.* in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3,794. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending ADVOWSON. The confirmation charter of king Richard 1 to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy in 1189, recites the grant of the church of "Butebroc," with the tithes and lands thereto belonging, and a hide of land which Aluric held, together with the churches of Grafton (Regis) and Helmdon, by William earl of Moreton[p], grandson of the founder; and by a similar charter from king Edward 2 in 1316, it appears that Ranulph, or Randle, earl of Chester, gave and confirmed to the abbot, the church of "Bucchebrok," and four virgates of land with pertinencies in the said village[q]. Sir Michael de la Pole, afterwards earl of Suffolk, presented to the rectory in 1364; and in 14 Ric. 2 (1390-1) sir Edmond de la Pole, his brother, had a grant (int. al.) of the advowson of "Bucbroc," late belonging to sir Michael de la Pole, attainted[r]; but it soon after reverted to the line of the earls and dukes of Suffolk, and falling to the crown by the attainder of the last duke, was granted in 34 Hen. 8 (1542), to sir Edmund Knightley[s], whose nephew, sir Richard Knightley, of Fawsley, sold it in 1594 for £300. to Thomas Temple, esq.[t] of Stow in Buckinghamshire. Sir Peter Temple, knt. and bart. jointly with Richard Wallop, esq. conveyed it in 1639 to the trustees of Mrs. Eleanor Burkitt, widow of the rev. Dr. William Burkitt, who by her will devised it to her grandsons William, John, Samuel, and Thomas Whitfield, successively in tail male, and in 1785 it was sold by their representative, John Whitfield, of London, esq. to Henry Harrison, of Daventry, gent. whose son, the rev. H. B. Harrison, is the present patron and incumbent.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of West Haddon. It is valued at 17 marks (£11. 6s. 8d) per ann. deducting a pension of 3 marks (£2.) to the abbot of Grestein, in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[u], and of pope Nicholas in 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[x]; and in the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8) at £34. 10s. 8d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[y]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified that it was a parsonage presentative worth £170. per ann. in the patronage as is reported of Richard Raynsford, esq. in trust for the daughter of William Burkitt, clerk, deceased, and that Thomas Whitfield, the present incumbent, was presented by the lords commissioners of the great seal[z]. The rectory consists of 382 a. 2 r. 23 p. (land tax redeemed) allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe lands, and of all tithes of the open or common fields, and of such parts of the homesteads and old inclosures as were agreed by the respective proprietors to be exonerated; about 80 acres of the old inclosures still remaining tithable. There is also a small piece of ground, part of the old Chester turnpike road, in the parish of Stow nine churches, containing 2 a. 1 r. 27 p. given in exchange to the rector of Bugbrook for 1 a. 2 r. 27 p. part of the new turnpike road; and the interest of £944. 4s. 4d. 3 per cent. cons. arising from the sale of 8 a. 2 r. 35 p. to the Grand Junction canal company and to the trustees of the Chester turnpike road. The three berewics in the two Heyfords attached to this manor in the domesday survey, appear to have been annexed to this parish, though bearing the local name of another; and the rector of Bugbrook receives an annual payment of £16. 10s. for tithes of lands in Upper Heyford, and £22. and upwards arising from the tithes of old and new inclosures in Nether Heyford; besides an allotment under the Nether Heyford inclosure act of a small close containing 3 a. 37 p. in lieu of certain small portions of land and tithes. The parsonage-house stands west of the church, and has been recently rebuilt in a very handsome style by the present incumbent.

Mast. William Barlee, LL. B. by the king, 23 Mar. 1531-2. He was also rector of Blisworth, and on his decease, William Tresham, S. T. P. was presented by the king, and instituted 1 Feb. 1541-2. He was fourth son of Richard Tresham, esq. of Newton, where he was born, and where a brief memoir of him will be introduced. He was deprived of this rectory and of his canonry of Christ Church for recusancy in 1560, and was buried here in 1569.

Thomas Marshall, A. M. archdeacon of Lincoln, and rector of Turwestone in Buckinghamshire, and of Bugbrook in Northamptonshire, died in 1559, and willed to be buried at Bugbrook according to Browne Willis; but the statement so far as relates to this rectory is certainly incorrect, for Tresham was not ejected till 1560, and

Sir William Archbolde, who had been previously rector of Kislingbury, was presented by sir Valentine Knightley, and inst. 21 Oct. of that year, in the room of the last incumbent, "justly deprived." On his cession, Robert Newton was inst. 17 Jan. 1560-1, on the presentation of Walter Mohun, esq. by grant from sir Valentine Knightley, p. h. v.

Thomas Middleton, clerk, was presented by Richard Wallop, esq. and inst. 29 July 1603, on the decease of the last incumbent. By indenture 2 Nov. 5 Jac. (1607), he granted a lease of the rectory, with the glebe and tithes, &c. in Bugbrook, Upper Heyford, and Nether Heyford, to the said Mr. Wallop for 60 years, at £20. per ann. for the first three years, and 40 marks (£26. 13s. 4d.) per ann. for the residue of the term. He was buried here 3 May 1637[a], and

George Jay, A. M. was inst. 22 Nov. 1637, on the presentation of the king by lapse. He was sequestered by the parliamentary committee sitting at Northampton, who, on his petition to a committee of lords and commons, were required to certify the causes of the sequestration, and on 20 Nov. 1644, reported that "Mr. Jay "absentinge himselfe from his cure above a q'ter of a "yeare together," they had secured his estate according to the ordinance of parliament for seising delinquent's estates, and add, that "the said Mr. Jay not coming "in according to the said ordinance for the clearing "himselfe, but being certified that notwithstanding his "p'tended Licence from the Parliam[t] to goe to the "Spawe (upon his p'tence) for the recovery of his "health, yet he continued still in England, in certaine "houses and places upon the borders of the king's army "and within the king's quarters in a concealed and dis-"guised way, and alsoe to avoid the —all covenants "as in one of the annexed Inform' appeares, and we "beleeve he is still in England, and upon some of the "latter Inform' coming against him we absolutely se-"questered his estate in this county[b]." He is presumed to have been the same George Jay who was prebendary of Lichfield. He was succeeded here by Thomas Whitfield, whom Walker styles "one W—, a perfect Wanderer and Strouler in Divinity." He was educated at Cambridge, and incorporated at Oxford in 1620. Previously to his settling here he was minster at Great Yarmouth. His controversy with Dr. Pierce, rector of Brington, has been incidentally adverted to in the notice of Mr. Barlee, of Brockhole, and his principles are sufficiently developed in the titles of his publications, 1. "A Vindication of the Doctrine of God's absolute Decrees, and of Christ's absolute and special Redemption, by way of answer to those objections that are brought against them by Mr. Thomas Pierce, in his treatise entitled "The divine Philanthropy'." Lond. 1637, 4to. 2. "The extent of Divine Providence, or a Treatise tending to show that the just and holy God may have a hand in the unjust actions of sinful men, and that in such a way as shall be without any impeachment of his justness and holiness, or diminution of his power and providence;" dedicated to lord Montagu, 1651, 4to. He was succeeded by his son,

John Whitfield, of Jesus coll. Camb. A. M. who died 15[s], and was buried here 24 April 1705, having been rector 48 years[a]. He published "The dreadfulness of the Sin of despising Dominion, and speaking evil of Dignities," a sermon on Jude 8, preached before the lord mayor of London, 1682, 4to. His successor was his son-in-law,

Thomas Keynton, of Christ coll. Camb. A. M. presented by rev. Will. Whitfield, and Robert and Samuel Keynton, gents. and inst. 1 May 1705. He was buried here 9 June 1728[a], and

Edward Clarke, of Univ. coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 13 Aug. 1728, on the presentation of Samuel Whitfield, esq. He was also rector of Haselbech, and dying the following year,

William Gibbs, of Exeter coll. Oxf. A. M. was presented by the same patron, and inst. 18 July 1729. He was rector of Gayton and Great Houghton till his death in 1741; but resigning this benefice, was succeeded by

Samuel Keynton, A. B. who was inst. 11 Mar. 1733-4, on the presentation of the same patron, and was buried here 19 Apr. 1753[a]. On his decease,

Francis Raynsford, of Linc. coll. Oxf. A. M. younger brother of Justinian Raynsford, of Brixworth, esq. was presented by Thomas Whitfield, of the six clerks office, esq. and inst. 7 June 1753. He was rector of Hardwick from 1752 to 1755, and of Lamport from 1755 to 1773. He died at Northampton .. Apr. and was buried here 8 Apr. 1785; when

Edward Montgomery, A. B. formerly rector of Holcott, was presented by John Whitfield, of Manchester-square, London, esq. and instituted 18 Apr. 1785; on whose cession, Henry Bagshaw Harrison, of Magd. coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 10 Mar. 1789, on the presentation of his father Henry Bagshaw Harrison, of Daventry, gent. He is also patron and rector of Warmington in Warwickshire.

The Register in the time of Bridges commenced in 1538; but the first volume has been since lost, and the earliest entry of the present one is in 1637.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands in a spacious church-yard at the western extremity of the village, and though a respectable edifice, is devoid of architectural interest. It consists of a tower (in which are five bells), surmounted by a low spire, nave, north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, and chancel. Most of the windows are square headed. The tower is 15 ft. 1 in. long, by 9 ft. 8 in. wide; the nave and aisles are 51 ft. 11 in. long, the nave 18 ft. 10 in. and the aisles 11 ft. each wide; and the chancel and north chapel 31 ft. 7 in. long, the chancel 15 ft. 2 in. and the chapel 12 ft. 7 in. wide. The interior retains the open roof and is indifferently paved. The old parallel benches remain, with the exception of two or three pews. At the west end is a gallery. Attached to the middle pillar on the north side is an octagonal font, with trefoil headed arches on the shaft, and the trefoil head of an arch reversed on each of the upper compartments. At the east end of the south aisle is a piscina. The nave is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches; those on the north side supported by multangular pillars with plain capitals, and those on the south by circular pillars with plain capitals. The arch leading into the tower is of plain receding sloped mouldings. The entrance into the chancel is under a richly ornamented wooden screen, the mullions of which expanding into fan tracery form the base of the rood loft. The north chapel is separated from the aisle by a wooden screen, and communicates with the chancel by an open pointed arch. The east end is enclosed for a vestry.

The Quakers have a small place of worship in this village (about 30 ft. by 18 ft.) which has been recently rebuilt of brick. They occur here soon after the rise of that sect, as appears by the following singular "Memorand." in the parish register 1668. "About this time that untoward Generation of Quakers began to bury theirs "distinctly by themselves in their Gardens and Orchards in severall places of the Towne, all which Burialls (there "being no notice given of them to the Minr or Parish Clerke) are therefore here omitted, nor have their names "inserted in this Church Register, though there was then a considerable mortality among them, as also those of "several other sorts of Phanaticks, who having forsaken the Church would not be buried in the Church yard, but "in their orchards or backside of yr houses."

The Particular or Calvinistic Baptists have a neat stone-built chapel, about 40 ft. by 30 ft. erected a few years since near the centre of the village.

Benefactions. Whitfeld's charity consists of a small meadow of about 4 acres, which is let by auction, and brings in nearly £20. per ann.

DALLINGTON,

In domesday "Dailintone," suggests a paraphrase which perfectly accords with its situation, the town in the dale or valley. The lordship was inclosed by private agreement in 1720, and contains about 1460 acres; the whole of which is the property of Miss Wrighte, with the exception of about 40 acres belonging to the vicar in right of his church, and about 8 acres in St. James's End. It is bounded on the north by Brampton and Harleston; north-east and east by the Naseby branch of the river Nen, which divides it from Kingsthorp and Northampton in Spelho hundred; and south and west by Duston. The lordship lies on a gradual ascent from the river. It is almost exclusively arable, but the soil is various. On the eastern side, and approaching the hills, it is principally a strong clay, and in a north and north-westerly direction a light sand, including a heath of about 150 acres, planted with beech and fir, and intersected by ridings. The researches of the botanist are amply repaid in this lordship; the heath furnishes Hypericum pulchrum, upright St. John's wort. Gnaphalium rectum, upright Cudweed. Scabiosa Succisa, Devil's-bit Scabious. Ornithopus perpusillus, Bird's-foot. Galium procumbens, trailing Goosegrass. Rubus corylifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble. Rosa spinosissima, Burnet Rose. Genista anglica, needle Furze. Thymus Acinos, Basil Thyme. Erica cinerea, fine-leaved Heath. The same, a white variety. Erica vulgaris, Hoary Heath (variety). Blechnum Spicant, Rough Spleenwort. Polypodium Spinulosum. Polypodium Oreopteris, Heath Fern. Agaricus deliciosus, saffron-juiced Agaric. Agaricus muscarius, fly Agaric. In other parts of the lordship are found, Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Ophioglossum vulgatum, Adder's-tongue. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Dipsacus sylvestris, wild Teasle. Clinopodium vulgare, wild Basil. Senecio lividus, Green-sealed Groundsel. Chironia Centaurium, common Centory. Polygonum minus, creeping Snakeweed. Polygonum Bistorta, Snakeweed. Cardamine amara, bitter Cress. Cardamine flexuosa, flexuous Ladysmock. Cardamine hirsuta, hairy-leaved Ladysmock. Stellaria glauca, glaucous-leaved Marsh-Stitchwort. Stellaria uligonosa, bog Stitchwort. Leontodon hispidum, rough Dandelion. Tussilago Petasites, Butterbur. Antirrhinum Elatine, Sharp-pointed Fluellin. Sanguisorba officinalis, Blood-wort Burnet. Poterium Sanguisorba, Burnet. Rumex Paludosus, marsh Dock. Ranunculus hederaceus, Ivy-leaved Crowfoot. Phellandrium aquaticum, water Hemlock. Sisymbrium terrestre, Land Cress. Colchicum autumnale, meadow Saffron. Trifolium fragiferum, Strawberry Trefoil. Picris echioides, prickly Ox-tongue. Peziza coccinea, scarlet Peziza. The mill mentioned in domesday is on the Naseby branch of the Nen.

Manorial History. Peterborough Abbey Fee. Thorold, who presided over this abbey from 1069 to 1098, in the first year of his abbacy distributed 62 hides of the abbey lands amongst certain stipendiary knights, to secure their aid in defending him against the incursions of Hereward de Wake; and at the domesday survey, Richard, one of these homagers or knights of the church of St. Peter de Burg, was in possession of "Dailintone." It contained four hides. The arable land was eight carucates, of which two were in demesne with three servants; and 18 villeins, a priest, and four bordars, had the remaining six carucates. There was a mill worth 20s. yearly, and five acres of meadow. The whole had been valued at 40s. yearly in the time of Edward the confessor, but was then advanced to 100s. yearly[a]. Hugo Candidus specifically enumerates all the lands thus alienated by Thorold, giving, first, the names of the feoffees in the papal confirmation charter of 1146, and then the existing feoffees in the reign of Hen. 3. Under the head of "De Luci," is, first, Robert de Luci — a misnomer for Robert de Frehlle — and then follows, the heir of Geoffrey de Lucy holds four hides in "Daylingtone" by the service of two knights' fees; but since the time of abbot Benedict the service of one fee has been subtracted[b]. The manor is found to be held of the abbey by all the inquisitions of the Lucy family, but the amount of service occasionally varies.

Manor. By the bull obtained by abbot Martin from pope Eugenius 3rd, which confirms by name all the lands and knights' fees belonging to the abbey, it appears that Dalinton with its appendages was, in 1146 (11 Steph.), the fee of Robert de Frehlle[c]. His daughter and heiress, there is strong reason to believe, married Eustace de Broc, whose daughter Eva conveyed Dallington in marriage to Walter Keineto, or de Chesnei, of Slapton; from whom both manors followed the line of representation in the annexed pedigree, down to the reign of Charles 1st. In 5 Ric. 1 (1193-4), Almaric (Despencer) was certified to hold two knight's fees in Dallington of the abbey of Peterborough[d]. Eva de Broc, however, claimed against him the town of "Elinton" as her inheritance, in which he had no right to enter except through Walter de Keineto, formerly her husband, who gave it to him in free marriage with Amabil her daughter, which she was ready to admit; but Almaric defended his right, and alleged that Eva herself gave him the said town in marriage with Amabil her daughter, and produced her charter, which proved the gift to have been made subsequent to the death of Walter her husband, and soon after the first coronation of king Richard[e]. Edmondson, and the modern peerages, deduce the family of Despenser from this Almaric*, and Dugdale in his baronage gives him two sons, Thurstan and Thomas, and a daughter married to William Bardolph; but that he left no son surviving is certain, and if the marriage with Bardolph was carried into effect he must have died soon after, for in 8 Ric. 1 (1196-7), Almaric was charged with 200 marks which W. Bardolph promised for the marriage of his daughter[f], and in 10 Ric. 1,

Peter de Stokes owed 100 marks for having the daughter and heiress of Almaric in marriage[g]; and the same entry is repeated the following year[h], either for another instalment, or the former debt not having been liquidated.

There was at this time a mint at Northampton, and in 7 Joh. (1205), Peter de Stokes paid 60 marks for the privilege of working four dies or stamps, and having a money exchange there for one year[t]. He died s. p. and in the great roll for Hampshire, 9 Joh. (1207).

Geoffrey de Lucy rendered an account of 3000 marks, and owed 2000 marks more to be paid in Northampton-shire, for having in marriage Juliana, widow of Peter de Stokes, with all her lands and right of inheritance[k]. Sir Geoffrey de Lucy, fourth in descent from Juliana and Geoffrey, obtained a grant of free warren in "Daylington," Slapton, and various places in Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire, and Kent, in 6 Edw. 3 (1332)[l], which was confirmed in 16 Hen. 6 (1437-8) to his great grandson sir Walter Lucy[m], whose son, sir William Lucy, dying s. p. the family estates in Cornwall, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire, Essex, Kent, and Northamptonshire, passed in moieties to his two coheirs, Elizabeth, then wife of sir Roger Corbet (and afterwards of the earl of Worcester and sir William Stanley), daughter of his sister Eleanor, and sir William Vaux, son of his sister Matilda[n].

Elizabeth countess of Worcester, widow of sir William Stanley, died in 1498, seised of a moiety of the manors of "Dalington," Slapton, and Wappenham, and lands and rents in Northampton, &c. leaving Robert Corbet, her grandson and heir[o], who, by partition or purchase, acquired the Vaux moiety, and died possessed of the entire manor of Dallington[p]. The direct male line of the Corbets terminated in the person of sir Robert Corbet in 1583, between whose daughter and at length sole heiress, Elizabeth, and sir Vincent Corbet, brother and heir male of sir Robert, a litigation arose respecting the right to certain manors, which was finally determined by a private arbitration, under which the manor of Dallington, with the appurtenances in Dallington and Northampton, together with the rectory or impropriate parsonage, and advowson of the vicarage, were (int. al.) awarded and confirmed to

Sir Henry Wallop, and dame Elizabeth his wife, and to the heirs of the said Elizabeth, by indenture 6 Jul. 5 Jac. (1607)[q]. Robert Wallop, esq. their only son, disposed of all his Northamptonshire property a few years before the commencement of the civil war, in which he embarked with zeal, and having sate in the painted chamber as one of the king's judges, though he did not sign the death warrant, he was sentenced at the restoration to be drawn on a sledge under Tyburn gallows with a halter round his neck, and imprisoned in the Tower for life, where he died 16 Nov. 1667, but was buried with his ancestors at Farley in Hampshire.

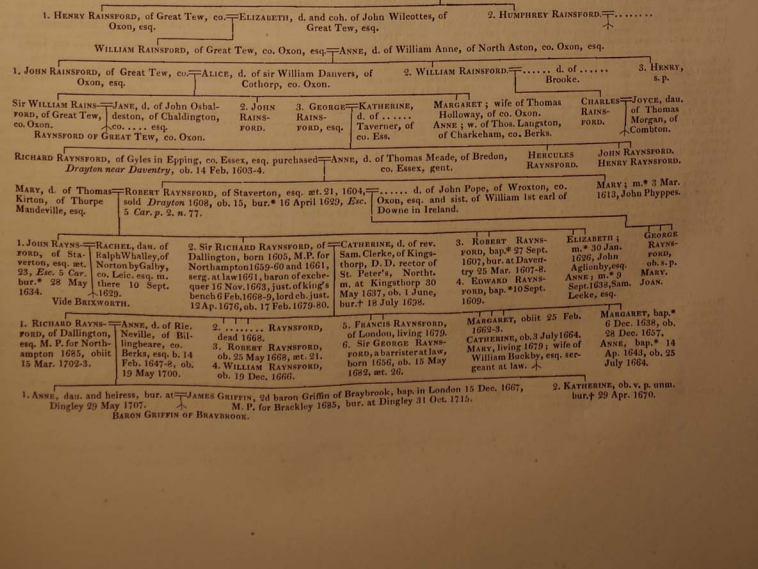
DALLINGTON.

Sir Richard Raynsford, the purchaser of this manor, was probably a native of Staverton near Daventry, where his father resided. He was educated for the bar, and in 1653 was chosen deputy recorder of Northampton. On the restoration of Charles 2nd he was nominated one of the intended knights of the royal oak, and his estate estimated at £600. per ann. but the institution of that order being on maturer consideration deemed impolitic, was finally abandoned. He was about the same time elected M. P. for Northampton, and continued to represent that borough till appointed one of the barons of the exchequer in 1663, from whence he was transferred to a seat on the king's bench in 1668-9, and in 1676 succeeded the celebrated sir Matthew Hale as lord chief justice, but resigned in 1678, and died the year following. His son, Richard Raynsford, esq. left an only daughter and heiress, Anne, who brought this estate in marriage to



James 2d lord Griffin, only son of Edward lord Griffin, and father of Edward the last lord Griffin, who inherited the paternal Griffin property; but Dallington was settled on the two daughters (and eventually coheiresses of their brother Edward) Elizabeth and Anne, who, in conjunction with their husbands, Henry (Neville) Grey, esq. of Billingbeare, in Berkshire, and William Whitwell, esq. of Oundle, conveyed this estate in 1720 to

Sir Joseph Jekyll, the master of the rolls.

Sir Joseph Jekyll has been included amongst the worthies to which this county has given birth; but, though reluctant to relinquish the honor, a regard to truth compels the admission that the statement rests on no authority, and has evidently originated in mistaking the date of his connection with Dallington. Sir Joseph was an able lawyer and an inflexible patriot; and in the private relations of society amiable and benevolent. His first professional promotion was the chief justiceship of Chester, and in 1717 he was appointed master of the rolls, the jurisdiction of which office he successfully defended against the lord chancellor King, in a pamphlet published anonymously, under the title of "The judicial authority of the Master of the Rolls stated and vindicated;" and the duties of which he continued to exercise with equal talent and integrity till his death at the advanced age of 75. On the impeachment of Dr. Sacheverel by the house of commons, he was appointed one of the managers, and gained much credit by his luminous exposition of the principles on which the revolution of 1688 was founded. He bequeated the interest of £20,000. South Sea annuities and India stock, to his widow for life, and after her decease directed the principal to be appropriated to the sinking fund. Having no family, he devised Dallington to Joseph Jekyll, esq. one of his great nephews, and from whom it has descended, through his only daughter, to Miss Anne Barbara Wrighte, in whom it is now vested.

St. James's Abbey near Northampton, had possessions in "Dailington" and "Crowethorp," of the gift of Ralph Jocelyn, Thomas de Duston, and others, which, in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, were rated at 20s. per ann.[r]

St. John's Hospital in Northampton, had a toft with appurtenances in "Daylington," which Simon Crenehill in 7 Edw. 2 (1313-14), had licence to settle on the master and brethren, and their successors, for ever[s].

Burton Lazars Hospital in Leicestershire. 'In the third year of Edw. III. an action was brought 'in the Court of King's Bench by the master of the hospital of Burton Lazars against Elena, the daughter of 'Robert de Raveningham, for the recovery of one messuage with its appurtenances in Dallington. Upon hearing 'the cause judgment was given in favour of the Plaintiff. "A like claim was made by the said master of three 'acres and a half of arable land, against John, the son of Laurence le Fisher.'

Manor House. Bridges says, 'here is a good manor-house formerly inhabited by the Lord Chief Justice 'Raynsford. It is contiguous to the west end of the church.' The present mansion was erected by sir Joseph Jekyll on the scite of the old one, and is a neat square edifice of Harleston stone. None of the proprietors have resided in it since lady Anne Jekyll, and it is now in the occupation of sir John Riggs Miller, bart.

The Village is about a mile and a half west of Northampton, and a short distance north of the turnpike road to Dunchurch. By the census of 1801 it contained 60 houses and 302 inhabitants, and by that of 1811 only 58 houses, but the same number of inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £94. 16s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2407. The amount of the poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 was £575. 8s. at 6s. 6d. in the £. The feast is kept on the Sunday after Michaelmas.

Advowson. The church of Dallington was given at an early period, but when or by whom is not known, to the priory of Woodchurch, or St. Giles's in the Wood, at Flamsted in Hertfordshire. After the dissolution, the scite of the priory, with lands and tenements in the counties of Hertford, Bedford, Buckingham, and Northampton, including the rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Dallington, were granted in 31 Hen. 8 (1539), to sir Richard Page and Elizabeth his wife, and their heirs[x], whose only daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, married sir William Skipwith, of Ormsby in Lincolnshire[y]. Both the rectory and advowson of the vicarage were soon after acquired by the Corbets, and have been already noticed under the award to sir Henry Wallop and Elizabeth his wife, from which time they have uniformly attended the inheritance of the manor.

The Rectory. '[z][a]In 1220 a pension of five marks was assigned (to the priory of Woodchurch) out of the 'rectory.' The church or rectory of "Dalyngton" was valued at 13 marks (£8. 13s. 4d.) per ann. in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[a], and was rated at the same sum, deducting a pension not liable to tenths, in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[b]. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was held on lease from the convent by William Boyse, at £7. per ann.[c] The impropriate rectory being vested in the proprietor of the lands, the proceeds of the great tithes are not separated.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Northampton. The prioress and nuns of Woodchurch, pleading the inadequacy of their funds, petitioned pope Urban the sixth to allow the revenues of the church of "Dalyngton," which was in their patronage, to be appropriated to their support[d], '[e]and in 1381 it was appropriated to the 'convent and the vicarage ordained.' In the ecclesiastical survey or king's books in 1535 (26 Hen. 8), this vicarage was valued at £6. 18s. 8d. per ann. deducting 3s. for procurations[f]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, returned it to be a vicarage worth £30. per ann. in the patronage of Richard Raynsford, esq. but was then void, and the cure supplied by an hired preacher[g]. It is discharged from first fruits and tenths, being certified under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be only of the clear yearly value of £35. 14s. 11d.; and has been exonerated from the land tax by the commissioners appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), on which occasion it was entered of the clear yearly value of £92. 11s. 1d. In the return of livings under £150. per ann. made to the governors of queen Anne's bounty in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the yearly value of £103. 2s. arising from glebe, tithe, easter offerings, and surplice fees. The vicar in right of his church has six small closes containing 39 acres of land, with the herbage of the watery lane leading by these closes to Northampton; a yearly payment of £9. issuing out of two closes called Plash Moor and Nether Moor, containing about 17 acres; and a rent tithe of such parts of the parish, amounting to about 80 acres, as were not the property of sir Joseph Jekyll at the time of the inclosure. There is a commodious vicarage-house north-east of the church, enlarged and improved by the late incumbent, but built in 1741 by the rev. James Pasham, on a piece of ground containing nearly an acre and a half, which he obtained from Mr. Jekyll in exchange for the site of the old vicarage, then in ruins.

He published three single sermons: 1. On 1 Thess. iv. 9. preached before the governors of the Northampton Infirmary, 1789, 4to. 2. "Personal Remembrance amongst the Joys of the other World;" a funeral sermon for the hon. Richard Spencer, infant son of the present earl and countess Spencer, 1791, 4to. 3. "The chief obstacles to Benevolence considered," preached at the Charter-house chapel, London, on the anniversary of the foundation of Sutton's hospital, 1795, 4to. Benjamin Bailey, who was inst. 21 Dec. 1819, on the presentation of Miss Anne Barbara Wrighte, of Withely cottage in Sidmouth, co. Devon.

The present Register of this parish does not commence till 1695.

The communion plate is extremely handsome, and consists of a large flagon presented by dame Catherine Raynsford, a salver by lady Anne Jekyll, and a chalice and paten by the rev. R. B. Jekyll.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to the blessed virgin, stands on a rising bank, and consists of a low embattled tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles and porches, chancel, and north or Raynsford chapel. The north aisle retains its original character, and is probably as early as the beginning of the 13th century. The windows are double lancet; two of them have dripstones following the course of both arches, and the other a general dripstone inclosing both arches. The windows of the south aisle, with the exception of that at the east end, have been altered. Those on the south side of the chancel are uniform, and have one mullion with a single quatrefoil in the head. The tower is 9 ft. 11 in. long, by 8 ft. 9 in. wide; the nave and aisles 45 ft. 7 in. long, the nave 17 ft. 6 in. the north aisle 17 ft. 1 in. and the south aisle 11 ft. 5 in. wide; the chancel 27 ft. 8 in. long, by 12 ft. 4 in. wide; and the north chapel 23 ft. 11 in. long, by 18 ft. 7 in. wide. The interior is neatly paved, and pewed with oak. At the west end of the nave is an octagonal font, apparently in imitation of those of the 15th century, probably the gift of the Raynsfords, as their arms are painted on a shield in the centre. The nave is uniformly divided from each aisle by four pointed arches on multangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings; and from the chancel by an open arch. The entrance to the Raynsford chapel is through a neat wooden screen, which separates it from the chancel.

NORTH CHAPEL. On the north wall are two large mural monuments for the Raynsfords. IV. The first is erected from the ground, and reaches nearly the height of the chapel. In the centre of the lower division, which is massive and heavy, is an inscribed oval tablet, encircled by a festooned border of flowers tastefully grouped and executed; over the entablature is a large flaming sarcophagus with flowers depending from each side; at the dexter end of the entablature a naked boy supports a shield with Raynsford, and at the sinister is another boy leaning on a shield, with, Ar. on a bend G. between three pellets, as many swans of the field, Clarke.

The other is placed on the wall, to the west of the last, and is composed of a square inscribed tablet, between two corinthian pillars supporting a plain entablature, surmounted by an open scroll pediment, in the centre of which is a shield with Raynsford, and at the sides two naked boys, one holding a palm branch, the other a circular wreath, and both resting their other hand on a scull. At the base of the pillars stand two boys ludicrously emblematical of grief: the dexter one is weeping, and whilst applying his handkerchief to his eyes with one hand, is holding a syringe in the other to draw up the tears which escape to the ground; the sinister one is leaning pensively on a spade.

Almshouse. In 1673 lord chief justice Raynsford erected an almshouse for two poor men and two poor women, with a weekly allowance of 2s. each, to be chosen by the lord of the manor, or, in his default, by the minister, churchwarden, and overseers of the parish; and endowed it with a fee farm rent of £27. 14s. 10d. per ann. issuing out of certain messuages in the parish of St. Saviour, Southwark. It stands near the centre of the village, and is a low building, with an inscription and the arms of Raynsford in the centre.

DUSTON

Parish, includes the site of St. James's abbey, and the whole of St. James's End, except the north side of the street; the whole of the road being within its boundaries. The name has not varied since the compilation of domesday, but the derivation is by no means obvious, though it may with some color of probability be referred to the saxon dusc, dust, and tone, a town, in allusion to the light pulverising nature of the soil. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 16 Geo. 3 (1776), and contains about 1650 acres, of which viscount Melbourne, lord of the manor, has nearly 1020 acres, and Mr. Samuel Wilson, of Northampton, about 300 acres. The vicar in right of his church has about 30 acres. It is bounded on the north by Harleston; east by Dallington; south east by the Naseby branch of the river Nen, which divides it from Northampton in Spelho hundred; south by the western branch of the river Nen, which separates it from Hardingstone in Wymersley hundred; west by Upton; and north west by Harpole. The lordship is on a gentle declination from the north, and as it approaches the river there is a tract of rich meadow land. The rest is convertible land. The soil is in general a light sandy loam, slightly differing from the district of red land north of Northampton. It is particularly adapted to barley and turnips, and produces the best potatoes in the neighbourhood. The following scarce plants are found here. Verbena officinalis, Vervain. Betonica officinalis, Wood Betony. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Chironia Centaurium, common Centaury. Epilobium angustifolium, Rosebay Willow herb. Thymus acinos, Basil Thyme. Rubus corylifolius, Hazel-leaved Bramble. Rumex palustris, yellow marsh Dock. Polygonum Bistorta, Snakeweed. Polygonum minus, creeping Snakeweed. Rosa tomentosa, downy-leaved Rose. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder. Scirpus sylvaticus, Millet Cyperus-grass. Evonymus europæus, Spindle Tree. Phellandrium aquaticum, water Hemlock. Ægopodium Podagraria, Goutweed. Poterium Sanguisorba, Burnet. Sanguisorba officinalis, Blood-wort Burnet. Carex recurva, heath Seg. Orchis Morio, meadow Orchis. Phallus esculentus, Morel. To the left of the turnpike road to Dunchurch, and bordering on Harleston parish, are extensive quarries, which contain strata of greyish brown stone called Ryeland; white slate stone which breaks into lamina sufficiently thin for rough slating; brown ragg stone, which is employed in building walls, cottages, &c.; yellow or ochreous free stone, locally denominated Harleston stone, calculated for the better sort of buildings; and a blue ragg stone of a fine grit, which gradually loses its blue tint by exposure to the air, used for paving and grave-stones. In the midst of the slatey course there is a thin stratum of oolite or roe stone, so denominated from its resemblance to the hard roe of fishes. Some few extraneous fossils are met with in the different strata, the most perfect of which are, the wry beaked cockle, the escallop shell, fragments of wood, and occasionally that peculiar conformation of iron sand stone called an eagle's nest. The lime quarries in this parish, which lie between the Dunchurch road and the village, have been already alluded to under the Kingsthorp lime works, which they resemble in their general properties, but one peculiarity that marks some of these pits, is the prevalence of coralite, or petrified coral, which forms the principal substance of the lime. There are two water mills on the western Nen. The one nearest Northampton formerly belonged to St. James's abbey.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PEVEREL FEE. The possessions of Gitda, one of the leading saxon proprietors in this county, have been already enumerated under NEWBOTTLE, and stated to have been wholly transferred by William the conqueror to William Peverel, amongst whose demesne manors "Dustone" is found in the domesday survey. It contained four hides. The arable land was eight carucates, of which two were in demesne with two servants, and 13 villeins and three bordars with three socmen had the remaining six carucates. There was a mill worth 20s. yearly, 30 acres of meadow, and 11 acres of wood. The whole had been rated at 40s. yearly, but was then increased to 100s. yearly[a]. William Peverel was the reputed son of William the conqueror, by the daughter and heiress of Ingeric a noble saxon, afterwards married to Ranulph Peverel, ancestor of the other branches of this family. He held in capite 32 houses in Northampton, and the whole or portions of 45 vills in this county, of which he retained in demesne Higham (Ferrars) with its nine berewicks, Newbottle with its five berewicks, Duston, Blisworth, Courteenhall, and Naseby; and the remainder were held under him by different feudatories, whilst he himself considered it no degradation to hold as feudatory tenant, or mesne lord, nine manors under the bishop of Bayeux[b], and one under the countess Judith[c]. The head of his barony was Nottingham, where he had 60 houses, and numerous manors in the counties of Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Northampton, Oxford, Buckingham, and Bedford. He founded the priory of Lenton near Nottingham, and the abbey of St. James near Northampton, and dying in 1113, was succeeded by his son, William Peverel, who—and not his father, with whom he is confounded by Dugdale—was present at the great council in 1 Steph. (1136), and witnessed the laws then ordained and ratified by the king. He commanded the Nottinghamshire forces at the battle of the Standard in Yorkshire, where the scotch were completely defeated; but was less successful in his subsequent exertions for the king, being taken prisoner with him at the siege of Lincoln. His son, William Peverel, the third, has been generally stated to have incurred a forfeiture of his estates to Hen. 2, on a charge of having poisoned Ranulph earl of Chester in 18 Steph. (1153), but, the historian of Rutlandshire observes, "we have "decisive evidence that the confiscation of Peverel's property was in contemplation before the earl of Chester was "poisoned; for king Henry the 2nd had, by the name of duke of the Normans, given, before his accession to "the crown, to that very earl of Chester who is said to have been poisoned by Peverel, the whole fee of the "latter, unless he could clear himself of the treason and wickedness with which he was charged; so that the pre-"sumption is, that the administration of poison, if the story be founded in truth, was an act of revenge on the "earl for his intended acceptance of Peverel's lands; and that the offence for which the forfeiture was incurred, "was Peverel's adherence to king Stephen[d]." Whatever may have been the cause, the fact is certain, and of her vast patrimonial inheritance, Margaret, his daughter and heiress, obtained only what has been recited in the account of NEWBOTTLE. The residue was given by Hen. 2 to his son John earl of Moreton[e], and formed the Honor of Peverel.

WILLIAM PEVEREL, son of Adeline, living 6 Steph. (1140-1). = ODDONA.

On the death of king Ric. 1, his brother John earl of Moreton ascending the throne, the honor of Peverel became merged in the crown, where it has ever since continued. In 40 Hen. 3 (1255-6), the king committed his county and castle of Northampton, with the honor of Peverel, to William de Lisle during pleasure, who was to render £120 for the profit of the county, maintain the castle at his own charge, "make good the corpus comi-tatus," and receive the issues of the said honor[f]. In the succeeding reigns it was frequently farmed at various rents during pleasure or for life. In 20 Edw. 1 (1291-2), Thomas de Blaston obtained a grant of the custody of the honor of Peverel in the counties of Leicester, Northampton, and Bucks, during pleasure, at the yearly rent of £12. 10s.[g]; and in 8 Edw. 3 (1334), William Bretoun of Teton had a grant of it for life at the increased rent of £16. per ann.[h] It is now in the king's hands, and the courts which are, and immemorially have been, held at Duston—the paramount manor of the honor in this county—are now kept by the clerk of the peace. The juris-diction of this court leet still extends into Duston, Harpole, Ravensthorp with Coton and Teton, Guilsborough, Thurnby, West Haddon, and Rode.

MANOR. Duston, with the exception of the Cauz estate subsequently noticed, was given by Hen. 2, after the forfeiture of Peverel, to Walkelin[i], who assumed the local surname, and afterwards adopting the religious habit became abbot of St. James's. By charter 10 Feb. 7 Joh. (1205-6)—the year in which Walkelin died—his son, William de Duston, obtained the king's confirmation of all the lands in Duston which the said Walkelin pos-sessed the day he entered himself a monk, to hold to him and his heirs by the service of one knight's fee[k]; for which confirmation, and another of the town of Weekley, jointly to himself and his mother, Alice, daughter of William de Austercarius, he paid the king six palfreys and a gos-hawk[l]. In 17 Joh. (1215-16), the king gave (int. al.) all the lands of William de Duston in the counties of Northampton, Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Warwick, Essex, and Hertford, to Hugh de Nevill[m]; and in the following year a mandate was issued to deliver to Roger de Nevill the manors of Duston and Dallington, late belonging to William de Duston and Geoffrey de Lucy, if of the yearly value of £60. and if not, the manors of Walgrave and Wold to be added to supply the deficiency[n]; but returning to his fealty in 1 Hen. 3 (1216-17), he had seisin of all his estates, by writs directed to the sheriffs of the counties of Northampton, Nottingham, Derby, Stafford, Salop, Wilts, Kent, Surrey, Essex, Hertford, and Cambridge[o]. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1241), the archbishop of York (Walter Grey), custos of the heir of William de Duston, accounted for one small fee in "Duston" of the honor of Peverel[p]. This heir was William de Duston, who died 55 Hen. 3 (1270-1), leaving three daughters and coheiresses[q], the eldest of whom, Isabella, then widow of

Walter de Grey, of Rotherfield in Oxfordshire, had the manor of Duston. The jurors of Newbottle Grove hundred, in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), presented that Isabella de Grey had subtracted suit twice a year at the sheriff's tourn, and one mark yearly to the sheriff's aid, which she had transferred to the fee of Peverel[r]. Her great grand-son, John de Grey, lord Grey of Rotherfield, was summoned by writ of quo warranto in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), to shew his claim to soc and sac, tol and theam, and infangtheof, in his manor of "Duston," when he pleaded the charter of king John to his ancestor William, son of Walkelin de Duston; but the king's attorney contended that he could not be entitled to infangtheof, because he holds the manor as of the honor of Peverel, and if any of the tenants be taken in theft within the manor, they ought to be adjudged in the king's court, and not in the court of the said John. The jury found that William de Duston and his heirs, from the date of the charter, were seised of the liberties in question, down to John (de Grey), father of the present claimant, from which time no opportunity had occurred of exercising the privilege of infangtheof, no thief having been apprehended with stolen goods within the manor; and that the said John had neglected providing a gallows to inflict the punishment of hanging: infangtheof therefore was seized into the king's hands, but restored for a fine of half a mark, and the other claims were allowed and confirmed[t]. In the following year he obtained a grant of free warren in his manor of "Dunston," and in various manors in Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Berkshire, and Yorkshire[u]. On the death of his son and heir, of both names, in 1375[v], this manor was assigned in dower to Matilda his widow, who survived till 10 Ric. 2 (1386), when she was succeeded by her son Robert, who dying s. p. the 12th of Jan. following, prior to the inquisition after her death, Richard was returned to be her son and heir, aged 26 years[w]; but, by a subsequent inquisition, it appears that Robert had settled this manor in fee tail with remainder to his right heirs, by virtue of which entail it came to his daughter Joan, an infant two years of age[x], who was born at Middleham, and was probably a posthumous child[y]. By her this manor was conveyed in marriage to John lord Deincourt, of Blankney in Lincolnshire[z], by whom she had an only son, William, who died s. p. and two daughters,

Alice, wife of William lord Lovell†, and Margaret, wife of Ralph lord Cromwell, of Tattesshall in Lincolnshire, between whom, as heirs of their brother, this manor was divided[a]; but on the death of Margaret s. p. in 1454-5, the whole vested in Alice[b], who was succeeded by her grandson, Francis viscount Lovell, one of the favorites of Richard 3d; whose attainder, and consequent confiscation of all his estates in 1 Hen. 7 (1485), brought this manor to the crown, after having passed in lineal succession, agreeably to the annexed pedigree, for a period of nearly 300 years.

DUSTON.

Sir George Somerset [a], 2nd son of Charles the 1st earl, by his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas West lord De la Warre.

Sir Edward Griffin of Dingley *, the attorney general, died in 1569, seised (int. al.) of the manor of Duston, held of the honor of Peverel, with view of frank pledge, free warren, and other franchises which he had recently purchased of (the above) sir George Somerset, Helen his wife, and Charles their son; another manor in Duston, late parcel of the dissolved abbey of St. James, purchased of Richard Robson; and lands, late parcel of Lenton priory, purchased of different persons *. His son and heir, sir Edward Griffin, alienated these estates to

Sir Christopher Hatton †, the lord chancellor, who died possessed of them in 1591 [f]. Under his will they passed to his adopted nephew and heir, sir William Newport, alias Hatton †, whose widow held them in jointure, and whose second husband, the celebrated lord chief justice Coke, enjoyed them for life by the courtesy of England, as appears from leases granted by him to the corporation of Northampton [g]. Frances, only daughter of sir William by his first wife—and on the issueless demise of her half sister Cecily—sole heiress of her father, brought Duston in marriage to

Robert Rich, 2nd earl of Warwick ‡, admiral of the fleet under the commonwealth, by whom it was alienated prior to 1653; for in that year, by indenture dated 15 Dec. the trustees for the sale of sequestered lands conveyed the manor or lordship of Duston, with court leet and court baron, quit rents, rents of assize, &c. together with the manors of Melbourne in Derbyshire, and Bagrave in Leicestershire, and the other estates of

Thomas Coke, esq. a delinquent, to Richard Wollaston, of London, esq. for the sum of £4922. 14s. 2d. to hold during the life of the said Thomas Coke [b]. The male line of the Cokes terminated in the person of George-Lewis Coke, esq. who died 14 Jan. 1750-1, when the family estates, including Duston, devolved on his sister and heiress Charlotte, wife of Sir Matthew Lamb, bart. and are now vested in her only son, Peniston, viscount Melbourne, of the kingdom of Ireland, and baron Melbourne, of Melbourne in Derbyshire. No manorial court has been held of late years.

Cauz Manor. This minor manor or estate is nearly coeval in its origin with the principal manor, and was held by sergeanty of mewing a ger-falcon[l]. In 7 Ric. 1 (1195-6), and some following years, the eschentor or sheriff paid £4. 13s. 4d. into the exchequer for the farm of Duston belonging to Roger de Cauz[k]; probably then in ward to the king during the minority of the heir, who, in 3 Joh. (1201), under his local appellation of Roger de Duston, rendered an account of 15 marks (£10.) and a palfrey, for seisin of all the lands of which Roger his father died seised in demesne in Duston[l]. Amongst the sergeanties in the inquisition of the services of tenants in capite 13 Joh. (1211), this Roger de Knoz (Cauz) is found to hold one hide in Duston by the service above recited[l]. In the Testa de Neville, probably by a clerical error, it is called a virgate only[m]. The family of Cauz, which bore for their arms, per chevron Or and Gules three human hearts counterchanged, appear to have become extinct in William de Cauz, son and heir of Roger, who married Emma, daughter and coheiress of Robert de Plumpton*, and was living in 1264 (48-9 Hen. 3); for in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), the jurors of Newbottle-grove hundred presented that Reginald de Grey (baron Grey of Wilton in Herefordshire), had withheld for 10 years the service of mewing a ger-falcon yearly, due to the king for a carucate of land in Duston[n]. In the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295), Robert de la Ward is certified to hold the fourth of a fee of Reginald Grey, who holds in capite by the above service[o]. By inquisition after the death of Robert de Eton in 1 Edw. 2 (1307-8); he died seised of a messuage, two virgates of land, five acres of meadow and pasture, and 17s. per ann. rents of assize in Duston, parcel of the manor of Eton[p], a hamlet to Bletchley in Buckinghamshire, one of the manors of the lords Grey de Wilton. In 24 Edw. 3 (1350), the king in consideration of £40. pardoned John "Garlekmongere" the transgression which he had committed in having purchased a messuage, 40 acres of land, 8 acres of meadow, and 20s. yearly rent in Duston, of Nicholas, son of Robert de Eton, without having first obtained the royal license[q]; and in 29 Edw. 3 (1355), Richard de "Keselyngburn," gave £4. for licence to purchase certain lands and tenements in Duston of John Garliekmongere, junior[r]. In 37 Edw. 3 (1343), Philip Porter of Northampton, enfeoffed John Santer with the manor of Duston and two virgates of land in Harpole and Northampton, of the honor of Peverel, with remainder to himself[s]. This estate, after changing its proprietor three times in 13 years, never occurs again, except it were for this manor sir Robert Heselrigge, in the time of Bridges, held his court in St. James's End, to which some of the inhabitants of Harpole paid attendance[t]; but I suspect this to have been the Peverel court, whose jurisdiction it has been already shown still extends over Harpole, and which court might have been then held by sir Robert under an appointment from the crown.

St. James's Abbey Manor. In addition to the endowment of William Peverel, the founder, which included the church and mill of Duston, the abbey of St. James had a considerable estate in this lordship. Adelicia de Weekley, daughter of William Ostercarius, gave a virgate and a half for the anniversary of Walkelin her husband, which was witnessed and afterwards confirmed by her son William de Duston, who, by another charter, granted two virgates of his demesne with his body to be buried there[u]. Roger de Cauz gave eight butts of land, &c. near the cemetery of the church of St. Mary of Duston; and William his son, in 1264, added Dudham furlong and other lands in Duston[u], which grants were further augmented by single acres and selions, too trivial to particularise. In 4 Edw. 1 (1276), the jurors of Newbottle-grove hundred presented that the abbot of St. James had view of frank pledge and assize of bread and beer in St. James's street, but they knew not by what warrant[v]. The abbot in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed by prescription the amercement of all his tenants in Duston and St. James's street at the sheriff's turns at michaelmas and easter; the custom being for the sheriff to give the abbot a copy of the amercements to be levied, who then levied them on his tenants by his own bailiff; he claimed also the privileges granted by the charter of Hen. 2, and an annual fair by grant of Hen. 3; all which immunities were found by the jury to have been legally exercised, and were accordingly allowed[w]. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[x], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[a], the temporalities of the abbey in Duston were rated, in lands, rents, and meadow, at £9. 14s. 8d. per ann.; in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £8. 12s. per ann. in Duston, and £7. 8s. per ann. in St. James's street[b]; and in the ministers' accompts at the dissolution at £13. 5s. per ann. in rents of assize, of tenants at will, and farm of tenements in Duston[b], exclusive of the demesne lands and St. James's street, which are included under the site and demesnes of the monastery. In 37 Hen. 8 (1545), Richard and Thomas Rawleye had a grant of certain lands in Duston late belonging to St. James's abbey[c]; Francis Samwell, esq.† lessee of the water mill in abbot's meadow, and some small lots of meadow late parcel of St. James's abbey, and two tenements and 5s. rent per ann. in Northampton, late parcel of the carmelite friars there, at a yearly rent of £8. 11s. 8d. had, in 1558, a grant of them in fee at 24 years purchase, or £206.[d] In 12 Eliz. (1569-70), sir Edward Griffin died seised of a manor in Duston, parcel of the possessions of the dissolved abbey of St. James, recently purchased from *Richard Robson; from which period it has been blended with the principal manor by unity of ownership.

Lenton Priory, near Nottingham, had, of the gift of William Peverel the founder, two parts of the tithe of his demesne in "Dostone" of whatever was tithable[e]; which Philip prior of Lenton quitclaimed to the abbot of St. James for a yearly pension of 20s. reserving to himself one virgate of land with its tithes. In the taxations of 1254[e] and 1291[a], the priory of Lenton had 6s. yearly rent here. By the inquisition taken 30 Hen. 8 (1539), on the attainder of Nicholas Heath late prior of Lenton, he was found to have held (int. al.) an annual pension of 20s. out of Duston church, and a close and three virgates of land worth 22s. yearly[e]; the whole or greatest part of which was in possession of sir William Hatton, the lord of the manor, at his death in March 1596-7[b].

St. Mary Pratis, or Delapré, near Northampton, rendering yearly 1d. a lb. of cummin, and suit of court[l]. In the taxation of 1291 the temporalities of the priory here are valued jointly with Hardingston. In 37 Hen. 8 (1545), a messuage, &c. in Duston, late parcel of Delapré abbey, was granted to George Rithe and Thomas Grantham[k].

No Manor House is now remaining; but in the conveyance to Wollaston in 1653, the specification, which is extremely minute and special, includes "two cottages under one roof, erected on the south side of the scite "where Duston Hall stood, and being on the west side of Duston street, called the Hall cottages; and the scite of the said closes called Hall closes," &c.[l]

The Village is about a mile and a half west of Northampton, and a short distance north of the turnpike road to Daventry. In the time of Bridges it contained 'threescore houses.' By the census of 1801 there were 76 houses and 386 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 93 houses and 408 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £135. 16s. 9d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax for the year ending April 1815 was £3071. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, amounted to £519. at 5s. in the £. The feast is kept on the Sunday after St. Luke.

Advowson. The church and mill of Duston formed part of the original endowment of St. James's abbey by William Peverel the founder[m]; and a second grant or ratification of them by Simon (St. Liz) earl of Northampton[m], in the reign of Hen. 2, implies an interest acquired by him in the Peverel fee, of the existence of which this solitary fact is, I believe, the only evidence on record. The church was further confirmed to the abbey by Hugh (Wells) bishop of Lincoln[m], between 1209 and 1235, and by Robert (Kilwardby) archbishop of Canterbury[n], between 1272 and 1279. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted, after the dissolution, to John Howe in 3 Edw. 6 (1549)[o]. Sir Augustin Nicolls* died seised of them in 1618, and was succeeded by his nephew and heir Francis Nicolls, esq.[p] afterwards created a baronet, who appears to have sold them to Robert Rich 2d earl of Warwick, by whom they were alienated with the manor to the Cokes, the maternal ancestors of viscount Melbourne.

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[q] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[r] at 11 marks (£7. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 20s. to the prior of Lenton; and in the ministers' accompts at the dissolution 30 Hen. 8 (1538), the farm of the rectory, then on lease to .... Langtree, was £5. per ann. and amongst the reprises were, the annual pension to the prior of Lenton, and an annual payment of 40s. to the vicar of Duston, with which this rectory was chargeable[s]. The impropriate rectory now consists of 92 a. 0 r. 24 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure, in lieu of all rectorial tithes and moduses or compositions whatsoever, except those arising out of old inclosures belonging to persons not entitled to sufficient allotments for their discharge under the inclosure act, and which were exonerated from both great and small tithes on payment of certain sums adjudged by the commissioners, towards defraying the expences of passing and executing the said act.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Northampton. Bridges states that "the vicarage was ordained in the time 'of Hugh Wells.' This endowment seems however to have been relinquished, and another ordained subsequently to the taxations of 1254 and 1291, as no vicarage is mentioned in either of those records. In the ecclesiastical survey or king's books in 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was valued at £6. 11s. 10d. per ann. deducting 3s. for procurations[u]. "A certificate from Northamptonshire," printed in 1641, describes "Duston, a poor Vicarage stipendiary neere "Northampton. Master James the Vicar is well reputed, but his living is very poore, only 20 pounds yearely "some 5 pounds more was given lately by the Honourable Earle of Warwicke, but he having sold his estate there, "that Exhibition is discontinued." It is a discharged living, being certified under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be only of the clear value of £19. 13s. 5d. per ann. It has been twice augmented by queen Anne's bounty, in 1727 with £200. by lot, and in 1754 with another £200. to meet a donation of £200. from lady Gower. In the return of livings under £150. per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be of the clear yearly value of £93. 5s. 5d. arising from glebe, augmentation, and surplice fees; and in 1814 it was exonerated from land tax by the commission appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), when it was entered of the clear yearly value of £133. 17s. The vicarage now consists of 25 a. 3 r. 32 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe, and of all vicarial tithes and moduses or compositions; 5 a. 2 r. 3 p. in exchange with lord Melbourne, under the inclosure act, for certain meadow land called Durham dyke, which had been purchased in 1724 with the first augmentation of £200.; and 21 a. 1 r. 5 p. at Guredon, awarded under the act for inclosing that parish 20 Geo. 3 (1780), for lands purchased in 1775 with the second augmentation and donation of £200. each.

Rectors. Walter de Alto, by composition with Ralph abbot of St. James between 1158 and 1176, was permitted to hold the church of Duston as long as he continued a secular priest, on condition of paying 5d. yearly for services at the altar of St. James's abbey[x].

He resigned Collingtree in 1778; but held the vicarage of Weston Underwood in Buckinghamshire with this benefice, and was master of the free grammar school at Guilsborough, where he resided, and died 1 Mar. 1811, at the advanced age of 87 years[c]. He published "Christ's Nativity the good tidings of great joy to all people," a sermon preached at Collingtree, 1762, 8vo. The present incumbent, Joshua Greville, of Trinity coll. Camb. A. M. was instituted 19 July 1811, on the presentation of Peniston viscount Melbourne.

The Registers in the time of Bridges commenced in 1559, but the early volumes have been since lost, and the present does not begin till 1692.

The Church is situated at the eastern extremity of the village, on an elevation which commands a pleasing view of the town of Northampton. It is dedicated to St. Luke, or, according to some authorities, to the virgin Mary[d], and consists of a central embattled tower containing three bells, nave, north, and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The inner door of the south porch is norman; the small columns on each side have slightly foliated capitals, and support a series of semicircular mouldings devoid of ornament; the outer one, or dripstone, springing from corbel heads: but the most singular feature of the building is the unusual assemblage of five windows in the west end, as represented in the accompanying vignette. The north front is uniformly but plainly built, without either basement or buttress. The south side was partly rebuilt about fifty years since. The nave, including the tower (12 ft. 3 in.), is 53 ft. 3 in. long, the nave 17 ft. 8 in. and the tower 9 ft. 3 in. wide; the aisles are of corresponding length with the nave, the north aisle 13 ft. 9 in. and the south aisle 15 ft. in width. The interior is partially new pewed. Under the western arch of the south aisle, attached to the pillar, is a large circular font, increasing in diameter from the base, which is ornamented with a range of arches. The nave is divided from each aisle by five pointed arches; the three arches west of the tower rise from multangular pillars with bases and capitals of plain mouldings, except the demi-column attached to the west wall on the south side, which is cylindrical with rudely indented shallow capitals, and is evidently a remnant of the original edifice; the fourth arches are of much narrower span than the preceding, and the piers of the tower supply the place of pillars; the fifth arches are east of the tower, and terminate in the soffits with corbel mouldings. The soffits of the east and west arches of the tower end in two female heads conjoined. There is an ascent of two steps at the east end of the north aisle, and on the north side is a square aperture or locker. The east end of the south aisle is also elevated, and the east windows of both aisles still retain fragments of painted glass. Within the altar-rails of the chancel on the south side is a trefoil-headed piscina. The roof is open, and three of the brackets of the principal springers are carved into grotesque figures of musicians: the first is an half-length in profile of a woman issuing BENEFACTIONS. £1. 6s. 8d. issuing out of a meadow in Earl's Barton, the gift of Arthur Reynolds, and 10s. called Facer's dole, out of lands in Kislingbury, are annually distributed amongst the poor widowers and widows of this parish. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 10 acres of land in trust for the poor, in lieu of the custom of cutting turf, furze, and gorse bushes for fuel on the heath, which now lets for £20. per ann.

ST. JAMES'S END,

Is a hamlet of about 30 houses, and though in the parishes of Duston and Dallington, may be considered the western suburb of Northampton, from which it is separated by the west bridge.

DUSTON PORTION. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), John de Grey was certified to be lord of Duston and a moiety of St. James's street[a]; but the abbey of St. James had a considerable interest here, which has been in a great measure anticipated in the account of its possessions under Duston. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 the temporalities of the abbey here were rated at £7. 8s. per ann.[f]

TOLL. Here is an ancient toll traverse, the origin of which is not known. Bridges states that 'the profits of it are appropriated to the repairs of the highway.'

THE CHURCH, or CHAPEL, was dedicated to St. Margaret, and annexed to the vicarage of Duston either in or before 1239, as appears from the institution of Giles de Brunham. Leland doubtless alludes to this church when he says, "There be in the Suburbes 2 Paroche chirches, whereof I saw one yn the West suburbe as I rode over "the West bridge[g]." The site is contiguous to the west end of the toll-house, and is still walled round, and called Church-yard close.

THE DALLINGTON PORTION comprises the north side of the street, and a few small old inclosures. In the same record which has been referred to in the Duston portion, Elena de Lucy was returned to be lady of Dallington and a moiety of St. James's street[a].

ST. JAMES'S ABBEY,

In the parish of Duston, west of the hamlet of St. James's End. William Peverel, natural son of William the conqueror, founded an abbey for black canons of the order of St. Augustine, to the honor and under the protection of St. James the apostle, and endowed it with 40 acres of his fee near Northampton for the erection of the building, the church of Duston with the appurtenances thereto belonging, and the mill of Duston adjoining to Northampton, with its meadow rights, free and quit from all and all manner of services, for the salvation of his own soul, and of the souls of his father and mother, and of all faithful people deceased[h]. The circumstance of Peverel having given two parts of the tithe of his demesne in Duston to his priory of Lenton near Nottingham, points to the conclusion that the abbey of St. James was not then in existence, nor in the contemplation of the founder, as it is highly improbable that he would have alienated a portion of the tithes of the parish in which it was locally situated to a monastery in a distant county. If this reasoning be conclusive, and the endowment of St. James was, as stated by Bridges, '[i]confirmed the fifth of Henry 1' (1103-4), the dates of both foundations are ascertained; Lenton could not be earlier than 4 Hen. 1, in which year Maud the king's daughter, who is mentioned in the dotation charter, was born; nor St. James later than the year following.

A charter of inspeximus, reciting the original endowment, with a confirmation of 60 acres of land, which they had assarted at Hyde and Rothelam (Rode), and of all other lands which they have purchased or acquired or may hereafter acquire, and the liberties of soc and sac, tol, theam, and infangtheof, was granted by Henry 2nd at Northampton[k]. Hugh bishop of Lincoln—but whether St. Hugh who presided from 1186 to 1203, or Hugh Wells, from 1209 to 1235, is open to conjecture—confirmed to the abbey the churches of Duston, Weekley, Rode, (Rothers) Thorpe, Cranford, Heyford, Bozeate, Horton, and Watford in this county, and Gaddesden (Parva) in Hertfordshire[l]; which were again confirmed by Robert (Kilwardby), archbishop of Canterbury from 1272 to 1279, omitting Heyford and Cranford[m], which had, in the interim, been surrendered, or resumed by the heirs of the donors. With these two exceptions, the whole of the above churches became appropriated, and with the advowsons of the vicarages continued in possession of the abbey till the dissolution. The successive temporal grants of the different benefactors will be particularised in the villages where they occur, and need not therefore be repeated here; but a general view of the nature and value of the revenues of the abbey may be gathered from the subjoined official valuations of pope Nicholas's taxation in 1291, the ecclesiastical survey in 1535, and the ministers' accompts at the dissolution in 1538.

Duston - Do. Rectoria

[Summa cclxxiv li. ijd.]

Advowson. In the reign of Edw. 3, John de Grey, lord of Rotherfield, petitioned the king and his council, complaining that whereas the abbey of St. James of Northampton was of the foundation of one William Peverel, ancestor (or rather antecessor) of the said John, which William and his heirs had enjoyed the patronage or advowson of the abbey from time beyond memory down to one Isabel, daughter and heiress of William de Duston, who being under age and in ward to king Henry (3rd), great-grandfather of the present king, by reason of her minority the king had the advowson at the death of abbot Adam Gilli (in 1266), and the succeeding kings had usurped the said patronage to the present time; wherefore the said John de Grey, as great-grandson and heir of Isabel, prayed that remedy and right might be done him; on which a search was directed to be made in chancery by process of diem clausit extremum, whether any thing could be found respecting the advowson since the death of William de Duston, and the king would consider thereon[u], but no ulterior proceedings are recorded.

Abbots. The list of abbots compiled by Bridges from the cartulary of the abbey forms the basis of the following catalogue, in which a few alterations and additional notices are introduced. The first abbot whose name can be retrieved, was

'Ralph, whom we meet with as presiding here in 1158.' On the 15th of Aug. 1173 (19 Hen. 2), the second year from the passion of St. Thomas (A'Becket) archbishop of Canterbury, Ralph, the first abbot of this church, and his canons, removed from their former habitation to the new church of St. James, and began to inhabit the monastery[x]. Ralph survived the original foundation 70 years; if therefore he was the first abbot, it is probable no one was appointed during the occupancy of the temporary habitation. 'He died in 1176 '(22 Hen. 2), and was succeeded by

'William Paveley. He sat only four years; and dying 'in 1180, had

'Walkelin de Duston his successor.' He has been already noticed in connection with the manor of Duston, which he obtained from Hen. 2, and on his decease in 1205 (7 Joh.),

'Thomas was elected into this office. He enjoyed it 'about fifteen years, and was succeeded on his decease 'in 1220 by

'Adam, who dying in 1231, the vacancy was sup-'plied by

'Walter de Melton. He presided about six years, and 'dying in 1237, his place was filled up by

'Osbert de Luffenham in 1238[y]; on whose resignation 'in 1241,

'Adam Gilly succeeded to this abbacy.' In 49 Hen. 3 (1264-5), he was summoned to parliament as abbot of St. James, Northampton[z], a privilege which was extended on that occasion to no less than 64 abbots and 36 priors. 'He governed the abbey 25 years, and 'dying in 1266,

'John le Lon was admitted in his room. To him, 'who made a vacancy by death in 1269, succeeded

'Adam de Keylmersh, admitted abbot 27 Mar. 1270[y], 'at whose decease in 1274, the election fell on

'Ralph de Hecham. By his death in 1298,

'Nicholas de Flore was raised to the chair,' and confirmed abbot 19 Mar. 1298-9[y]. In 12 Edw. 2 (1318-19) he was summoned to a parliament held at York, and sent Henry de Blisworth, one of the canons of his monastery, as his proxy, to excuse his personal appearance on the ground of bodily infirmities, as well as to obtain for himself and his successors a permanent exoneration from the honorable but burdensome privilege, as it was then considered, of attendance in parliament; when, on a representation being made to the lord chancellor that the abbot did not hold of the king in capite, or by barony, but in frank almoigne, and that neither he nor his predecessors had ever been summoned, except to the parliament in 49 Hen. 3, an order was given for the erasure of the name of the abbot of St. James from the roll of summons[a]. 'He sat to the year 1334, 'and then dying, had

'Gerard de Combes his successor in this office. In '1353 he died, when the monks proceeding to election 'chose

'William de Thorp their abbot,' who was elected 6 'Apr. 1359[y]. 'He died in 1378, and was succeeded by

'John Cayno,' of Northampton[b]; 'who, governing 'above thirty years, made a vacancy by death in 1410, 'when

'John Bacon,' of Northampton[b], was instituted 10 May 1410[y]. 'On his decease in 1430, this office was 'conferred on

'John Watford alias Margery,' or Thomas Watford, according to another authority[c]; to whom, at his death in 1445, succeeded

'William Young,' to whose custody certain deeds of feoffment of the manor of Little Brington were consigned by the Bernards in 4 Edw. 4 (1466)[c]. 'How 'long he presided is uncertain, but his successor,

'John Grantwell, occurs in 1471, and dying in 1476,

'John Weekly was appointed in his place. He was 'succeeded, as we apprehend, in 1498 by

'Henry Cocks, who dying in 1532, after him was 'admitted

'John Dasset,' who, with eight monks, submitted to the king's supremacy and took the prescribed oath, in 1534[d]. 'His successor, the last abbot of this monas-'tery, was

'William Brokden.' On the 25th of Aug. 30 Hen. 8 (1538), he, with five monks, resigned the abbey into the hands of the king's commissioners by deed of surrender under their common SEAL; a representation of which is annexed from the original deed now remaining in the Augmentation office. Within a trefoiled canopy surmounted by a church, is exhibited a full length figure of St. James the apostle, the patron saint, habited as a pilgrim, holding a staff in his right and a book in his left hand, beneath which is suspended his scrip. On the exergue is a half length priest praying, and round the area is S. CONVENTUS JACOBI EXTRA NORHATONA. The abbot retired on a pension of £11. 6s. 8d. per ann. which he continued to receive in 1553, when there was also remaining in charge £5. 18s. 8d. in annuities and corrodies, and yearly pensions of £3. 6s. 8d. each to Robert Lambe and Richard Colley[e].

THE ARMS of the abbey, as given in Edmondson, were, per pale Argent and Gules, over all an escallop shell Or; and, contrary to the rule usually adopted by the religious houses, were not in the most distant degree allusive to those of the founder.

The only CARTULARY of this abbey now known to be extant, is the Cottonian MS. Tiberius E. 5, in the British Museum, which suffered considerably from the fire which destroyed part of the Cottonian library in 1731, before it was placed in that national repository. The corners of many of the leaves were burnt, and the whole is so shrivelled by the heat as to be perfectly useless, though if the leaves were carefully smoothed, which might be easily accomplished, the greater part of the volume might be rendered legible again. Being, however, in its present state unfit for reference, I have availed myself of volume E. of Bridges's MSS. in the Bodleian library at Oxford, which contains a copious extract of its contents. In Vincent's MSS. 218 and 402, in the College of Arms, are excerpts from a book relating to this abbey, formerly in the possession of Robert Tanfield, esq. Collections from the cartulary of this abbey are preserved in Dodsworth's MSS. 61 and 102 in the Bodleian library, and in No. 844 in the Ashmolean library at Oxford. Nasmith's edition of Tanner's Notitia mentions also various original charters, rolls, accompts, &c. belonging to this abbey, in possession of the rev. ..... Gifford, late rector of Russel in Wiltshire; and gives a numerous list of references to public records and documents.

ST. JAMES's FAIR. King Henry 3d, by charter dated at Northampton 20 July, in the 52nd year of his reign (1268), granted to the abbot of St. James and his successors an annual fair at the convent, on the vigil, day, and morrow of St. James the apostle[f], which privilege was allowed on a writ of quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329)[g]. In the ministers' accompts 30 Hen. 8 (1538), the fair is returned to yield no profit beyond the expense of holding it. In the grant to Nicholas Gifford of the site and demesnes of the abbey, was included the reversion, subject to the life of William Harryett alias William Polle, of the close called Fair-yard close, within the site of the said abbey, with the profits of St. James's fair, held yearly in the said close, and in the street called St. James's end or Abbey street, "and all stallage, piccage, tolls, and customs of the said fair and market, and also our court of Pie-"powder within the said fair and market," &c.[h] Bridges says, 'the fair continued to be held in the abbey-'grounds long after the dissolution of the monastery. About thirty years ago it was moved into the town, where 'it is now kept[i].' It is still held in Northampton, but a fine was levied of the fair on the sale of the St. James's abbey estate in 1791.

Browne Willis conjectures that William Peverel the founder was buried in the conventual church here, as were some of the early benefactors; and in later times several individuals of rank had sepulture here. Amongst these Elizabeth, daughter and coheiress of sir Henry Percy and wife of sir Thomas Borough, as appears from the will of her son Thomas lord Borough, 18 Feb. 1495-6, whereby he directed, "that upon his Mother lying In-"terred in St. James's abbey near Northampton, there should be laid a Stone, somewhat raised in height, with "the Arms of his Father and Mother thereon: and an Inscription; for the doing whereof he bequeathed ten "pounds[k]." In 1485 sir John Catesby of Arthingworth, one of the justices of the common pleas, willed his body to be buried here[l]; and Richard Wideville, last earl Rivers of that family, by will 20 Feb. 1490-1, "be-"queathed his body to be buried in the Abby of St. James at Northampton, in a place made ready for the "same[m]." Bridges says, 'the site of the church and church-yard contains about two acres;' but there is now no appearance of so small an inclosure, and the immediate site of the church and abbey is traditionally supposed to be a close of about six acres, called the Fair-yard close, where several stone coffins have been dug up within these few years. All remains, however, of the conventual buildings have been long since destroyed, and it is to be regretted that no delineation of them is known to exist. Leland observes, "the Warilla that cumpasith the "hole site of the House is highe, faire, and large, ex lapide quadrato[n]." The north and now only portion of the wall which formerly surrounded the abbey precincts, bounds the Daventry road to the south for some distance, and occasionally for a few yards exhibits fragments of the original masonry.

THE SITE AND DEMESNE LANDS of the abbey, with the profits of the fair, were granted in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), to Nicholas Gifford, of Duston, gent. his heirs and assigns, for ever[o]; from whom they lineally descended to his

The estate was alienated by the Parkers, and the mansion destroyed, prior to 1680, in which year sir John Heron, of Chipchase in Northumberland, bart. mortgaged certain lands "near to a late mansion house called St. James;" and the whole is now distributed into small freeholds.

FLORE, FLOWER, OR FLOORE,

In modern orthography, and in domesday and the earlier records "Flora," is not perhaps reducible to any satisfactory derivation. This parish includes parts of CLASTHORP and UPPER HEYFORD. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 18 Geo. 3 (1778), and, exclusive of its hamlets, contains about 1940 acres, of which Mrs. Kerby, lady of the manor, has about 270 acres; Richard Pack, of London, esq. about 130 acres; Frederick Morrice, of Betshanger in Kent, esq. lessee of the impropriate rectory, about 170 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 210 acres; T. R. Thornton, of Brockhole, esq. about 100 acres; Mr. John Capell about 175 acres; Mr. Thomas Newman, of Braunston, about 165 acres; and Mr. Samuel Freeman, of Flore fields, about 120 acres. It is bounded on the north by Brington; north east by Harpole; east by Upper Heyford; south by the western branch of the river Nen, which divides it from Nether Heyford; south west and west by Stowe and Dodford in Fawsley hundred; and north west by Brockhole. The soil is principally a greyish loam. A meadow of about 40 acres, called Floore lake, adjoining the church-yard, is esteemed one of the finest pieces of old pasture in the county. This lordship affords the following scarce plants. Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony. Artemisia Absinthium, Wormwood. Tussilago Petasites, Butterbur. Cardamine amara, bitter Cress. Rubus corylifolius, hazle-leaved Bramble. Bryum pyriforme, Pear Threadmoss. There is a water-mill, south of the village, on the Nen; and near it a very strong chalybeate spring.

MANORIAL HISTORY. KEYNES FEE*. In the time of Edward the confessor one Ernui had a portion of "Flora," which at the domesday survey belonged to William de Cahaignes (Keynes), and consisted of one hide. The arable land was three carucates; of which one was in demesne with two servants; another was in the occupation of four villeins and three bordars; and the third carucate was waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 5s. yearly, and four acres of meadow. The whole was valued at 20s. yearly[a].

Leuric, a saxon thane*, held freely another portion of "Flora, worth 20s. yearly, but doubled in value in domesday, where it is surveyed amongst the possessions of the earl of Moreton, under whom it was held by William. It consisted of three virgates. The arable land was two carucates; one in demesne with four servants, and two villeins and five bordars had the other. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly, and four acres of meadow[b].

There is the strongest presumptive evidence of William de Cahaignes, or Keynes, the paramount lord of the first of these estates, and William, the mesne lord of the second, being the same individual; and in the hydarium of Hen. 2, Hugh de Chaneys is certified to have one hide and four small virgates in "Flora" of the fee of Keynes[c].

Amongst the debts due to the Jews which were paid into the exchequer in 21 Hen. 3 (1236-7), was the sum of £18. and a mark by the heir of William, son of Ralph de Keynes, for which debt his ancestor had pledged Dodford, Flore, Horsted (in Sussex), and Heyford; and the proportion charged on William Tilly, and Robert, son of Richard de Northampton, who held Flore, which had been extended at £15. amounted to £4. 2s. 4d.[d] These subinfeudations formed the Tilly and Trussel's manors, both of which were therefore subordinate to the barony of Keynes, and in consequence subject to the court leet of Dodford.

TILLY MANOR. Henry Tilly was certified to be one of the lords of "Flore" in 9 Edw. 2 (1315)[e], but occasional attestations of grants to the monasteries of St. James and St. Andrew at Northampton, are the only subsequent notices which can be gleaned of this family till its extinction in the reign of Hen. 5, when Jane, daughter and heiress of sir John Tilly, conveyed this manor in marriage to

John Tame, esq. 'In the second year of (Hen. 6) it was claimed by Joan, the wife of William Sibthorp.' 'In 'the thirty-sixth of the same reign, John Brewe, esq. laid claim to it, against which John and Elizabeth his wife an 'action was brought the same year by Thomas Pygge for the recovery of the said Manor. In this year a fine 'was levied of it in fee simple by Thomas Flete. In the thirty-eighth year of Henry VI. Thomas Tame, of Avene in 'the county of Southampton, released to Thomas Pigge, Elizabeth his wife, and their heirs, all his right in this 'Manor, and divers estates in Northamptonshire and other counties.'

The above parties will be recognized in the subjoined pedigree, and their interest was probably limited to some temporary family arrangement, which did not ultimately affect the descent of the estate; for in 1 Eliz. (1558-9),

Anne, countess of Bedford, died seised (int. al.) in her own right of a moiety of the manor of "Flowre," held of sir Humphrey Stafford as of his manor of Dodford by knight's service, leaving Francis (2nd) earl of Bedford her son and heir, aged 30 years[g], by whom a fine was levied of it in 4 Eliz. to Blaze Saunders, gent.[l] son of Robert Saunders, esq. to whom a fine had been levied in 4 and 5 Phil. and Mary, (1557-8), of the other moiety, under the loose description of Tillye's manor, by George Turpin, of Knaptoft in Leicestershire, esq.[m] afterwards knighted, whose great grandfather, John Turpin, esq. died 3 May, 9 Hen. 7 (1493), seised (int. al.) of Gobion's manor in Northampton, where a pedigree of the family will be introduced, and of a moiety of the manor of Flore, held of Thomas Stafford, esq. by fealty and suit at his court of Dodford[n], and which, it may fairly be presumed, came to him by inheritance from the other coheiress of Tilly, as the arms of that family (Ar. a cross botonè between four crescents G.) were quartered by the Turpins[o].

Both moieties thus centered in the family of Saunders, a junior branch of the respectable family seated at HARRINGTON, but did not continue undivided; for at the court-leet of Dodford in 1625, the jurors presented that

James Enyon, esq. died seised of a moiety of the manor called Tilly's manor in Flore, held of that barony by knight's service, and 6d. rent per ann. and James Enyon, esq. was son and heir, and of full age[p].

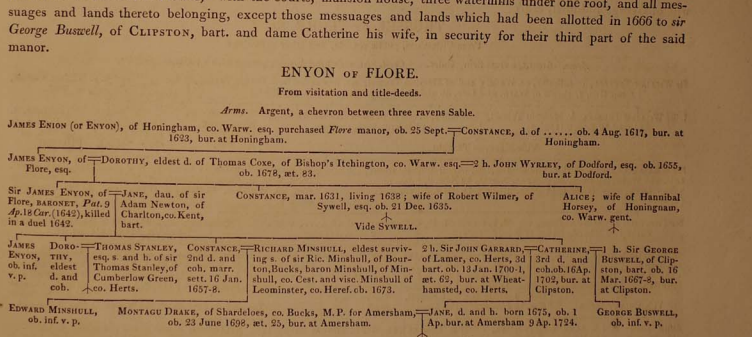
James Enyon, esq. eventually obtained the second moiety of Tilly's manor; at least there was no other claimant to it; and it will be subsequently shewn that he was entitled also to a moiety of Trussel's manor. His grandson, James Enyon, esq. was created a baronet by Charles 1st in April 1642, but before the expiration of the year fell in a duel with sir Nicholas Crispe. Both parties were volunteers in the royal cause, and the dispute arose at their quarters in Gloucestershire. The fatal result made an indelible impression on the mind of the survivor, who ever after wore mourning, except in the field of battle, when he cherished the hope of being united to his friend by a fortunate bullet; and through life hallowed every return of the melancholy anniversary by closing his chamber in darkness, and devoting himself to fasting and prayer. Sir James dying without male issue, the title became extinct, and in 1661-2 an act of parliament passed for settling certain manors and estates on his surviving trustees to sell for payment of his debts; but the Flore estate appears to have descended in equal shares to his three daughters and coheiresses; for by indentures of lease and release 4 and 5 May 1668,



The hon. Walgrave Crew, one of the sons of John lord Crew of Steane, conveyed to Henry Rushton, of Northampton, gent. in fee, two third parts (the purparties of Stanley and Minshull), "of the manor of Flore alias Flower," with the courts, mansion house, three watermills under one roof, and all messuages and lands thereto belonging, except those messuages and lands which had been allotted in 1666 to sir George Buswell, of Clipston, bart. and dame Catherine his wife, in security for their third part of the said manor.

Henry Rushton entered his pedigree at the visitation of 1681, and died in 1700. William Rushton, esq. his son and heir, sold part of his property at Flore in 1723, and the residue in 1727, to

George Devall, of London, esq. first commissioner of his majesty's board of works, who was appointed sheriff of this county in 1744, but died in London 8 Feb. 1744-5, during his sheriffalty, and John Devall, esq. his son and heir, served the office the remainder of the year. He died 5 June 1769, having devised his Flore estate to his wife, Sarah Devall, in fee; of whom it was purchased in August 1771, by Richard Kerby, esq. who was sheriff of the county in 1784, and died 9 Sept. 1804; under whose will his sister, Mrs. Mary Kerby, is now tenant for life, with remainder to his nephew, Richard Pack, of London, esq. The manorial privileges exercised are confined to a game deputation.

The Buswell or Garrard share was probably sold by Mrs. Drake to her uncle sir Samuel Garrard, bart. who was in possession in 1709[q], and is stiled in Bridges' sir Samuel Garrett of London.'

Trussel Manor was the portion of Flore held by Richard, son of Richard de Northampton, in the reign of Hen. 3. How, or when it passed to the Trussels is uncertain; the first individual whose connection with it can be substantiated, is sir William Trussel, nephew of sir William Trussel the continuator of the elder line of that ancient family. He had a considerable estate in Warwickshire, and Gayton and Hothorp in this county, besides this manor, where he is said to have principally resided. He was banished the realm as an adherent of Thomas earl of Lancaster in 15 Edw. 2 (1322)[r], and, in 17 Edw. 2 the king, for good and laudable services, granted to John de Kaen lord of Saverpont, for life, the manor of "Flore," late belonging to William Trussel a rebel[s].

[q] Knightley evidences. [r] Lel. Col. 1. p. 671. [s] Orig. 17 Edw. 2. r. 32.

Returning to England in 20 Edw. 2 (1326), with queen Isabel and prince Edward, he became one of the leaders of the confederacy against the De Spencers; and, after the fall of those unpopular favorites, was deputed by the nobles to announce to the king their renunciation of allegiance, and in the name of the people of England to depose him from the regal authority. On the accession of Edw. 3 he rendered himself obnoxious at court by his opposition to Mortimer, the minion of the queen dowager; in consequence of which he was again compelled to fly the kingdom, and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), his manor of Flore was committed by the king to the custody of Thomas de Bourn, to hold during pleasure at the yearly rent of £25. 15s. 10½d.[t]; who, having given security in chancery, obtained a grant of the goods and chattels also of the said sir William Trussel[u]. The year following he obtained restitution of his lands, and in 5 Edw. 3 procured a charter of free warren here, and in certain lordships in Leicestershire and Warwickshire[x]. His son and successor, sir Theobald Trussel, settled this manor, by fine 29 Edw. 3, on his daughter Agnes[y], who, in 6 Hen. 4 (1404-5), released her interest to her brother sir John Trussel, and Margaret his wife; which Margaret, in her widowhood, infeoffed the manor of Gayton and other lands in certain trustees, by whom they were conveyed to Robert Tanfield, esq *; but Flore descended to her daughter and heiress Philippa; and from her, agreeably to the annexed pedigree, in moieties to her representatives,

Nicholas Ovy and Thomas Holton, gents. who, in 3 Edw. 4 (1463), did fealty for the manor of Flore to dame Eleanor Stafford, lady of Dodford[z]. By a rental of the feudatory tenants of Dodford, made and renewed 28 July 3 Hen. 7 (1488), it appears that sir John Trussel formerly held the manor called Trussel's manor in Flore, by knight's service and 8s. rent, which manor was lately held by Thomas Holton in coparceny with Nicholas Ovy, as heirs of the said sir John Trussel, and was at that time in possession of Fulk Coley in right of Eleanor his wife, in coparceny with P...., wife of Thomas Dycons, in her own right, and of Anne, widow of Nicholas Ovy, in her own right; and that dame Eleanor Stafford sold the wardship of Thomas Holton for a sum of money to William Brothers, of Wedon Beck[a]. On the death of Anne Ovy in 1506, her next of kin and heir was found to be

The Holton moiety was probably the Trussel manor for which William Wilmer, esq.† paid chief rent at Dodford court in 1701[d].

HONOR OF CHOKES‡. Two saxon thanes had an estate at "Flora," rated at 10s. yearly, encreased to 25s. yearly in domesday, when it was held by Olbald under Gunfrid de Cioches, and consisted of a hide and a virgate. The arable land was three carucates; of which two were in demesne with four servants, and five villeins with four bordars had the other carucate. There were six acres of meadow[e]. Anselm de Chokes answered for this hide and virgate in "Flora" in the hydarium of Hen. 2[d]; and in the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Robert de Grimscote and Isabella his wife were certified to hold a knight's fee in "Flore" of Robert de Gynes, lord of the honor of Chokes[s]. ‘ ‘ Upon collecting the aid for the knighthood of the king's son in the twentieth year of ‘ Edw. III. the heirs of Richard de Grymmescote accounted for one knight's fee in Flore of the fee of Chokes.’

Peverel Fee*. At the domesday survey William Peverel had half a hide in “ Flora,” appendant to the manor of Newbottle. The arable land was one carucate in the tenure of three soemen[s]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Ralph Fitz Sewan was certified to hold half a hide in “ Flora” of the fee of Peverel[h]. This Ralph was doubtless brother of and was succeeded by Robert Fitz Sewin †, whose grandson, Robert Fitz Hugh, leaving three daughters and coheiresses, William Cumin, in 3 Joh. (1201), rendered an account of 25 marks (£16. 13s. 4d.) and a palfrey, for having the youngest in marriage with a reasonable part of the free tenements of the said Robert[i]; in 6 Joh. he owed a palfrey of 5 marks value, or 5 marks (£3. 6s. 8d.) in specie, for a certain agreement respecting the fine between Robert de Bella-aqua (Bellew), husband of the other coheiress, and James the jew of Northampton, concerning a debt due to the said James from Robert Fitz Hugh[k]; and in the same year he, with Sarah his wife, rendered an account of 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) for her share of the inheritance of her sister Alice[l].

Robert Calcott, of Byfield, gent. died 4 March 1602-3, seised of a capital messuage and six virgates of land, &c. in Flore, held of the king as of the honor of Peverel, and John Calcott was son and heir, aged 20 years and upwards[l].

Mandeville Fee‡. Baldwin held of Geoffrey de Manneville (Mandevill), at the domesday survey, half an hide in Flora. The arable land was one carucate, in the tenure of one villein and two servants. There were four acres of meadow, and 5s. yearly arising from the profits of a mill. The whole had been rated at 5s. yearly in the time of Edward the confessor, but was then trebled in value[m]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, Otner was certified to hold four small virgates in “ Flora” of the fee of Geoffrey (Mandeville) earl of Essex[h]. It was adjudged on an assize, 4 Joh. (1202), between Cecily de Flore (widow of Gerard Dizel), and Matilda, wife of Peter de “ Honeton” (Hinton), that the wife not being legally capable of purchasing lands to her own use during the life of her husband, Matilda was equally entitled, as heir of the said Gerard, to seisin of the said half virgate in question, as though they had been purchased with his own money[n]. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3, Adam, son of Richard de Flore, was found to hold the fourth part of a fee of Henry de Hinton of the fees of the earl of Hereford of the honor of Mandeville[o]. Richard de Flore, whom I conceive to be the same person who occurs in the grant to St. Andrew's priory as Richard de Mareschall, came into court before the king, 53 Hen. 3 (1268-9), and granted to Hugh de Coleworth§ all his lands and tenements in “ Flore[p],” which he further confirmed to him for his homage and 25 marks[q] (£16. 13s. 4d.) In 55 Hen. 3, Hugh de Coleworth sold to sir Philip, son of sir Robert de Hastings, for 140 marks (£93. 6s. 8d.), the lands and tenements in “ Flore,” Welton, Dodford, Teton, Harleston, Heyford, and “ Staverne” (Staverton), which he had purchased of Richard, son of Robert de Flore[r]. Alice, widow of Robert de Hastings, brought, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), a writ of dower against John, son of Robert de Hastings, claiming a third of 48s. rent and two hens in Flore and other vills, to which John, by the abbot of St. James and Henry de Donton his guardians, answered that the dower was 50s. rent in Flore[s]. The suit and service to the hundred court of Newbottle grove, which was stiled the manor of sir Thomas Samwell by Bridges, was probably rendered for this portion of Flore, as the paramountship of the other fees is clearly ascertained.

Various religious houses had possessions in Flore besides Merton priory in Surrey, which early obtained the advowson.

St. Andrew's Priory at Northampton had the tithes of Burchard in “ Flora” confirmed to them (int. al.) by Henry 1st[t], and subsequently by Cecily, widow of Gerard Disel[u], and Richard Mareschall, the heirs of Burchard, with the additions of 10s. yearly rent[u]. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[x], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[y], the temporalities of the priory in Flore were rated at 14s. per ann.; but in the ministers' accompts at the dissolution they were valued jointly with lands in Holcott, Pightesley, and other places.

St. James's Abbey near Northampton, had 40 acres in “ Flora,” of the gift of Gerard Disel and “ Sezilia” (Cecilia) his wife[z]; and 10s. per ann. given by Margery, daughter of Richard de Mareschall of Flore,” for the souls of her father and mother, and her husbands Richard de Brington and Robert de Camera[a]. Sara, daughter of Robert Fitz Hugh de Norht. with consent of William Cumin her husband, granted to the abbey a virgate of land in “ Flore,” and 10 acres in Upton[b], which virgate was included in the charter of William Ferrars earl of Derby, dated at Buckby 19 Aug. 32 Hen. 3 (1248), confirming to the abbey the donation of lands within his fee of Newbottle, and remitting all services, except two suits yearly at his courts there[c]. In 1257 the rents of the abbey lands here were assigned to the support of the abbey infirmary. These possessions were valued in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), at 18s. 4d. per ann.[d]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), at 43s. 4d. per ann.[y]. In the ministers' accompts they are not separately rated.

Lenton Priory near Nottingham had temporalities in Brington and Flore, valued at 11s. 8d. per ann. in the taxation of 1254[e] and 1291[y].

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed view of frank pledge twice a year at Bradden, of all his tenants there, and at Welford, Buckby, “ Flore,” and Harpole[f].

The Manor House is a small but respectable building, probably erected by the Enyons, as the gable terminations and windows divided by stone mullions are in the prevailing taste of that period.

The Village is five miles from Daventry, on the turnpike road to Northampton, by which it is skirted on the north. In the time of Bridges it consisted of ‘ one hundred and sixteen houses, of which fourteen (were) appro'priated to the poor.' By the census of 1801 it contained 156 houses and 821 inhabitants, and by that of 1811, 173 houses, and 869 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £205. 1s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of £10. per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4873. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £732. 10s. 10d. at 6s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after All Saints.

Market and Fair. In 7 Edw. 3 (1333), sir William Trussell obtained a charter for a weekly market at "Flore" every Monday, and a yearly fair for nine days, beginning on the eve of St. Barnabas[g]; but both of them have so long been discontinued, as not to be even traditionally remembered.

The Advowson was given by one of the family of Keynes, to Merton priory in Surrey, probably by the Ralph Keynes who gave them Combe Keynes in Dorsetshire, and other churches[h]. After the dissolution it was granted, 38 Hen. 8 (1546), to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford[i], who demise the impropriate tithes on a beneficial lease of 21 years, renewable every seven years, but retain in their own hands the advowson of the vicarage.

The Rectory is valued in the taxations of 1254[k] and 1291[l], at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting the yearly portion of 20s. belonging to St. Andrew's priory; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £17. 6s. 5d. per ann.[m] In an agreement between the priors of St. Andrew's and Merton in 1447, the above portion was described as two parts of the tithes of 15 virgates of arable land[n], and was commuted for a yearly payment of 20s. two thirds of which was paid out of the rectory and the remaining third by the vicar. The rectory house stands north east of the church, with a contiguous old inclosure of about 4 acres, doubtless the croft reserved at the ordination of the vicarage; in addition to which the lessee of the impropriation has 163 a. 1 r. 14 p. by the award of the commissioners of inclosure, in lieu of two third parts of the great tithes of the open fields, and of the homesteads and old inclosures of persons entitled to allotments sufficient to discharge them.

The rev. James Morrice, the late vicar, purchased the lease of the impropriate rectory of the late T. L. Thornton, esq. of Brockhole, and his son and heir, Frederick Morrice, esq. of Betshanger, in Kent, is the present lessee.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of West Haddon. The prior and convent of Merton obtained an appropriation of this church in the episcopacy of Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln, when a vicarage was ordained with an unusually liberal endowment, which was confirmed by Robert archbishop of Canterbury, reciting that the prior and convent were to retain only two parts of the rectorial tithes to their own use, and the third part to be enjoyed by the vicar, with all obventions to the altar, and all the lands (or glebe) belonging to the church, except the house belonging to the church, with the adjacent croft, which were to remain to the canons[o]. In the taxations of 1254[p] and 1291[l], this vicarage is valued at 15 marks (£10.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 at £17. 17s. 3d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. in synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and a pension of 6s. 8d. to the prior of St. Andrew's[m]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £100. per ann. in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, and that John Warren the incumbent was resident[q]. The vicarage consists of 204 a. 3 r. 24 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe, and of a third part of the rectorial and the whole of the vicarial tithes of the open fields, and of the homesteads and old inclosures belonging to those proprietors who had sufficient land in the open fields for their discharge; but no less than 60 small homesteads still remain unexonerated. The vicar has also an annual payment of £20. for the tithes of 30 yardlands at Clasthorp, and £16. 7s. for the tithes of 12 yardlands in Upper Heyford, within the parish of Flore. The vicarage house has been rebuilt by the present incumbent.

in Leicestershire, and was canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and of Wayth in Yorkshire, and rector of the third portion of Waddesdon in Buckinghamshire. He died 13 May 1601, and was buried in York cathedral. His successor, Leonard Hutten, D. D. was inst. 6 June 1601. He was also vicar of Wedon Beck from 1602 to 1604. In 1599 he was installed canon of Christ Church in Oxford. He retained his canonry with this vicarage till his death 17 May 1632, at the advanced age of 75 years, when he was buried in the divinity chapel of Christ Church. "His younger years," says Ant. à Wood, "were beautified with all kinds of polite learning, his middle with "ingenuity and judgment, and his reverend years with "great wisdom in government, having been often sub-"dean of his house." He published "An Answer to "a Treatise concerning the Cross in Baptism," 1605, 4to. and left in MS. "A Discourse of the Antiquity of "the University of Oxford," since printed by Hearne in his Textus Roffensis; and "Historici Fundationum "Ecclesia Christi Oxon. unà cum Episcoporum, Deca-"norum, et Canonicorum ejusd. Catalogo." On his decease,

Richard Gardiner, D. D. another canon of Christ Church, was presented by the dean and chapter, and inst. 30 Sept. 1632. He was a native of Hereford, and entered of Christ Church about 1607. He was sequestered from this vicarage in 1646, and

John Warren appointed his successor[x]. In 1648 Dr. Gardiner was deprived of his canonry also by the parliamentary visitors, and lived in obscurity at Oxford till the restoration, when he was reinstated in both his preferments; and dying 20 Dec. 1670, was buried in Christ Church cathedral. He was author of several single sermons, orations, and tracts. His successor,

Ralph Trumbull, A. M. was inst. 12 Jan. 1670-1; on whose cession,

William Levett, A. M. 1666, D. D. 1680, was inst. 4 May 1676, at which time he was rector of Husbands Bosworth in Leicestershire, to which was added the principalship of Magdalen-hall, Oxford, in 1681, and the deanry of Bristol in 1685-6; all which preferments he held till his death in 1693-4, and was buried in Christ Church cathedral. He was succeeded by Robert Thynne, A. M. who was inst. 21 June 1694, and buried here 7 Jan. 1716-17[y], when

Edward Ivie, A. M. was inst. 27 Mar. 1717. He was author of "Epicteti Enchiridion Latinis versibus adumbratum," 1715: a work which gained him considerable reputation. He died here 11 June 1745, and

Luke-Fielder Hammond, A. M. was inst. 4 July 1745; who dying 24 Apr. 1776[z],

James Morrice, A. M. was inst. 12 Oct. 1776. In 1787 he succeeded his brother lieut.-col. Morrice in the manor and advowson of Betshanger in Kent, and in 1793 was collated to that rectory on his own petition. He generally resided here, but died at London in January 1815, and was buried in the family vault at Betshanger. He was an accomplished scholar, and published a Translation of the Iliad of Homer into blank verse, 2 vols. 8vo. 1809. On his decease, Kenneth-Mackenzie-Reid Tarpley, A. M. was inst. 9 May 1815.

The Registers do not now commence till 1653; but in the time of Bridges they began in 1538.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands in a spacious church-yard at the southern extremity of the village, and consists of an embattled tower containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel, with a small vestiary attached to the north side. The aisles are extended parallel with the west end of the tower; the windows are various, but none, perhaps, prior to the beginning of the 14th century. The south door of the chancel is of an earlier date: two circular shafts and capitals support a pointed arch, decorated with a connected series of the four leaved ornament. The dripstone has a plain return, which at the east end is continued as a tablet along the wall. The interior is partially new pewed. The nave is 50 ft. long by 21 ft. wide; the north aisle 62 ft. by 13 ft. 4 in.; the south aisle 62 ft. 6 in. by 13 ft. 7 in.; and the chancel 34 ft. 1 in. by 19 ft. 7 in. The arches in the tower communicating with the nave and aisles are closed up. At the west end of the nave is a gallery. Each aisle is separated from the nave by three spacious pointed arches on clustered pillars; those on the north side having foliated, and those on the south plain capitals. At the west end of the north aisle, against the wall, is placed a large unornamented circular font. At the east end of the south aisle is a piscina with a small foliated finial. A neat wooden screen divides the nave from the chancel. On the south side is a seat under an arch, and to the east are two recesses, probably for depositing the holy elements, under semicircular arches within pointed arches, having a quatrefoil in the central space between them.

North Aisle. The altar-tomb at the east end of this aisle, assigned to sir Theobald Trussel[a], is now reduced to a mutilated trunk, bereft of legs and arms. It is described by Bridges as 'a raised monument of 'white marble, on which lies the effigies of a man armed 'with a coat of mail, his surcoat girded round him, and 'a collar of S. S. about his neck; at his head, which is 'supported by a cushion, is an helmet, and at his feet 'a lion couchant. There is no inscription; but it is 'supposed to be the monument of one of the family of 'Trussel.'

3. On a slab at the west end. Arms: quarterly, 1 and 4, ( ) a lion rampant ( ); 2 and 3, ( ) a fess engrailed ( ) between three annulets ( ).

Chancel. 4. 'Upon an old grey marble near the 'chancel door, is the effigies of the Virgin Mary in brass 'clasping our Saviour in her arms; beneath them a man 'in armour, and a woman in the habit of the times, 'with their hands conjoined in the gesture of prayer: 'from the man's mouth issues a scroll with these words, 'Misericordias Domini in æternum Cantabo, and a like scroll 'from the mouth of the woman with these words, O 'blessed Lady pray to Thu of us to have mercy. Under each of 'their figures were their coats of arms, which are now 'gone[b].' Only the figures (about 21 in. in length) are now remaining, and 'under their feet, on a brass plate,'

On his left side is his wife, with these 'words on a scroll proceeding from her mouth, Omnes 'dilecti orate pro nobis. Above them is an old man standing 'on a globe, with a crown on his head, and on his body 'the figure of our Saviour on the cross; and at their 'feet is this inscription:'

The personification of the Deity is still affixed to the stone; but the figures of the man and woman—about the size of the last—are now detached, and lying loose in the chancel.

6. 'Near the above, on an old marble, is a brazen 'cross, and beneath it the following inscription on a 'brass plate,' now detached from the stone:

The Independents have an old established interest here, which is now consolidated with and subordinate to Wedon. Formerly service was performed every Sunday alternately at each village, but in 1792 a commodious chapel was erected at Wedon for the united congregations, and a small chapel has been subsequently built here for a Sunday evening lecture by the Wedon minister.

The Quakers had a meeting-house here, and there is still a place called the Quaker's burial ground.

Benefactions. The commissioners of inclosure awarded three allotments containing 7 a. 39 p. in trust for the rev. Dr. Gardiner, Steer, and Muscot's charities, which are now incorporated, and let together for £14. per ann. James Curtis of Floore, by will 1728, gave land in Wedon, which now lets for £17. per ann. to the relief of four poor widows of this parish. Mrs. Abigail Rushton's bequest is towards paying a schoolmistress to teach four poor children to read and spin. Knight's charity has not been paid for several years past.

CLASTHORP, or GLASTHORP,

Is a hamlet to the parishes of Flore and Brington, containing about 750 acres, but about 600 acres are claimed by the former and about 340 acres by the latter parish, consequently the parochiality of about 190 acres is subject to litigation. It lies north of Flore, and south west of Brington, and the whole is old inclosure. The principal proprietors are John Wilson Duffin, of Edinburgh, esq. who has about acres; and the representatives of the late Thomas Beet, of Great Houghton, esq. and of the late rev. George Beet, of Harpole, who have about 290 acres.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee*. Barony of Keynes†. That portion of "Clachestorp" which is manorially subordinate to Dodford, and parochially to Flore, belonged to Leuric and Turbern in the time of Edward the confessor, and was rated at 20s. yearly. At the domesday survey it was doubled in value, and was then held by William (Keynes) under the earl of Moreton, and consisted of three virgates and half a hide. The arable land was three carucates: two were in demesne with three servants; and a villein and a bordar[a] (had the other). In 9 Hen. 4 (1417-18), Thomas Cressy (of Dodford) died seised of 17*s.* rent and services in "Clasthorp" and other places, parcel of the manor of Dodford, held of the king as of the honor of Leicester by knight's service[b]. John Seyton‡ did fealty for lands in "Claxthorp" at the court leet of Dodford, 7 Hen. 6 (1429)[c]; and in the rental of the feudatory tenants of that manor 3 Hen. 7 (1488), Eusebу Catesby (third son of sir John Catesby of Arthingworth), was returned to hold lands in "Clasthorpe" in right of his wife, one of the heirs of Thomas Seyton, of Maidwell; and, "in the same Clasthorpe," John Turpin held the lands and tenements formerly belonging to Simon Mounz[c]. Clasthorp is not named in the inquisition after the death of this John Turpin[d]; but in 21 Hen. 8 (1528-9), his grandson, John Turpin, esq. was found to die seised of the manor of "Clasthorpe," held of sir Humphrey Stafford[e]. The scattered properties both of the Dodford and Newbottle fees became in a great degree concentrated in Judge Morgan of Heyford, who, in 1558, died in possession of lands here, purchased of William Turpin and George Turpin, esquires, held of the manor of Dodford; lands purchased of George Keble, of Newbottle near Brackley, esq. held of the same manor, or, according to a former inquisition, of the manor of Newbottle; and lands purchased of John Spencer, of Althorp, esq. and Catherine his wife, held of their manor of Newbottle[f]. In subsequent inquisitions of the Morgans, the Newbottle fee is stiled a manor, and the whole descended from this period by the same title with Heyford, till the sale of the Powis estates in this county, by the trustees under the will of the late marquis of Powis, in 1758, when the manor of Clasthorp and 640 acres of land were sold in lots to different purchasers.

John Wilson Duffin, esq. of Edinburgh, and the devisees of the late Thomas Beet, esq. of Great Houghton, and of his brother, the late rev. George Beet, of Harpole, are now the principal proprietors, but neither of them exercise any manorial privileges.

Peverel Fee§. At the domesday survey William Peverel had half a hide in "Clachestorp," appendant to his manor of Newbottle. The arable land was one carucate cultivated by a socman. The origin of its parochial connexion with Brington has been already adverted to, and ascribed to its manorial dependance on Newbottle (p. 112). As a member of that manor it was sometimes specifically named, and always implied, in the inquisitions of the family of Ferrars. It passed with the paramount manor to the Spencers, but was sold, prior to 1538, by John Spencer, esq. and Catherine his wife, to judge Morgan of Heyford, and thus became blended with the Dodford or Keynes fee.

In High-field near Newbottle, and in Little Bury-field, are inequalities of surface, and indications of ponds and stews, which mark the sites of the manorial mansions.

There are now only two or three detached houses in this township, but tradition, and the broken appearance of the ground, point out Great Bury-field as the spot where the village formerly stood.

EAST HADDON,

So named in distinction to West Haddon, varies in domesday from "Eddone" to "Hadone." Its etymology is problematical, it may possibly be compounded of Eᵹᵹ, the name of the first saxon colonist, and dune, a down—that is the hill of Edd—or it may be allusive to the situation on the hab, head or summit of a hill; but neither conjecture can be advanced with confidence. The open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 13 Geo. 3 (1773), and the lordship contains about 2240 acres, of which about 1350 acres belong to William Sawbridge, esq. the lord of the manor; about 380 acres to Christopher Smyth, of Northampton, esq.; nearly 100 acres to the vicar in right of his church; about 100 acres to the daughters and coheiresses of the late sir William Langham, of Cottesbrook, bart.; and about 100 acres each to Mr. John Clarke and Mr. Joseph Claridge. The boundaries are formed by Ravensthorp on the north, from which it is divided by a brook; Holdenby on the east; Brington on the south; and Long Buckby and West Haddon, in Guilsborough hundred, on the west. The lordship is hilly, and affords some pleasing and rather extensive prospects. The prevailing soil is a light fertile loam, but the lower parts of the parish are a blue clay. Amongst the scarce plants found in this parish are, Rubus corylifolius, hazle-leaved bramble. Epilobium tetragonum, square-stalked Willowherb. Polypodium Oreopteris, Heath Fern. The gravel-pits adjoining the road to Ravensthorp furnish fibrous gypsum, jasper, and stone marle, and of extraneous fossils, gryphites, ammonites, belemnites, escallop shells, muscles, and corallites. There are two brick-kilns in the parish. In Mr. Sawbridge's garden is one of the strongest chalybeate springs in the neighbourhood.

MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE*. HONOR OF LEICESTER†. "Eddone" was one of the manors retained by the earl of Moreton in his own possession at the domesday survey. It contained two hides and a half, of which one hide was in demesne. The arable land was five carucates; three in demesne with nine servants; and seven villeins with a priest and seven bordars had the remaining two carucates. There was a mill worth 10s. yearly; eight acres of meadow and ten acres of underwood. The whole had been rated in the time of Edward the confessor at 40s. yearly, but was then doubled in value[a]. To the soke of this manor belonged part of Brampton[b]; a virgate held by William (Keynes) in Brington[c]; and two hides and a virgate held by Ralph in Holdenby[d]. There was also half a hide in "Hadone," held under the earl by this Ralph. The arable land was one carucate, in the occupation of two villeins and four bordars. It had been rated at 12d. yearly, but at the survey was quintupled in value[e]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Haddon" was returned at four hides of the fee of Leicester[f]. Henry earl of Lancaster, in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed return of all writs, pleas of withernam, view of frank pledge, wayfs and strays, infangtheof, acquittance throughout the kingdom from toll, pontage, stallage, pannage, repairing castles or bridges, and other privileges in East Haddon with its members, as parcel of the honor of Leicester[g]. It is still within the paramount jurisdiction of the duchy of Lancaster, and owes suit and service to the court formerly called here, but now kept at West Haddon.

MANOR. The mesne manor was granted out within a century of the norman conquest to the family of Dyve, who were considerable proprietors in this county and Nottinghamshire. In the inquisitions of knights' fees 12 Joh. (1210), Hugh Dyve was certified to hold seven fees and a half in Northamptonshire of the honor of Leicester[m]. He died in the life-time of his mother, leaving three daughters and coheiresses, Matilda, wife of sir Saher Saint Andrew; Alice, wife of sir Richard Mucegros; and Ascelin, wife of sir Simon de Mucegros; who, with their husbands, in 12 Hen. 3 (1227-8), had livery of the lands which had been assigned in dower to their grandmother[n]. The subjoined pedigree will illustrate the descent of the three reputed manors in Haddon which sprung from this tripartite division.

ST. ANDREW MANOR. This estate appears to have been settled on a junior branch of the family, for in 7 Edw. 1 (1278-9), Ralph St. Andrew, probably a younger son of sir Saher by a subsequent marriage, died seised of it, held, not in capite, but of Roger, heir of Maud St. Andrew, a minor in ward to the king, and James St. Andrew was brother and heir, aged 30 years[o]. A writ was directed to the sheriff the same year to deliver the manor of Haddon to the executors of the will of the said Ralph, unless he had taken possession under a claim in his private capacity, and not by virtue of his office on demise of the lord[p], and the following year a mandate was issued to Richard de Holebroc, the king's seneschal, to enter in the king's name on all the lands which the late Ralph St. Andrew held in capite[q]. This manor soon after reverted to the elder line of St. Andrew, probably by the death of the above James St. Andrew s. p. and in the certificate of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), Roger St. Andrew, Thomas Bray, and Ralph Dyve, were returned to hold East Haddon of the honor of Leicester[r]. The annexed pedigree carries down this manor to the coheiresses of St. Andrew; the youngest of whom brought it in marriage to

Sir Oliver St. John, of WOODFORD near Thrapston, in whose descendants it continued till 1807, when, after an uninterrupted descent of six centuries, it was alienated by St. Andrew 13th lord St. John, to William Sawbridge, esq.[s] who was previously in possession of Bray and Ragon's manors by inheritance from his father.

Mucegros or Bray Manor. Sir Richard Mucegros, who married the second coheiress of Dyve, with the consent of his son sir Robert Mucegros, disposed of his purparty in East Haddon to Simont Montfort earl of Leicester; upon whose attainder king Henry 3d bestowed it on

Sir Thomas Bray, his seneschal[t], the ancestor of Edmund lord Bray, who, in 26 Hen. 8 (1534), levied a fine of a manor and tenements in East Haddon to sir John Clerk[v].

[v] Fin. 26 Hen. 8.

By inquisition after the death of William Saunders, esq. of Welford, in 33 Hen. 8 (1541), he was found to have died seised of this manor, held of the king as of his barony of East Haddon, parcel of the duchy of Lancaster[u]; by purchase, probably from one of his descendants, it was transferred to

Robert Hickes, esq. who kept his court for this manor in 1617, and of whom Robert lord Spencer held lands as of his manor of East Haddon, late Saunders's manor, at his death in 1627[x].

The next possessor who occurs is Andrew Lant, esq. of Thorp Underwood, who had also the advowson of the vicarage, and on whose decease in 1695, this manor and advowson descended with his other estates in undivided shares to his three daughters and coheiresses, Elizabeth, wife of Francis Lane, esq. Sarah, wife of sir John Humble, bart. and Catherine, wife of William Ward, esq. of Little Houghton. The pedigree of Lant and subsequent partition of the property will be detailed under Thorp Underwood; it will be sufficient therefore, for the present purpose to state that the manor and mansion-house of East Haddon, with certain lands and the third turn of presentation to the vicarage, were allotted to William Ward, esq. whose son Thomas Ward, esq. sold them in 1737 to John Wodhull, esq. of Thenford, of whom they were purchased in 1751 by Clarke Adams, esq. lieutenant-colonel of the Northamptonshire militia, whose son, Simon Adams, esq. sometime deputy recorder of Northampton, conveyed them in 1780 to Henry Sawbridge, esq.[y] father of the present proprietor.

Mrs. Lane's share vested under her will in her sister Humble, who thus became entitled to two third shares of the lands and of the advowson, and was succeeded by her only son sir William Humble, bart. by whom they were devised in fee to his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert 2nd lord Barnard, from whom one share has passed to the daughters and coheiresses of the late sir William Langham, bart. of Cottesbrook, by his wife Henrietta-Elizabeth-Frederica, daughter and heiress of the hon. Charles Vane, brother and devisee of lady Humble; and the other share being deeply mortgaged, a foreclosure took place, and a conveyance in fee was made in 1756 by the mortgagee to James-Haughton Langston, esq. of Sarsden in Oxfordshire, who in 1774 sold his estate here to Christopher Smyth, esq. of Northampton.

Mucegros or Ragon Manor. Sir Simon Mucegros, husband of the youngest coheiress of Dyve, left an only son, sir John Mucegros, who dying s. p. was succeeded in his manor of "Est Haddon," and estates in Nottinghamshire, Sussex, and Berkshire, by his two sisters, Alice and Agatha[z], who were afterwards married to Ralph Dyve and Walter Ratinden. Alice survived her husband, but leaving no issue, her purparty passed to her nephew and heir John Ratinden[a], who in 7 Edw. 3 (1333), levied a fine in fee tail of the third part of the (original) manor of East Haddon[b], which he appears to have alienated soon after; for, in 31 Edw. 3 (1357),

John Ragon levied a fine of it in fee simple[c]. From him this manor or estate passed, conformably with the subjoined pedigree, to Henry Dyve, esq. who enjoyed it in right of his wife, and from whom it lineally descended to *sir Lewis Dyve, whose estate here was sold in 1652 by the parliamentary commissioners of sequestration to John Willes and John Moulton, yeomen[d]. About the time of the restoration sir Lewis again came into possession, either by restitution or re-purchase, and in 1661, jointly with Francis Dyve, esq. his son and heir, conveyed it to sir Justinian Isham, bart. of Lamport, whose great grandson sir Justinian Isham, bart. alienated it in 1789 to Henry Sawbridge, esq.[y] father of the present proprietor.

MANOR HOUSES. Each manor had probably its own mansion. The St. Andrew manor-house unquestionably stood in the field still called St. Andrew's close. The site of the Dyves mansion is not known. The manor house of the Brays was the residence of the family of Adams, but part of the offices only are now standing. The present mansion, erected by the late Mr. Sawbridge, is situated a short distance to the north, and is a commodious edifice of white free-stone. In the breakfast parlour are twelve humorous sketches by Hogarth illustrative of Hudibras.

THE VILLAGE is between seven and eight miles distant from Northampton, north of the turnpike road to Coventry through Dunchurch. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'seventy-one houses and three for the use of the poor;' by the census of 1801 it contained 115 houses and 411 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 124 houses and 552 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £155. 2s. 3d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4090. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £756. 7s. at 7s. in the £. 'The wake is kept on the Sunday after Michaelmas.'

ADVOWSON. The inspeximus charter of king Edward 2nd to the abbot and convent of Sulby, recites and confirms, among other donations, the church of East Haddon with its pertinencies, of the gift of William de Dyve, son of Hugh de Dyve[e]. On the dissolution, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage fell to the crown, and in 3 Eliz. (1561), were granted, with those of Cold Ashby, in exchange for other estates, to sir Thomas Chaloner and his heirs. Sir Christopher Hatton*, the lord Chancellor, died possessed of them in 1591[f], and the impropriate rectory and advowson were probably severed by his representatives. In 1698 sir John Chester, bart. of Chicheley in Buckinghamshire, settled the impropriation on his next brother, Henry Chester, esq. whose son and heir, the rev. sir Anthony Chester, bart. vicar of this parish, devised it by will in 1766 to his wife dame Elizabeth Chester in fee, who sold it in 1796 to Christopher Smyth, of Northampton, esq.

The advowson of the vicarage was in possession of Andrew Lant, esq. at his death in 1695; and on the partition of his property one turn was assigned to each share. The subsequent descent of these shares has been already given, and the respective proprietors are entitled to present in rotation.

THE RECTORY was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[g] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[h], at 15 marks (£10) per ann. deducting a pension of one mark to the abbot of Sulby; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was rated among the spiritualities of the abbey at £13. 6s. 8d. per ann. deducting a pension of 20s. and 7s. 6½d. in synodals and procurations to the bishop of Lincoln[i]. The commissioners of inclosure allotted 249 a. 2 r. 23 p. in lieu of the great tithes of the open field, and of certain old inclosures and homesteads.

THE VICARAGE is in the deanry of West Haddon. The abbot and convent of Sulby obtained an appropriation of this church in 1351[k], 'and about the same time the vicarage was ordained.' At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was valued at £15. 3s. per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals to the archdeacon of Northampton[l]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £51. per ann. in the patronage of Henry Chester, esq. and that James Dutton the incumbent was resident[m]. It is a discharged living, being returned under the act 5 Anne (1707) to be only of the clear yearly value of £48. 6s. 4d. and in the return of livings under £150. per ann. in 1809, the bishop of Peterborough certified it to be worth £140. per ann. arising from glebe and fixed money payment. The vicarage now consists of 94 a. 38 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe and of all vicarial tithes whatsoever, except of homesteads and old inclosures belonging to persons not having lands or common in the open field, and which continue subject to the same tithes or modusses as before the act. The vicarage-house is north-west of the church.

His successor in this vicarage,

Theophilus Goodfellow, of Trinity coll. Camb. A. M. rector of Great Houghton, was inst. in Nov. 1769[q], and continued to hold both benefices till his death in 1782, when

William Lucas Holden, of Clare hall, Camb. A. M. vicar of Whilton, was presented by Henry Sawbridge, esq. and inst. 18 Apr. 1782. He afterwards took the name of Rose, and dying in Jan. 1814, John Sikes Sawbridge, of Christ Church coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 13 July 1814, on the presentation of his brother, William Sawbridge, esq. He is also vicar of Stretton on Dunsmoor in Warwickshire.

The Registers commence in 1552; but to 1596 is copied from the old register, and signed by Henry Bourne, vicar.

The Church, dedicated to the virgin Mary, is situated near the centre of the village, and consists of an embattled tower, containing five bells, nave, south aisle and porch with a room over it, and chancel. The windows in the south aisle are square-headed; those of the chancel are of an earlier period, pointed, with flowing tracery. The interior is partially new pewed, and at the west end is a modern gallery. The tower is 13 ft. 10 in. long, by 12 ft. wide; the nave and aisle 58 ft. 1 in. long, the nave 22 ft. 1 in. and the aisle 12 ft. wide; and the chancel 40 ft. long, by 18 ft. 6 in. wide. The font, of which an etching is given, has a plain circular shaft, supporting a basin of the same shape, with the figure of a man, rudely sculptured, between two swans, whose heads are protruded under his arms. The nave is separated from the aisle by four large pointed arches on low octagonal pillars with capitals of plain mouldings. At the east end of the aisle is a plain piscina. The chancel is divided from the nave by a wide open arch. At the east end of the south wall are three seats under trefoiled arches, the outer mouldings of which form each spandril into a reversed trefoil; further eastward is a projecting trefoil-headed piscina, under an ogee arch deeply recessed with mouldings; and the whole are connected by an horizontal dripstone with corbel heads.

HARLESTON

Is of considerable local celebrity for its stone, "and the town's name, as some would have it, implies the antiquity of the quarry; Halston, or Harlestone, for thus it is anciently wrote, deriving itself from Harle, the Saxon word to draw, and Stane, a stone, a name alluding to the business of the quarriers, then perhaps the principal inhabitants of that place[a]." 'On Mr. Morton's etymology,' Bridges observes, 'we can lay no great stress, being founded on the modern spelling of the name[b].' "Herolvestone, Herolvestune," and "Erlestone," the domesday orthography, suggests another, and I suspect the true derivation—the town of Herolve, or in loose abbreviated pronunciation Erle. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 18 Geo. 3 (1778), and contains about 2600 acres, of which about 2170 acres belong to Robert Andrew, esq. lord of the manor, and about 300 acres to the rector in right of his church. The adjoining parishes are Holdenby on the north; Brampton on the north-east; Dallington and Duston on the east; Harpole on the south; and Brington on the west. The soil is extremely various, including woodland, light red land, white loam, and clay. The heath, which is inclosed and planted with firs in ridings, spontaneously produces heath, fern, and furze. "In that part of it which affords not the least token or sign that it was ever opened or stirred by the plough, by digging, or any other ways, is a visible and large intermixture of sand with the black vegetable earth of that heathy tract[c]." "The success of the air at Halston, and of the heaths in the neighbourhood, in curing coughs that are not to be abated by the force of ordinary medicines, I myself have experienced more than once, and should chuse to recommend it in the like cases[d]." The heath furnishes the following scarce plants. Equisetum fluviatile, river Horsetail. Trifolium fragiferum, Strawberry-headed Trefoil. Galium procumbens, trailing Goosegrass. Gnaphalium rectum, upright Cudweed. Gnaphalium dioicum, Catsfoot. Ophrys ovata, Twayblade. Senecio sylvaticus, bushy Groundsel. Epilobium tetragonum, square-stalked Willowherb. Rubus Idæus, Raspberry. Drosera rotundifolia, round-leaved Sun-dew. Osmunda Lunaria, Moon-wort. Erica vulgaris, (hoary variety) Hoary Heath. Erica cinerea, fine-leaved Heath. Erica Tetralix, cross-leaved Heath. Genista anglica, needle Furze or Petty-Whin. Genista pilosa, hairy Greenweed. Boletus flavus, yellow Boletus. Hydnum auriscalpium, Fir Hydnum. In other parts of the lordship are found, Carduus acaulis, dwarf Thistle. Carduus tenuiflorus, slender flowered Thistle. Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder. Inula dysenterica, middle Fleabane. Clinopodium vulgare, wild Basil. Senecio lividus, Green-sealed Groundsel. Verbascum Blattaria, yellow Moth Mullein. Rosa spinosissima, Burnet Rose. Menyanthes trifoliata, Buckbean or Water Trefoil. Cichorium Intybus, wild Endive. Daphne Laureola, Spurge Laurel. Polypodium aculeatum, prickly Fern. Asplenium scolopendrium, (E. variety With.) Hart's-tongue. Oak, ash, elm, and all kinds of timber-trees flourish in the greatest luxuriance. The quarries now in use are at the east end of the village outside the park wall, but in the park and the adjacent grounds the ancient delves may still be traced by the large deep hollows. They are precisely of the same nature and quality as those already described in Duston, and have indeed been confounded with them by Morton, who has introduced a particular description of the strata of Whiting's stone pit as "at Harlstone[e]," which in fact is situated in Duston parish. Not far from the quarries are both white and red brick kilns. In the south part of the field are two or three small lime kilns for private use. The water-mill is principally supplied by Broadwell and other local springs. Morton, in enumerating the birds worthy of notice in this county, mentions the Motacilla rubetra (Lin.), the Whin Chat, as not uncommon in the heathy grounds of Harleston[f]. Strix Otus (Lin.), the horned Owl, and Picus Minor (Lin.), the lesser spotted Woodpecker, were shot in this lordship during the last season.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee*. Barony of Keynes†. At the domesday survey the earl of Moreton had two estates in "Herolvestune." The principal one, which was held under him by William, had been the joint freehold of Leuric and Orgar in the time of Edward the confessor, and was then rated at 5s. yearly, but was now increased six fold in value. It contained an hide and a half. The arable land was three carucates, in the cultivation of two villeins and three bordars. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and three acres of meadow[g]. William was the ancestor of the family of Keynes, and this manor is accordingly comprehended within the court leet of Dodford.

Lumley Manor. As early as the reign of Hen. 2, or perhaps earlier, Hugh de Heyford had a knight's fee in Heyford and "Herleston," of the small fees of Moreton, in subtenantcy from the lord of Dodford[h]. In the Testa de Nevill (temp. Hen. 3), amongst the feudatories of (the late) Ralph de Keynes, whose lands, by the minority of the heir, were then in custody of Simon Montfort, the paramount lord, Ralph de Say accounted for a small fee of the fees of Moreton in Heyford and Harleston—by a clerical error written "Berlestone"—as guardian of the heir of Roger de Heyford[i]. This heir was Agnes his daughter, who afterwards married Hugh de Morewick, one of the northern barons, by whom she had three daughters and coheiresses. Two of the three shares into which the Heyford and Morewick property was divided, became vested in sir Roger Lumley and Sibilla his wife, one in their own right, and another on the decease of sir John de Roseles and Beatrice his wife s. p. by virtue of a fine levied by them in 6 Edw. 1 (1277-8), whereby, in consideration of 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.) they settled their purparty, comprising 18 messuages and parts of messuages, $8\frac{1}{4}$ carucates, 4 virgates and two parts of a virgate, and 48s. 4d. annual rent, with pertinencies in several villages in Northumberland, and in "Herleston," Heyford, Brington, Collingtree, and Brockhole, on themselves and their issue, with remainder to the said sir Roger Lumley and Sibilla in fee. Sir Robert Lumley, their eldest son and heir, in 1300 (28-9 Edw. 1), settled all his Northamptonshire estates on Roger Lumley, his younger brother[j], in whose lineal descendants this manor continued till 15 Hen. 7 (1500), when John Lumley, esq. and Alice his wife, passed it by fine to the use of Thomas Andrew, esq.[k]

Thomas Andrew, esq. appears to have made this purchase a provision for Richard Andrew, esq. his eldest son by the second wife, from whom it lineally passed to Robert Andrew, esq. who died s. p. in 1739, and devised it to "his godson" of the same names, and the representative of their common ancestor; whose son and heir, Robert Andrew, esq. is the present possessor. The early generations of the parent stock down to the purchaser of this manor, and the continuation of the elder line through his first wife, will be given under CHARWELTON, but so much of the leading descent is combined with the Harleston branch in the subjoined pedigree as is requisite to illustrate the degree of consanguinity and connection between the late and present family of Andrew.

Bulmer Share or Manor. The family of Bulmer were seated in Yorkshire, where, and in the other northern counties, they had extensive possessions; and Ralph Bulmer, son of Theophania de Morewick, had summons to parliament in the reign of Edward the 3d. From him his mother's inheritance in this county was transmitted to his posterity, and is included in all their inquisitions[1] under the denomination of lands and rents in Harleston, Heyford, Brington, and Collingtree. The estate here is generally termed the third part of the manor, and sometimes the manor of Harleston. '[m] In the twentieth of the reign of Henry 6th (1443-4), sir Robert Bulmer, 'kt. gave up to sir William Tresham and others, all his lands and tenements in Harleston, Heyford, and other 'places.' The Harleston portion of this estate seems to have been afterwards acquired by the Dyves; for in the court leet of Dodford in 40 Eliz. (1598), Robert Andrew, esq. was presented to owe suit and service for lands in Harleston (formerly Lumley's), and John Dyve, esq. for other lands there[n] (formerly Bulmer's); and on the same authority I find sir Salathiel Lovell, one of the barons of the exchequer, in possession in 1709. His claim to manorial privileges was contested by the Andrews; but the estate, with its rights, is now vested in Robert Andrew, esq. whose grandfather purchased it in 1753 of William Wildman 2nd viscount Barrington and Mary his wife, daughter and heiress of Henry Lovell, esq.

MORETON FEE. HONOR OF BERKHAMPSTED*. The other estate of the earl of Moreton in "Herolvestone," consisted only of half a bovate which had formerly belonged to Edric. At the survey *Humphrey held it of the earl. The arable land was two bovates, but the whole lay waste[o]. On the confiscation of the earldom of Moreton it became annexed to the honor of Berkhampsted, and in the inquisition after the death of Edmund earl of Cornwall, 28 Edw. 1 (1299), was included in that portion of the honor which was of the barony of Lucy[p]. It still pays a quit rent of 3s. 4d. yearly to the Berkhampsted court held at Blakesley.

PEVEREL FEE†. Amongst the members of William Peverel's manor of Newbottle, at the domesday survey, was an hide and a half in "Herolvestone." The arable land was three carucates in possession of three socmen and a priest[q].

BRAY OR DYVE MANOR. Brixtan de Armenters—a descendant doubtless of Robert de Armenters who gave a portion of tithes here to the priory of St. Andrew in the reign of Hen. 1—held lands and tenements in "Herleston" in the reign of Ric. 1, of William de Ferrars earl of Derby as of his manor of Newbottle, by render of 4s. yearly rent, and suit to the court of Newbottle. Quena, his daughter and heiress, being a minor at the time of his death, was in ward to the earl; and marrying without his consent, her lands escheated to him as paramount lord, and were given to a certain knight named William de Staunton, who alienated great part of them, and transmitted the residue to his heirs. Her representatives did not, however, submit to this rigid exaction of feudal forfeiture without a spirited and partially successful struggle; for Henry de Bray, husband of Emma, the heiress of Quena, after a suit of 12 years continuance, recovered by great assise, a capital messuage and site of a mill, with a half a virgate of land, &c. against Peter de Tenerchebray, who had purchased them of the earl's grantee. The said Henry claimed also against Hugh de Staunton and Clementia his wife, a messuage and certain other lands, parcel of the escheat, but died pending the decision, as did his son John de Bray, whose son, Henry de Bray, renewed the claim against Thomas de Staunton, son of Hugh and Clementia, and the proceedings at length terminated in a concord or agreement, by which Henry de Bray quit-claimed and released to Thomas de Staunton all right in the said premises, on condition of holding them under him by homage and fealty and 12d. yearly rent[r]. The Leger or Book of Evidences of this Henry de Bray, in his own hand writing, is now in the British Museum, where it forms No. 799 of the Lansdown MSS. Its compilation may be inferred from scattered dates to have occupied several years, and was probably completed A. D. 1329, "et ann. etat. H. de Bray qui scribit sexagesimo[s]." If it had been restricted to circumstantial details connected with the accumulating possessions of a wealthy individual at that early period, the light thus thrown on some of the peculiarities of the feudal system would have rendered this volume in no slight degree interesting; but it embraces a much wider range of subject, and has served to elucidate many a doubtful point, and supply many a link in the manorial and genealogical descent of the neighbouring parishes. Henry de Bray, in addition to the above lands which he derived through Armenters, inherited lands in Harleston through his other maternal ancestor Arnold le Lord, and a third estate from his paternal ancestor Osbert de Harleston, besides that portion of the lordship which was parcel of Upton manor, and certain lands which he held from the abbot of St. James; all of which passed in marriage with Alice, his daughter and heiress, to John Dyve, of Brampton, and in the office taken after the death of sir John Dyve in 29 Hen. 8 (1536-7), are described as the manor of Harleston held of the marquis of Dorset (lord of Newbottle) by fealty[t]. Sir Lewis Dyve, the 10th in descent from John and Alice, being a zealous royalist, his estates were seised by the parliament for delinquency, and in Sept. 1652 his manor of Harleston, with capital messuage or mansion house, built of square stone, with offices, &c. in the occupation of John Hesilrigge, esq. water grist mill, Dyves heath, and a considerable estate minutely described, were sold by the trustees for the sale of sequestered lands for £2893. 7s. 3d. to John Hesilrigge, esq. and William Denton, of Blisworth, gent. in fee[u]; and in Dec. 1658 the small remnant of sir Lewis's estate here was conveyed in fee by the trustees, for £41. 14s. 9d. to Arthur "Haselrick," of Harleston, gent.[x] son of the above John Hesilrigge, esq.

ANTIENT DEMESNE. To the royal manor of Upton, at the domesday survey, belonged half a hide in "Erlestone." The arable land was two carucates, and there were two socmen with one carucate[a]. Hugh de Chanceux, son of John de Chanceux, lord of Upton, seized the lands of the late John de Bray in "Herleston" after his death in 1282 (10 Edw. 1), and retained them nine years till the legal age of Henry de Bray the son and heir[b]. In 1302 (30 Edw. 1) the said Hugh de Chanceux and Henry de Bray entered into a concord, by which the latter agreed to hold of the former 5 messuages and three virgates of land in Harleston, in free socage as of the manor of Upton, of the antient demesne of the crown, rendering yearly the labour of six men for one day in harvest, and 3s. rent; and the suit at the court of Upton from three weeks to three weeks to be remitted for one yearly view of frank pledge[c]. By a subsequent agreement in 34 Edw. 1 (1306), confirmed by an inquisition ad quod dammum and charter from the king, describing the estate as consisting of 9 messuages, 1 toft, 6 cottages, and 3 virgates of land, the services rendered to Chanceux were varied to 9d. rent and suit at the court of Upton every three weeks[d]; and in the same year Henry de Bray paid a fine of 100s. to the king for license to ratify this remission[e].

No manorial courts have been held in Harleston of late years.

ST. JAMES'S ABBEY had a considerable interest here by the bounty of different individuals. Ingelram Cumyn gave three virgates and a half; Richard de Harleston all the waste belonging to his land; and William de Staunton 14 acres of waste, and 28 acres and 1 rood of waste[f]. William Ferrars earl of Derby, by charter 19 Aug. 32 Hen. 3 (1248), confirmed to the abbot all the lands which he had of his fee, including (int. al.) 2 virgates 7 acres and 1 rood; 40 acres; and two virgates and a half in Harleston, and remitted all services except two suits yearly at his court of Newbottle[g]. By a survey without date, the possessions of the abbot and convent of St. James in Harleston consisted of 179 acres, or two carucates, in demesne, held of Thomas de Staunton by 4s. 6d. rent of the fee of Newbottle; 198¾ acres of the same fee held by their tenants; and 151 acres of other fees; making a total of 528¾ acres, or 6⅔ and ¼ virgates[h]. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the temporalities of the abbey here were rated at £4. per ann.[i] and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) at £4. 18s. 4d. per ann. in lands and rents[k]. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), they were valued at £6. 5s. 2d. per ann. but in the ministers' accompts they are rated jointly with lands in Rode, &c.[l] Part of the abbey lands were granted in 33 Hen. 8 (1541) to Anthony Stringer and John Williams[m]; and another part in 4 Eliz. (1561-2) to Lewis Grevill and Francis Gill[n]. Frideswide Pargiter, widow of Edward Pargiter, died 25 June 1556, seized of two messuages, two tofts, and 7½ virgates of land, parcel of the dissolved abbey of St. James, and Robert Pargiter was son and heir[o].

SEWARDSLEY PRIORY had lands and rents here, which, at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), were rated at 10s. 8d. per ann.[p] Richard Andrew, esq. died seised of them in 1558 under the description of two messuages, two gardens, two tofts, 20 acres of land, and 4 acres of meadow, held of sir John Fermor as of his manor of Shewsley or Sewardsley, by fealty and suit of court[q].

ST. ANDREW'S PRIORY at Northampton had two parts of the tithe of Robert de Armenters in "Herveleston," which were included in the confirmation charter of Henry 1st[r] between the years 1117 and 1128; and were again confirmed to the priory by St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln, under the description of two parts of the tithe of sir Richard de Heyford in "Herleston[s]." The official of the archdeacon of Northampton in 1313 commanded the dean of Haddon to repair personally to Harleston, and put the prior and convent of St. Andrew in possession of the portions of tithes arising in the demesne lands of Roger de Lumley and Ralph Bulmer in that parish, which had been wrongfully withheld from them[t]. The rector appealing from this decision, judgment in favor of the prior was re-pronounced the following year, and proclaimed in the church of Harleston in presence of Roger Lumley, Henry de Bray, and others[u]; and in 1356 the controversy was finally terminated, when the preceding judgments were confirmed, and a minute survey made of all the lands the tithes of which were due to the prior[v]. In the early taxations this portion of tithes was rated at 10s. per ann.; and in the valuation of the rectory in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, 20s. was deducted for the portion of the prior. After the dissolution these tithes appear to have been taken in kind, for in 34 Eliz. (1591), sir Christopher Hatton * died seised of a portion of the tithes of corn in Harleston[w], which passed to his nephew sir William Hatton, and are now, it is presumed, merged in the other property of the Andrew family.

HARLESTON PARK contains about 160 acres, and is well stocked with deer. Though small in extent, and from no point affording a range of prospect beyond its own circumscribed limits, it is eminently beautiful; and nature has seldom perhaps been more judiciously assisted by art, than in the improvements introduced by the present possessor under the superintendence of the Reptons. The new entrance from Northampton is by a rustic lodge, opening into highly embellished grounds, with a gardener's cottage and pheasantry; and the immediate approach to the house is over a bridge at the head of a fine sheet of water. The east and west fronts of the house have been elegantly modernized, and spacious detached offices erected, from designs by the Reptons.

THE SEAT of the Lovell family was taken down a few years since by the present Mr. Andrew.

THE VILLAGE is four miles west from Northampton, and partially situated on the turnpike road to Coventry through Hillmorton, from whence it diverges to the south west, and is scattered over a considerable space of ground. The occasional groups of farm-houses and cottages emerging from the deep woody lanes furnish a succession of the most delightful rural scenery. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'one hundred and seven houses and about one hundred and ten families[x].' By the census of 1801 it contained 101 houses and 437 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, only 94 houses and 563 inhabitants, being, if correct, a decrease of 7 houses and an increase of 126 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £102. 19s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2543. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £450. 2s. 7d. at 5s. 6d. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday following St. Luke.

Races. 'On the heath to the south of the town races were formerly ran. The corporation of Northampton, by deed bearing date 16 Jan. 1632, in consideration of the sum of two hundred pounds paid by William 'Lord Spencer, and other gentlemen of the county, obliged themselves to provide yearly a gilt silver cup and cover, 'of the value of £16. 13s. 4d. to be ridden for on Thursday in Easter Week yearly: with covenant, that upon 'notice given on the Friday in the race week that they will return the said money within the year following, then 'they shall not be tied, so are the words of the deed, to provide the said cup any longer[u].' These races maintained a degree of local celebrity for upwards of a century. In 1721-2 they continued three days; on the first day was run for a purse of 10 guineas; on the second day the town (or corporation) plate of £20.; and on the third day a purse of 10 guineas for galloways not exceeding 14 hands high[x]. In 1736 the stakes were raised to 30 guineas, given by the duke of Marlborough, on the first day; £20. given by the town (or corporation) of Northampton on the second day; and 50 guineas, called the gentlemen's purse, for hunters, on the third day[x]. The last advertisement of "Harleston Races" in the Northampton Mercury was in 1739, from which time they have been discontinued.

Harleston Statute for hiring of servants is annually held at Michaelmas, but the time of its commencement is not known.

Advowson. The church of "Herlestona," with its pertinencies, was included in the original endowment of Lenton priory near Nottingham by William Peverel the founder, and is recited and confirmed in king Edward the second's charter of exemplification[y]. '[z] In 1279 (7 Edw. 1) the advowson was claimed by William de Ferrers' (representative of Peverel), 'Hugh de Staunton and Clemencia his wife, but upon an assize of Darrein Presentment 'was adjudged to be the right of the convent. The practice of deciding legal claims by the sword, and of having champions for that purpose, was common in England in the 12th century. One of the latest instances on record, and perhaps the only one where a church was the object of contention, occurred in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), between Thomas son of Hugh de Staunton plaintiff, who, in support of his claim to this advowson, alledged that in the time of Hen. 3 his ancestor, William de Staunton, being seised of it in fee, presented one William de Grendon, who was admitted and instituted to the rectory; and the prior of Lenton, defendant, who rested his pretensions on the grant from William Peverel. Both parties agreed to submit the decision of their cause to single combat, and William Fitz-Thomas was appointed champion for the former, and William Fitz-John for the latter. Dugdale introduces a circumstantial detail of the proceedings on this occasion, by remarking that it is the most exact narrative which he had ever seen of "the formalities in arming of the combatants and other particular circumstances preparatory to this kind of Tryal." The combat did not however actually take place, for after the champions had been sworn at the bar according to ancient custom, and were ready to advance, the parties obtaining a licence of agreement, Staunton released and quit-claimed all right in the advowson for himself and his heirs to the prior and his successors for ever[a]. After the dissolution it formed part of an extensive grant in 6 Edw. 6 (1551-2) to Edward lord Clynton and Sage, in exchange for manors and lands conveyed to the crown, and in compensation for former grants which were rendered void by having been previously granted out to other persons[b]. Valentine Gregory presented in 1554; and William Gregory, of Harleston, gent. by will dated 7 Oct. 9 Jac. (1611), bequeathed this advowson, and lands in Harpole and Yelvertoft, to Joyce his eldest daughter, with remainder to Catherine his youngest daughter, and if they were disposed to sell the said advowson, the first offer was to be made to Valentine Morley, the testator's kinsman, or Theodore his son, they giving "as much as any other in "playne meaninge withoute fraude will give[c]." Richard Shortgrave married Joyce, daughter and heiress of William Gregory, and entered his pedigree in the visitation of 1619. Robert Shortgrave, their son and heir, was patron in 1655, but the patronage was transferred to the Andrew family before the close of the century.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[d] and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[e] it is rated at 16 marks (£10. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a yearly pension of 40s. to the prior of Lenton, and a portion of 10s. to the prior of St. Andrew's; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is valued at £24. per ann. deducting the above pension; the portion to the prior of St. Andrew's stated at 20s.; and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[f]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative in the gift of Robert Shortgrave, gent. worth £96. per ann. and that William Shortgrave the incumbent was resident[g]. The rector had an allotment under the inclosure act of 309 a. 3 p. in lieu of the glebe lands and of the tithes of the open fields and old inclosures; but it is now somewhat varied by the old parsonage near the church, and a few acres of adjoining land, having been recently exchanged with the lord of the manor for a house and land at the south west extremity of the village.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1570, but the latter part of the first volume is in a very mutilated state, and there is an hiatus in the burials from 1615 to 1710. Entries, however, within that period will be found in the Andrew pedigree, and the incumbents, on the authority of extracts from the register of this parish, in the Lansdown MSS. 773.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Andrew, stands between the mansion and the turnpike road, and consists of a tower containing six bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. Its architecture has nothing to engage the notice of the antiquary beyond the circumstance of the date of its erection being referrible with certainty, as already stated, to the incumbency of Richard de Hette between 1292 and 1325. No part of it is embattled, and most of the mouldings die into the wall. The north and south windows of both aisles have slightly ogeed arches on the exterior side and pointed arches inside, with tablets springing from corbels, and are divided by two trefoiled mullions, branching into three quatrefoils in the head. The windows on the north side the chancel are built up; the east window is modernised, and those on the south side are partially so, being square-headed on the outside, and having pointed arches inside, supported by slender circular columns with plain capitals. The tower is 16 ft. 10 in. long by 9 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave and aisles are 60 ft. 7 in. long, the nave 16 4 in. the north aisle 11 ft. 8 in. and the south aisle 8 ft. 6 in. wide; the chancel 37 ft. 6 in. long by 16 ft. 4 in.

wide. The nave and aisles are well paved with stone and neatly pewed. At the west end of the nave is a gallery. The interior retains its original uniform character; the nave is divided from each aisle by four lofty pointed arches resting on multangular pillars with plain capitals of a few simple mouldings. The archivolt mouldings are broad and bold, and the arches are connected by a series of dripstones on corbel heads. A tablet is continued along each aisle under the windows and over the doors. The chancel is entered under a low open arch. There is an ascent of three steps to the altar. Within the rails on the south side are three seats under trefoil-headed arches with pointed architraves, supported by plain pillars and capitals; and in the south east angle of the wall is a large projecting piscina under a trefoiled opening. Over the ends of the seats and the piscina are two large brackets on heads. Against the south wall is a capacious old font; on a shallow shaft between the base and the upper compartment are three rude heads.

The following inscriptions no longer remain, and are supplied from Bridges. 'On a tomb adjoining to the 'wall of the south ile:'

Hic jacet Elizabeth nuper uxor Johannis .... Johannis de Pele que obiit xxvi die mensis Octobris anno D'ni MCCC.... cujus anime propicietur Deus. Amen.

'In this church was the following inscription, pre- 'served in Belchier's collections:'

Hic jacet Elizabetha nuper uxor Johannis Dyve Armigeri filia Georgii Longvill Armigeri & Elizabethæ uxoris suæ unius filiarum & heredum Thomæ Baronis de Roche quæ obiit 19 die Dec. 1458.

BENEFACTIONS (vide p. 80). Bridges states that 'many years ago was given for the repairs of the church a 'portion of land generally let at 1s. or iij. l. per annum. Several sums of money have been also given by different 'persons at different times, amounting in the whole to about ccxl. l. with which sum land hath been purchased of 'the yearly value of xi. l. which is distributed at discretion of the minister, churchwardens, and overseers of 'the poor[1].' The lands so purchased are at Shuckburgh in Warwickshire, and at Kislingbury, and are let at the present time for nearly £50. per ann. In the abstract of charitable returns (vide p. 80), the clear produce is returned at £29. 19s. 3d. per ann. and is erroneously stated to arise "from stone dug from the waste land."

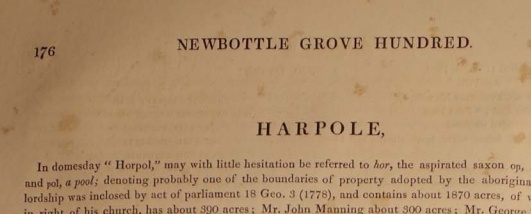
HARPOLE.



In domesday "Horpol," may with little hesitation be referred to hor, the aspirated saxon OP, a bound or limit, and pol, a pool; denoting probably one of the boundaries of property adopted by the aboriginal settlers*. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 18 Geo. 3 (1778), and contains about 1870 acres, of which the rector, in right of his church, has about 390 acres; Mr. John Manning about 300 acres; Mr. George Scriven, of Dunstaple in Bedfordshire, about 160 acres; and the residue is principally divided amongst resident freeholders, in estates varying from about 40 to 90 acres each. Its boundaries are formed by Harleston on the north and north east; Duston and Upton on the east; Kislingbury on the south, from which it is divided by the western branch of the river Nen; Heyford on the south west; Clasthorp, in the parishes of Flore and Brington, on the west; and Newbottle in the latter parish on the north west. The situation is flat, with the exception of a range of hills on the north. The soil is principally clay or marley loam, and is in nearly equal proportion of arable and pasture. Harpole wood formerly extended to 40 acres, but now retains only the name. No scarce plants have been observed in this lordship. The mill noticed in domesday is on the river Nen.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PEVEREL FEE †. This is one of the few instances in which the saxon possessor was permitted to hold his estate as sub-tenant to the norman grantee. Biscop, the saxon lord, had lands also in Pery (Pavelis), Bradden, Tiffield, and Heyford. Of these, William the conqueror bestowed Pery on the countess Judith[a]; Bradden, on David[a]; and Tiffield and Heyford, on the earl of Moreton[b]. At the domesday survey, Biscop held a small portion of Moulton under the countess Judith[c], but it is doubtful whether he had any prior interest in it. The whole of "Horpol," however, of the estimated value of 30s. yearly, was his freehold in the time of Edward the confessor, and held by him subordinately to William Peverel at the date of the above record, when it was rated at 40s. yearly. It consisted of two hides and a half; the arable land was six carucates, of which two were in demesne with seven servants, and 14 villeins with a priest, and five bordars had four and a half, making an excess of half a carucate. There were ten acres of meadow, and ten acres of wood[d]. The forfeiture of the Peverel estate gave rise to two distinct manors in this lordship, which will be separately treated.

THE SALCETO OR TANFIELD MANOR, was annexed to the honor of Peverel, and is still within the jurisdiction of the court leet of Duston. In the inquisition of escheated honors in the hands of the crown 13 Joh. (1211), Robert de Salceto answered for three parts of a knight's fee in Plumpton, Ykeley (Eakley in Buckinghamshire), and "Horepole" in Northamptonshire; and the fourth part in Saverton in Nottinghamshire, making one fee of the honor of Peverel of Nottingham[e]. His son and heir of both names left six daughters and co-heiresses, whose husbands, Peter de Goldington, Robert de Lou or Lupus (Wolfe), Alan de Rumely, Walter de Mortimer, Adam de Napton, and Simon de Thorp, paid relief for his lands, 20 Hen. 3[f] (1235-6); and about 25 Hen. 3 the same parties were certified to hold the fourth of a fee in "Horpol," and another fourth in Plumpton, which Beatrice, widow of Robert de Salceto, held of them in dower[g]. Each of these coheirs, it will be hereafter seen, had lands in Harpole; but the principal share appears to have been assigned to Simon de Thorp and Mary his wife, whose son Ralph de Thorp died 48 Hen. 3 (1263-4), seised (int. al.) of "Horpoll" manor and the advowson appendant thereto, leaving Ralph son and heir, aged 4½ years[h]. By an office taken after the death of Alice, widow of this Ralph, it was found that she had held in dower the manor and advowson of "Harpoll," with a capital messuage, dovehouse, and vineyard ("vinar[d]"), five virgates of land in demesne, ten virgates in villenage, a windmill, and free fishery, of the king in capite by scutage, and two suits yearly at Duston court; and that the heir, Simon de Thorp, son of Ralph by a former wife, was of full age, and had sold the said manor and advowson to Robert de Haustede and Margery his wife[i].

Amongst the Northamptonshire knights in the reign of Edw. 2. were sir Robert de Hausted, the purchaser of this manor, who bore for his arms, Gules, a chief chequy Or and Azure; sir Robert de Hausted, junior, had the addition of a bend Argent; and sir John de Hausted, of Denshanger, a bend Ermine[k]; both which bearings being undoubted marks of cadency, I have ventured to introduce sir John in the annexed pedigree as the younger son of the elder sir Robert. Margery, wife of sir Robert de Hausted, senior, survived her husband, and being jointly enfeoffed with him in this manor, continued to enjoy it till her death in 12 Edw. 3. (1338), when it came to her grand daughter Margery, wife of sir Nicholas Crophull, as next heir, as well as by virtue of an entail in 3 Edw. 3, whereby she settled it on her son Robert de Hausted for life, who died two years after; with remainder to the said Margery and sir Nicholas Crophull and their heirs[l].

Sir WILLIAM HAUSTED, of Denshanger, ob. s. p. 2 Hen. 4 (1400), Esc. 2 Hen. 4. n. 23.=ANNE, survived her husband.

In 38 Edw. 3 (1364), sir Nicholas Crophull made a settlement of the manor and advowson of "Horpull" and John St. Hilary's wood, on himself for life; remainder to Simon Warde* and Elizabeth his (second) wife in tail male, with remainder to Matilda, daughter of the said Simon, and the heirs male of her body[m]. In 47 Edw. 3 (1373), Simon Ward obtained a grant of free warren in his manor of "Horpole."[n] Elizabeth, widow of Simon Ward, died in 16 Ric. 2 (1292-3), and was succeeded in this estate by her grandson William son of Theobald Ward, aged eight years[o]; who dying in his infancy, it reverted to

Robert Thame, as son and heir of the above Matilda Ward†, and from him in 8 Hen. 5, passed to his brother and heir Thomas Thame[p]. 'In the thirty-eight of Hen. VI. this Thomas Thame, or his successor, of Axene in the 'county of Southampton, esq.; released to Thomas and Elizabeth Pigge and their heirs, all his right in one capital 'messuage, one toft, one hundred acres of arable land, eight acres of meadow, forty acres of pasture, and forty 'acres of wood in Harpole and Benefeld, and in other lands and messuages in the counties of Huntingdon, Leicester, 'and Lincoln.'

The Tanfields, whose pedigree will be introduced under GAYTON, were the next possessors. By deed 17 Sept. 1 Ric. 3 (1483), Robert Tanfield, son and heir of Robert Tanfield late of Gayton, esq. enfeoffed John duke of Norfolk and others, in the manor and advowson of "Horpole," to the use of his son Robert Tanfield and Elizabeth his wife, and their heirs; from whom it lineally descended to Francis Tanfield, esq. afterwards knighted, who in 1597 sold his estate here in parcels to Richard Harris, John Cowley, Gregory and Richard Maryott, William Britten, Robert Gardiner, Richard Cooke alias Tyler, Richard Wright, and Thomas Scrogson, all of Harpole, yeomen; between whom, I apprehend, this manor was divided in equal shares, and the dispersed members have never since been united. A manorial court was held about 20 years since by the joint lords.

The other purparties of the Salceto estate were not of sufficient importance to require more than a brief notice. Peter de Goldington died 37 Hen. 3, seised of a carucate of land in Harpole[q]. Alan de Romeney died 54 Hen. 3, seised of six virgates of land in Harpole[r]. Adam de Napton gave his share to his daughter Joan in marriage with Roger Lyons[s]. Mortimer does not occur again; but all the others are traced subsequently, in the inquisition of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295), when William de Noers and Milo Hastings (coheirs of Goldington) Robert Romeney, John de la Lou of Essene (Ashton), Richard de Lyons (representative of Napton), and Simon de Thorp, were returned to hold a fee in Harpole of the king in capite[t].

PEVEREL FEE. HONOR OF BELVOIR. ST. HILARY OR VAUX MANOR. Part of this lordship, on escheating to the crown from Peverel, was given to William de Albini‡.

In that division of the Testa de Nevill which was compiled about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Peter de Horepol was certified to hold one fee in "Horepol" of the fees which were William de Albini's of the honor of Bearuver[u] (Belvoir), the head of his barony. Peter de Horpol, in attestations to deeds, is sometimes called Peter de Scynteler or St. Hilary de Horpol; and in the inquisition of knights' fees, 24 Edw. 1 (1295), the heirs of Richard de St. Hilary were found to hold this estate, then denominated half a fee, of Robert de Roos‡ and his wife (the heiress of Albini[v]). In 2 Edw. 2 (1308-9), Thomas de St. Hilary paid five marks to the king for the restoration of certain lands in "Horpol," held of the king in capite, which he had purchased in the time of Edw. 1, without licence, and which had in consequence been seized into the king's hands[x]. In 6 Edw. 3 (1332), Edmund de Pinkeney§ died in possession of the manor of Harpole, of the feoffment of Thomas St. Hilary for life[y]. John de St. Clere, or St. Hilary, in 37 Edw. 3 (1363), is the last of the family who occurs here; and an hiatus of nearly a century ensues till 2 Edw. 4 (1462), when, on the confiscation of the estates of

Sir William Vaux‖, his manor of Harpole was (int. al.) bestowed by the king on Ralph Hastings, esquire, of his body, and his heirs[a]. Nicholas lord Vaux, son of sir William, obtained a reversal of his father's attainder, and this manor was transmitted, with the other family possessions, down to Edwarth fourth and last lord Vaux, by whose trustees it was conveyed to

Francis Gregory, gent. who died 9 Oct. 1610, seised of Vaux's manor in Harpole, and Harpole wood, containing 40 acres, purchased of sir Francis Tanfield, leaving Francis Gregory his son and heir, aged 15 years[b]. Within a few years, he disposed of his estate here on severalties, and in 1620 levied a fine of Vaux's manor to the use of the respective purchasers in fee, viz. a sixth part to William Harris, son and heir of Thomas Harris, yeoman; a sixth part to John Harris, third son of the said Thomas Harris; a sixth part to Thomas Harris, youngest son of the said Thomas Harris; a sixth part to the rev. Benjamin Tomkins, clerk, and Nicholas Cory, yeoman; a sixth part to John Leeke, husbandman, and John Frost, yeoman; and a sixth part to John Mutton, Richard Gardiner, Thomas Chater, and Thomas Cory, yeoman; all of Harpole. The manor still continues distributed in shares, and no court has been held within memory. The paramount service of the tenants of this manor was due to the hundred court of Newbottle Grove, which was formerly held at Kislingbury.

Lenton Priory, near Nottingham, had two parts of the tithe of the demesne lands of Norman de Mont Faltrel in Chilwell in Nottinghamshire. "Asebech" (qu. Haselbech?) and "Horpol[b]." Norman, however, resumed his grant of the Harpole tithes, and transferred them to

St. Alban's Abbey, with the addition of two parts of his tithes in "Piri" (Plumpton Pery), and a virgate of land[c]. '[d] Alard de Seynteler, in the reign of Henry III. gave to the Convent of S. Alban two parts both of the great 'and small tithes of his Manors of Harpol and Lobenham (in Leicestershire), and half a virgate of arable land in 'Horpol. To this deed Peter, the son of Bartholomew de Horpol, is a witness. 'In 1347, Roger de Wodehouse, 'Rector of Harpole, disputed the Convent's right; and the matter being referred to arbitrators, it was determined 'that all future Rectors should receive the said tithes in kind, paying the Convent an annual pension of xxxs. in 'lieu thereof[e]. In the thirty-fifth of Edw. III. the Convent recovered the said pension by an action brought against 'John de Irthlyngburgh, at that time Rector of the parish. [f]In 1428 the dispute was renewed by William Chyselden, 'incumbent; and the year following sentence was given by William Lyndewode, official to the archbishop of Can-'terbury, that restitution should be made to the Convent of their right to the said two parts of great and small 'tythes, which had been subtracted by the said William Chyselden, and his predecessors, for twenty-eight years last 'past. From this sentence he appealed to the Pope, but shortly after dropping his appeal, acknowledged it to be 'equitable and just.' In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. III.), the temporalities of the abbey in Harpole were rated at 3s. per ann.[b] but are omitted in the subsequent ones. The portion of tithes is valued in the same taxation at £1. 16s. 8d. per ann.[i]; in that of 1291 (20 Edw. I.), at £1. 13s. 4d. per ann.[k]; and in the valuation of the rectory in 1535 (26 Hen. 8), £2 is deducted for a yearly pension paid to the abbot and convent of St. Alban's[l].

St. James's Abbey had 20 acres of land in "Horpol," near the wood of Adelard de Horpol, of the gift of Adelin, daughter of Norman de Mont Faltrel in 1158, on condition of her being received into the convent as a sister, and buried there[m]. Robert de la Saucei confirmed the grant from his mother Adelin; and Robert de Salceto, son of Robert de la Saucei, gave to the abbey a culture in Harpol, called the wood close, with his body to be buried; which donation was contested between Peter de Goldington and his other coheirs, and Walter, abbot of St. James, from 1231 to 1237, but was at length amicably settled by the plaintiffs relinquishing their right and adding two adjacent cultures[n]. In the taxation of 1254[o] and 1291[p] the abbey had 3s. yearly rent in Harpole.

Chacombe Priory lands. In 20 Edw. 3 (1346), John de Lyons gave to the prior and convent of Chacombe, the lands in Harpole and Plumpton (Pery), which he inherited from Adam de Napton[q]. A place near the mill is traditionally called Balaam's abbey, and was probably the grange or cell of the monks of Chacombe.

George Tresham and Edward Twyncho had a grant in 37 Hen. 8 (1545) of lands and tenements in Harpole, parcel of the late dissolved priory of Chacombe[r]; and in 1567 Nicholas Marryatt died seised of them, leaving Erasmus Marryatt his son and heir, aged 27 years[s].

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, in plea to a quo warranto 3 Edw. 3 (1329), claimed view of frank pledge twice a year at Bradden, of all his tenants there; and at Welford, Buckby, Flore, and "Horpol[t]."

The Manor Houses have long since been destroyed. The site of Vaux's is in the Moat close, near the church-yard; and of Tanfield's in the Hall close; both which are still marked by irregularity of surface.

The Village stands between three and four miles from Northampton, a short distance north of the turnpike road to Daventry. In the time of Bridges, it contained about 'sixty houses.' By the census of 1801 it consisted of 112 houses and 545 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 117 houses and 571 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £143. 0s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3345. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £439. 6s. 6½d. at 5s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday following All Saints.

The Advowson continued appendant to the manor held of the honor of Peverel, till the beginning of the seventeenth century; when, after several mesne conveyances, it was purchased in 1723 of the rev. Edward Scriven, by the hon. Thomas Wentworth, afterwards marquis of Rockingham*, and is now vested, with the other Rock-ingham estates, in William Wentworth 4th earl Fitzwilliam[u] †.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. It is rated at 12 marks (£8) per ann. deducting £1. 16s. 8d. for the portion of the abbot of St. Alban's, in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[v]; and the same in that of 1291

(20 Edw. 1), except the portion which is there stated at £1. 13s. 4d.[x] In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is valued at £21. 3s. 4d. per ann. deducting 10s. in synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and 40s. for the pension to the abbot of St. Alban's[y]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £92 per ann.; and that Benjamin Tomkins, the patron, was also rector, and resided on his cure[z].

The rectory now consists of 3 a. 3 p. of old inclosure; 383 a. 2 r. 16 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of glebe lands, and of the tithes and moduses of the open fields and old inclosure belonging to proprietors who had sufficient land for their discharge; and a rate tithe of 19s. 6d. per ann. for the tithes of homesteads, &c. not exonerated under the act.

The parsonage-house adjoins the west end of the church-yard, and is a genteel residence erected by the present incumbent.

The Registers commence 13 Oct. 1538, and are throughout in excellent preservation.

John Huntingdon, A. M. rector of Whiston, was presented by sir Thomas Samwell, bart. and sir Samuel Clerke, and inst. 20 May 1682. He retained both benefices till his death in 1697, when

Edward Scriven, of St. John's coll. Camb. A. B. was inst. Nov. 1697, on the presentation of Thomas Catesby, esq. He resigned in favor of

Thomas Scriven, of Sidney Sussex coll. Camb. A. M. vicar of Irchester, who was presented by Henry Paget, esq. and inst. Nov. 1704. He relinquished Irchester on obtaining this rectory, and in 1707 obtained the vicarage of Slipton, which he continued to hold with this benefice. On his decase,

Edward Scriven was again inst. 24 May 1737, on the presentation of Mary Cory, widow, p. h. v.; and resigned the rectory of Twywell, which he had held from 1707. He died 15 Feb. and was buried here 18 Feb. 1739, aged 70, when

George Tymms, LL. B. already noticed under Dallington, resigned the vicarage of Higham Ferrars, and was inst. 24 May 1740, on the presentation of Thomas earl of Malton, afterwards marquis of Rockingham. On his cession, Francis Hall, of St. John's coll. Camb. A. M. was presented by Charles 2d and last marquis of Rockingham, and inst. 20 Sept. 1759.

George Pasley Malim. On his cession,

George Tymms, A. M. son of the preceding incumbent, and who has also been noticed under Dallington, was presented by the same noble patron, and inst. 23 Apr. 1768. His death introduced a second time

George Pasley Malim, A. M. who was inst. 27 Feb. 1783, on the presentation of William Wentworth earl Fitzwilliam. He obtained the vicarages of Higham Ferrars and of Irthlingborough in 1762, and continued to hold them with this rectory. He died 14 Dec. 1802, and was buried at Higham Ferrars. The present incumbent,

The hon. Thomas Lawrence Dundas, of Trinity coll. Camb. A. M. fifth son of Thomas 1st lord Dundas, was presented by the same noble patron, and inst. 10 Mar. 1803. He is also rector of Keystone in Huntingdonshire.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to All Saints, stands near the centre of the village, and consists of a coped tower, with small pinnacles, containing five bells, nave, north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, and chancel. Without any pretensions to architectural interest, it exhibits very different styles in detached portions. The inner door of the porch is evidently the original entrance of the norman structure; the arch is semicircular, with a broad archivolt moulding, and springs from an ornamented impost, supported on each side by a circular column, with foliated capital slightly relieved. The tower is probably of the early part of the 13th century. At the west end are three conjoined lancet arches resting on slender pilasters, intended for windows, but the centre is the only one now lighted. The south aisle and chancel are of later date and better masonry. The windows, except the east chancel one, are square headed, having dripstones terminating in corbel heads. The north front is built of rubble stone, and the two chapel windows are nearly blocked up, leaving only a small square aperture in each. The interior is indifferently paved, and principally seated with the old parallel ranges of low benches in use before the reformation. The font, of which an etching is given, is elevated on a low step attached to one of the pillars on the south side of the nave. It is of the norman era; a large plain cylinder carved with grotesque animals in front, and small rows of rude escallops as the sides approach the pillar. The tower is 12 ft. 8 in. long, by 8 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave and aisles 46 ft. 7 in. long; the nave 21 ft. 4 in.; the north aisle 11 ft. 6 in.; and the south aisle 11 ft. 4 in. wide; the chancel 32 ft. 2 in. long, by 15 ft. wide; and the north chapel 17 ft. 9 in. long, by 13 ft. 9 in. wide. The nave is divided from the north aisle by three spacious pointed arches on multangular pillars with plain capitals; and from the south aisle by similar pillars, supporting four arches of smaller dimensions. At the east end of the south aisle is a piscina. The entrance from the nave to the chancel is through a wooden screen under a pointed arch, closed up, which springs from two norman semi-columns, with rudely voluted capitals. On the south side, within the altar rails, is a piscina. The north chapel is separated from the aisle by a closed arch, and from the chancel by a widely pointed open one. In the north wall are two low obtuse monumental arches, resting on, and connected by, short clustered pillars. In the south-east angle of the chapel is a small piscina.

BENEFACTIONS (vide p. 80). In the church is a "Memorandum dated 15 Aug. 1785," recording, that whereas £95, part of charity money, the interest of which has been divided amongst the poor; £25, bequeathed by Thomas Chater, bachelor; and £5, bequeathed by Benjamin Tomkins, late rector: the interest of which £25 and £5 has been applied to provide coats for five of the oldest poor men or women of this parish of Harpole every second year: and whereas the said three sums, amounting to £125, have been expended in the purchase of a house in Harpole for a workhouse for paupers; this doth certify, that the inhabitants of Harpole have agreed to keep the said premises in repair, and insured from loss by fire, as security for the principal sums, and to raise the yearly interest on the said sums by levy, to be given to the poor and provide the coats as usual, to answer the intents and purposes of the donors.

Smith's bequest for bread to the poor on the Sundays following the four quarter-days, consisted of two pieces of meadow ground; in lieu of which 3 a. 2 r. 26 p. were awarded under the inclosure act, and now let for £6. 6s. per ann.

The commissioners of inclosure allotted 20 a. in trust for the poor, the rent to be distributed annually on the 24th Dec. in fuel, meat, corn, apparel, or money, at the discretion of the rector, churchwardens, and overseers; so that no part thereof shall be applied in aid of the poor's rates. The present rent of the land is £39 per ann.

School. The commissioners also allotted 26 a. 3 r. 5 p. called the town land, upon trust, for such schoolmaster for the time being, who shall be chosen by the rector, churchwardens, and overseers, to occupy or receive the rents for his maintenance, so long as he shall be of honest and good behaviour, and shall well and faithfully teach the children which shall be sent to him of persons "legally settled in, and inhabitants of, the parish of "Harpole, reading, writing, and casting of accompts, without taking any other reward for the same." A schoolroom is provided by the parish; but there is no school-house.

Sir Richard Lane, lord keeper to king Charles 1st, was born here, and baptized 12 Nov. 1584[a]. He was son of Richard Lane, of Courteenhall, by Elizabeth, daughter of Clement Vincent, a collateral descendant of the Vincents of Barnack, who fixed his residence at this village on his marriage with Anne, daughter of Francis Tanfield, esq. Sir Richard was educated for the bar in the Middle Temple, and in 1615 was chosen counsel for, or deputy recorder of, the town of Northampton[b]; probably his first professional appointment. A more flattering testimony could scarcely have been paid to his legal talents, than the selection of him by the earl of Strafford to conduct his defence on his memorable impeachment by the house of commons in 1640-1. He was soon after nominated attorney to the prince Charles, and retired to the king at Oxford, where he was knighted 4 Jan.; appointed chief baron of the exchequer 23 Jan.; and created D. C. L. 31 Jan. 1643-4. He was one of the royal commissioners at the treaty of Uxbridge; and on the death of Sir Edward Littleton had the great seal delivered to him 39 Aug. 1645, with the title of lord keeper. In the following year he was one of the principal council for the defence of Oxford, during its memorable siege, and was the first in rotation, on the king's side, who signed the articles for surrendering that important garrison to the parliament. He followed the fortunes of the second Charles in his exile, nominally retaining his high office, till his death, which happened in 1650, or the beginning of the year following; for in Apr. 1651 a commission issued to lady Margaret, his widow, to administer to the goods, chattels, and debts of sir Richard Lane, late of Kingsthorp in Northamptonshire, who died in France. She survived till 1669, and was buried at Kingsthorp (p. 42). It is said by Peck, in his Desiderata Curiosa, that on sir Richard leaving London in 1640, he entrusted his chamber in the Temple, with his goods, and an excellent library, to his intimate friend Bulstrode Whitlock, who, on their being subsequently required of him, had the baseness to withhold them, denying even that any intimacy had ever subsisted between them.

Sir Richard published "Reports in the Court of Exchequer;" beginning in the third and ending in the ninth of k. James I. Lond. 1657. fol. His arms, as blazoned on one of the windows of Lincoln's Inn, were, Gules, a lion passant gardant, between three saltires Or.

HEYFORD,

In domesday "Haiford" and "Heiford," is evidently compounded of the saxon hæga, normanised into Haia, a hedge or fenced inclosure, and ford, a ford. In comprises the two villages of Nether, Lower, Great, or Church Heyford, and Upper, Over, or Little Heyford, as they are indifferently called in ancient records; and forms, perhaps, one of the most complicated parishes in the kingdom. Nether Heyford, though a parish of itself, does not include the whole, nor even the largest portion of the lordship of that name; for the common fields prior to the inclosure in 1750, consisted of 40 yard lands, of which 22¼ paid tithes, and contributed to the repair of Stowe church; 12¾ to Heyford church; and 5 to Bugbrook church: and the houses belonging to the several parishes are promiscuously mingled together in the village, without any regularly defined boundaries. Upper Heyford belongs in unequal proportions to the parishes of Nether Heyford, Flore, and Bugbrook; and it is not a little remarkable, that the parish from which it is designated has the least share. [c]The out parishioners in both Heyfords pay levies to their respective proper parishes of Stowe, Bugbrook, and Flore; and yet they all equally, jointly, and proportionably contribute to all the general levies of Heyford church and parish, and enjoy likewise by ancient claim and usage, household male and female seats in the parish church of Heyford, to which they usually resort as their chapel of ease. Two churchwardens are annually chosen for Heyford parish, but the churchwardens of Stowe, for their assistance, and for special purposes, elect a sidesman out of the Stowe parishioners in Nether Heyford. Stowe is in the deanry of Daventry, but the parishioners living in Nether Heyford are reputed, with their co-habitants in Bugbrook and Heyford parishes, to be in the deanry of West Haddon[c]. The primary causes of these apparently capricious ecclesiastical divisions, admit of a probable elucidation from the fees of which Heyford was composed in domesday. The family of Heyford, grantees of William Keynes, the mesne lord of the bishop of Baieux's fee, founded the parish of Heyford, as is evident from the patronage being appendant to that manor; the lands of the fee of Gilbert Gaunt were added to the adjoining parish of Stowe, the head of his property in this county; those lands of the Moreton fee which were members of the soke of Bugbrook, may naturally be presumed to have been annexed to that parish; whilst those which appear to have been obtained by, and subsequently held under Keynes, were consigned to the parish of Flore. In their civil relations to each other, the two Heyfords are now perfectly distinct and independent; being separately assessed to the land tax, and maintaining their own poor: but their respective rights were not very clearly defined in early times, for in 28 Edw. 3 (1354), William de Pateshull and the townsmen of Nether Heyford, brought an action in the court of exchequer against sir John de Lyons, sir Nicholas de Burnaby, and others, collectors of a triennial tenth and fifteenth of the moveables and chattels of the laity, charging them with over taxing the men of Nether Heyford in order to under tax and ease the men of Upper Heyford[a]. The whole assessment amounted to 73*s.* of which 48*s.* were levied on Nether Heyford, and only 25*s.* on Upper Heyford. The collectors defended their assessment, and both parties put themselves on their country[b], but the result is not recorded.

NETHER HEYFORD

Was inclosed by act of parliament 23 Geo. 2 (1749). The lordship contains about 1130 acres, of which the rev. J. Lloyd Crawley, lord of the manor, has about 30 acres, and as rector, in right of his church, about 50 acres; William Rose Rose, esq. of Chapel Brampton, about 180 acres; the corporation of the sons of the clergy about 100 acres; and Mr. Edward Judkins nearly 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by the river Nen, which divides it from Upper Heyford; on the east by Bugbrook, from which it is partly separated by Horestone brook, which rises from springs in Farthingston, Cold Higham, and Pateshull lordships, and falls into the river Nen; on the south by Stowe, in Fawsley hundred; on the west by Wedon, in Fawsley hundred; and north-west by the river Nen, which divides it from Flore. The soil is principally a good grey loam, with a proportion of strong clay and red land. More than half the lordship is meadow and pasture. Morton notices Heyford park as one of the "prime pieces of the Uplands[c]." Amongst the scarce plants found here are Agrimonia Eupatoria, Agrimony; Dipsacus sylvestris, wild Teasle; Geranium dissectum, jagged Cranesbill; Rosa arvensis, field Rose; Picris echioides, prickly Ox-tongue. There is a brick-kiln towards Stowe field. The lordship furnishes good white gravel. It is well supplied with springs, one of which, called Holywell, is medicinal.

Manorial History. Baieux Fee*. Barony of Keynes†. The principal part of "Heiford," in the time of Edward the confessor, was the joint freehold of Biscop‡ and Ailet, and rated at 10*s.* yearly. At the domesday survey, it was doubled in value, and was held by William, of the fee of the bishop of Baieux, for two hides and a virgate and a half. The arable land was four caracates; of which two were in demesne with two servants, and seven villeins and two bordars had another, leaving the fourth waste or unaccounted for. There were ten acres of meadow[d].

Moreton Fee§. Barony of Keynes†. At the same survey Ralph held of the earl of Moreton a virgate and two parts of a virgate in "Heiford" within the soke or jurisdiction of the manor of Bugbrook. The arable land was one caracate in his own occupation, with one acre of meadow. In the time of Edward the confessor it belonged to Ulstan, and was rated at 5*s.* yearly, but was doubled at the survey[h].

Another Ralph held of the earl the same quantity of land in "Haiford" of the soke of Bugbrook. The arable land was one caracate cultivated by a villein with one plough and a half. There were three acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 5*s.* yearly, but was then doubled in value[i].

Heyford or Lumley Manor. William, the domesday sub-tenant of the bishop of Baieux, may safely be identified with William Keynes; and either he or his immediate successor was enfeoffed also with the Moreton fee, to which it is probable the paramountship of the Baieux fee was annexed on the confiscation of the bishop's possessions; for in the hydarium of Hen. 2 there were four hides in "Heyford," of the fee of Moreton*; an increase from the measurement in domesday, which can scarcely be accounted for on any other supposition.

Heyford gave a local name to the mediate lords under the seignory of Keynes of Dodford; but their manor here having been uniformly associated in all records with Harleston, has been anticipated in the manorial history of that place, where the pedigrees of the Heyfords, and their ultimate representatives, Lumley, Roseles, and Bulmer will be found; and by which it will be seen that the Lumleys enjoyed two third shares of the property; one by inheritance, and another by gift from Roseles. In 2 Hen. 5 (1414), John Lumley died seised of 2 messuages, 8 virgates of land, and 15 acres of meadow, with the service of John Mauntel for a messuage and a virgate of land in Heyford, held of John Cressy, as of the manor of Dodford; and Elizabeth was daughter and heiress, aged 2 years[k]. This inquisition certainly refers to a portion only of the family estates; the remainder might have been in jointure; and the whole probably came eventually to the above Elizabeth Lumley, who is supposed by Bridges[m] to have been 'the heir of .... Heyford, lord of Heyford,' who, according to Vincent's visitation in 1619, married John Mauntell, esq.

The Mauntells had an interest in Rode as early as the reign of Hen. 2.; where, and at Hartwell, &c. insulated individuals are continually emerging at detached periods; but no regular descent can be verified prior to this

John Mauntel, who in 25 Hen. 6 (1446-7) levied a fine of the manor, and of 35 messuages, &c. in Heyford in fee simple[n]. Both Vincent and Bridges confound him with his grandson of the same names, who died in 18 Hen. 7 (1503), seised of Nether Heyford manor, held of Anthony Catesby, lord of the Bulmer manor (an erroneous finding); Over Heyford manor, held of Thomas Stafford, esq. (lord of Dodford); the manors of Norton, by Daventry and Farthinghoe; and lands in Rode and other villages, leaving Walter Mauntell his son and heir[o], afterwards knighted; whose son and heir, John Mauntell, esq. in 1541, sallying forth in company with his brother-in-law, lord Dacre, and others, on a nocturnal frolic to chace the deer in sir Nicholas Pelham's park in Sussex, encountered three men; one of whom being mortally wounded in the affray, he and his associates were convicted of murder, executed, and their estates escheated to the crown[p]. To complete the irretrievable ruin of the house, his son Walter Mauntell engaged in the Kentish insurrection to oppose the marriage of queen Mary, headed by sir Thomas Wyatt, and being taken prisoner with him, was sent to the Tower, and soon after executed in Kent and attainted[q]. This manor was saved from the general wreck of the family fortune, by having been in settlement from John Mauntell to Anne his wife; who, with Richard Johnson, gent. her second husband, and Francis Morgan, serjeant at law, lessee for years, in 2 and 3 Phil. and Mar. (1555-6), levied a fine of the three manors of Heyford, Over Heyford, and Nether Heyford, and the advowson, or rather two thirds of the advowson, of Nether Heyford, to the use of sir Richard Sackville and his heirs[r].

Francis Morgan, esq. serjeant-at-law, who was lessee when the fine was levied to Sackville, soon after obtained the fee simple of the Mauntel estates in Heyford. He is stated in Dugdale's Warwickshire visitation to have been a native of Kingsthorp; and the supposition is corroborated by his having borne the same coat as the Morgans of that place, with whose pedigree I have therefore ventured conjecturally to connect him. Bridges says, "Judge 'Morgan in 1553 (1553-4) pronounced sentence of death upon Lady Jane Grey; soon after which he is said to 'have gone mad, crying out in his fits, "take away the lady Jane from me;" and in this distraction he ended his 'life.' But the judge on whom that melancholy office devolved, was sir Richard Morgan, lord chief justice of the common pleas, and not this Francis Morgan, who was not elevated to the bench till 23 Jan. 2 and 3 Phil. and Mar. (1557-8), when he was constituted one of the justices of the king's bench[t], and died in August following, seised of the manors in Heyford, as recited in the aforesaid fine, a moiety of Newbold manor, and lands in Claschorp, Flore, Duston, and Northampton[u]. From him these estates descended, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree, to Thomas Morgan, esq. usually described of Weston sub Wetheley in Warwickshire, whose daughter and heiress married

Sir John Preston, of Furness in Lancashire, bart.[x] He died s. p. and was succeeded in his title and estates by his brother sir Thomas Preston, bart.; who in May 1685 settled the manors of Heyford, Nether Heyford, Over Heyford, Clasthorp, alias Clackesthorpe, and Newbold, and the whole of his estates in this county, on Mary his eldest daughter and coheiress, in marriage with

William lord Herbert, son and heir of William earl of Powis. In March 1686-7, the earl was created marquis of Powis and viscount Montgomery. He was zealously attached to James 2, who selected him to attend the queen into France; and on his joining them after abdicating the throne, advanced him to the dignities of duke of Powis and marquis of Montgomery. He was outlawed for remaining abroad in the service of the deposed monarch, and died at the court of St. Germain's in 1696. Two remarkable errors, one in law, the other in fact, being detected in his outlawry after a lapse of 30 years, a mandamus was granted, and it was accordingly reversed by the court of king's bench in April 1722; by which reversal his only son, the above William lord Herbert, then styled viscount Montgomery, was restored to the marquisate, and all the other honors to which his father was entitled prior to the abdication of James 2; but the dukedom and second marquisate were never legally recognised in England, though generally adopted by courtesy. William, 3d marquis or duke of Powis, only surviving son of the preceding, died

(HERBERT) EARL OF POWIS, ext. 1801. CLIVE NOW EARL OF POWIS.

The trustees under the marquis's will were empowered to sell all or any part of the Northamptonshire estates, towards the liquidation of his debts, and raising a fund for working his lead mines; and in November 1758, with the approbation of the earl of Powis, and under the authority of an act of parliament 25 Geo. 2 (1751-2), confirming the authority of the trustees, the whole, comprising the manors of Heyford, Clasthorp, and Newbold, with about 3000 acres of land, were disposed of in lots by public auction, and produced the sum of £65,424. The three manors of Heyford, Nether Heyford, and Upper Heyford, as severally distinguished in the Morgan inquisitions, and the marriage-settlement of 1685, but simply styled the manor of Heyford in the present conveyance, were, together with the manor-house in "Lower Heyford," about 340 acres in both Heyfords, and Dodford woods, containing nearly 190 acres, purchased by

John Devall, of Mary-le-bone, in the county of Middlesex, gent.; who, by will, devising his Northamptonshire property to his wife Anne Devall, and his son John Devall, in trust to sell for specific purposes, it was brought to auction in 1795, when the manor of Heyford, the manor-house, and 30 acres of contiguous land, were bought by BULMER MANOR. This manor, to which one-third of the advowson was attached, originated in the marriage of Theophania, 2d daughter and coheiress of Hugh de Morewick, with sir John de Bulmer; and its descent is incorporated with that of HARLESTON down to sir Robert or Ralph Bulmer, in the time of Henry 6.

Humphrey Catesby, of WHISTON, esq. afterwards knighted, son and heir of sir John Catesby, deceased, in 12 Hen. 7 (1496) demised (int. al.) this manor for life to Grace de Grey, widow of William de Grey of Merton (in Norfolk), esq.; whom he afterwards married, and who, in 5 Hen. 8 (1513), in consideration of a rent charge, released it to Anthony Catesby, esq. son and heir of the said Humphrey. In July 1577 Thomas Catesby, esq. sold the manor of "Heiford," with its pertinencies in Nether Heiford and Upper Heiford, "or any of them;" and the third part of the advowson of Nether Heyford, for £566. 13s. 4d. to his son-in-law

Christopher Yelverton, of EASTON MAUDUIT, esq. afterwards knighted, and one of the justices of the king's bench, who died 31 Oct. 1612, seised (int. al.) of the manor of Heyford, and third part of the advowson of Nether Heyford, held of the manor of Dodford in free socage; leaving Henry Yelverton his son and heir, afterwards knighted, and one of the justices of the common pleas, by whom the manor, reserving the advowson, was in May 1613 conveyed to

Thomas Thornton, of Newnham, esq.; John Barton, of Escott, gent.; and William Chymney, of East Dereham in Norfolk, yeoman, for £500 paid, and £1873. 6s. 8d. to be paid by instalments[y].

GAUNT FEE*. Sasgar, at the domesday survey, held of Gilbert de Gaunt, an hide and a virgate and a half in "Haiforde." The arable land was two carucates: half a carucate was in demesne: and three villeins with a bordar had one caruca te. There were four acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 10s. yearly in the time of Edward the confessor, but was then doubled in value[e].

Pateshull Manor was partly held immediately of this fee, and partly, I suspect, intermediately, from Chanceux of Upton. In 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6) *sir Simon de Pateshull died seised (int. al.) of a capital messuage, with dove-house, vineyard (vinar.), and garden, and three virgates and a half of land in Heyford, held of Hugh Chanceux (of Upton); and two virgates of land, held of Nicholas Segrave (lord of Stowe)[a]. The male line of this baronial family became extinct in 33 Edw. 3 (1359)[b]; and in the following year a precept was issued to the escheators in the county of Northampton, and within the liberty of Holderness in the county of York, to take security from

Sir Robert de Tudenham and Katherine his wife, (third) sister and coheiress of sir William de Pateshull, deceased, for reasonable relief of their purparty, comprising the manor of Heyford, with pertinencies, lands, and tenements in Bugbrook, Flore, and Farthingstone, amounting to £14 per ann.; lands and tenements in Grimscote, (Cold) Higham, and Carsecoell, (qu. Carswell in Greens Norton?) amounting to 100s. per ann.; lands and tenements in Cold Ashby and West Haddon, amounting to 62s. 6d. per ann.; and lands and tenements in "Astamvyk," in the liberty of Holderness, amounting to £12. 2s. 6d. per ann.[c] Their grandson sir Robert de Tudenham died seised of the manor of Nether Heyford, called Pateshull's manors and lands in the villages before recited[d], leaving a son of the same names who probably alienated them, as they are not included in the inheritance of his sister and heiress Margaret Bedingfield.

In 1 Hen. 8 (1509) Richard Osborn, esq. of Whitfield, died seised (int. al.) of the manor of Heyford, held of lord Latimer (of Stowe) by suit at court only[e]. In the inquisition after the death of his son Thomas Osborn, esq. in 21 Hen 8 (1529-30), it is styled the manor of "Heyford Magna and Heyford Parva," held of lord Latimer by 4d. rent[f]; and being omitted in the succeeding inquisition[g], it may be presumed to have been previously alienated, and can be traced no further as a manor; but is, I apprehend, the same estate, in whole or in part, which John Brayne died possessed of in 1606, under the description of a capital messuage and four virgates of land, &c. in Heyford, held of the manor of Kislingbury, by fealty and suit of court[g]. The Newbottle Grove hundred court, appertinent to the manor of Upton, was formerly held at Kislingbury, which was also one of the demesne manors of Gilbert de Gaunt: the above return of tenure is applicable, therefore, either to the paramouncy of the hundred court, the ancient lords of Upton, or the representatives of Gaunt.

No manorial court has been held in either of the Heyfords for many years past; nor has the hundred court at Kislingbury been kept lately; but the tenants of the Dodford court leet in the Heyfords still continue to do suit and service.

St. James's Abbey, near Northampton, had the mill in Heyford which belonged to Bugbrook, and a virgate of land called Rocheland, of the gift of Ranulph earl of Chester, and confirmed by Richard, son of Hugh de Heiford, in the reign of Hen. 3.[h] In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. I), the temporalities of the abbey, in Heyford, were rated at £5. 4s. 6d. per ann.[i]; in the survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £7. 16s. 8d. per ann.[k]; and in the minister's accompts at the dissolution, in rents of assize £1. 12s. 6d.; farm (of mill and lands) £7. 18s. 4d. per ann.; and sale of wood and profits of court, nothing[k]. In 36 Hen. 8 (1544), George Tresham and Elizabeth his wife, had a grant of the mill and other possessions of the late abbey of St. James, in Heyford[l]. In 1619, Ursula Judkin, widow, died seised of a messuage, two closes of pasture, four virgates and a quarter of land, and a red rose rent and service issuing out of a messuage and half a virgate of land belonging to John Bliss; all parcel of the late abbey of St. James, held of the king in capite, and was succeeded by her son and heir Thomas Judkin, aged 56 years[m], who entered his pedigree in the visitation of 1618-9, and in whose descendants it still remains vested.

The old Manor-house probably stood in the nether park, which adjoins the present manor-house, a small neat residence of Harleston stone, with two fronts.

The Village is in a flat sequestered situation, six miles west from Northampton, and equi-distant from Daventry and Towcester. In the time of Bridges there were 'sixty-seven houses, eleven of which were for the 'residence of the poor[n];' by the census of 1801 it contained 61 houses and 264 inhabitants; and by that of 1811

71 houses and 321 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £95. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2273. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £215. 17s. 3d. at 3s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after All Saints.

THE ADVOWSON was granted within about a century of the norman conquest, but by whom is unknown, to the abbey of St. James, near Northampton, as appears from the confirmation charter of Hugh bishop of Lincoln[o]; if St. Hugh, between the years 1186 and 1203; if Hugh Wells, between 1209 and 1235; but was probably assumed soon after by the heir of the donor, as it is not included in the confirmation charter of Robert (Kilwardby) archbishop of Canterbury, between 1272 and 1279[p]. With this exception, it was uninterruptedly regardant to the manor held by the family of Heyford, and on the partition amongst the coheiresses of Morewick, passed in corresponding shares with the manor; the Lumleys having two turns, and the Bulmers the remaining turn. The Lumley shares attended the descent of that manor till 1632, when they were severed from it by Thomas Morgan, esq. who sold them to the rev. John Bedford, of Heighington, in the parish of Washingburgh, in Lincolnshire, afterwards rector of this parish; of whose descendants, the rev. William Bedford, vicar of Stradbrook in Suffolk, and Thomas Bedford, sen[r] and jun[r], of the same place, they were purchased in 1744 by the rev. William Lloyd, of Gloucester, rector of Stowe; whose devisee and nephew, the rev. John Lloyd, D. D. rector of Stowe, and afterwards of Heyford, in 1758, purchased the remaining share, or third turn, of Henry, 3rd and last earl of Sussex, to whom it had descended from his ancestor sir Henry Yelverton, who had made a reservation of it when he alienated the Bulmer manor. The entire advowson being thus united by Dr. Lloyd, was devised by him to his nephew sir Thomas-Crawley Boevey, bart. of Flaxley abbey in Glocestershire, under whose will it has passed to his 2nd son, the rev. John-Lloyd Crawley, the present lord of the manor, patron, and rector[q].

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of West Haddon. I know not how to account for its omission in the taxations of 1254 and 1291, as the previous foundation of the parish has been proved in deducing the descent of the advowson. In the ecclesiastical survey or king's books 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was valued at £8. 13s. 4d. per ann. deducting 3s. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[r]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £41. 5s. per ann. in the joint patronage of the heir of sir Christopher Yelverton, and the rector, Mr. Bedford, who present by turns[s]. In 1809, being returned of the clear yearly value of £149. 15s. only, it was exonerated from the land-tax by the commissioners appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806). The commissioners of inclosure awarded 50 a. 1 r. of land (a small part of which has been since sold to the Grand Junction canal company), in lieu of the glebe: and an annuity or rent charge of £31. 13s. 4d. to the rector of Nether Heyford; £55. 16s. 8d. to the rector of Stowe; and £12. 10s. to the rector of Bugbrook; making together £100, clear of deductions; and a further annuity or rent charge of £3. 3s. 4d. to the rector of Nether Heyford; £5. 11s. 8d. to the rector of Stowe; and £1. 5s. to the rector of Bugbrook; making together £10, clear of deductions: in lieu of all tithes whatsoever of the open field, and of all messuages, cottages, and homesteads in Nether Heyford, the respective rectors continuing entitled, in certain and the same proportions as before, to the tithes of the old inclosures; besides which, the rector of Nether Heyford receives a modus or annual composition of £6. 13s. 4d. for the tithes of those lands in Upper Heyford which are reputed to be within this parish. The parsonage is a large thatched cottage adjoining the north side of the church-yard.

The Communion Plate consists of a handsome flagon, chalice, paten, and salver, inscribed with the name and arms of Mr. Thomas Bedford (Ar.), three lions' gambs couped and erect, within a border ingrailed (S.) Crest, a demi-lion (S.) ducally crowned, and holding between his feet a sphere (O.) Mr. Bedford, by his will in 1695, bequeathed £50 for the use and ornament of the church, with which the above plate, a damask communion table-cloth and napkin, a purple velvet pulpit-cushion, &c. were purchased.

The Register commences in 1558, but to 1634 is a transcript from the original, signed by Aman Bedford, rector.

The Church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, consists of a low coped tower, containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. No part of it indicates high antiquity, most of the windows being square headed. The interior is only partially new pewed. At the west end is a gallery with a small organ. The tower is 11 ft. 1 in. long, by 7 ft. 8 in. wide; the nave and aisles 46 ft. 7 in. long; the nave 14 ft. 10 in.; the north aisle 10 ft. 2 in.; and the south aisle 12 ft. 7 in. wide; and the chancel 31 ft. 3 in long, by 15 ft. 4 in. wide. The font is octagonal. The nave is divided from the north aisle by five pointed arches, and from the south aisle by four pointed arches on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings.

II. Another monument for one of the Morgan family lies dispersed in fragments. It appears to have been an altar tomb, with a recumbent figure as large as life, the mutilated remains of which are in plated armour; the head having on a close cap turned up at the ears, and resting on a helmet. It is identified with Thomas Morgan, esq. the son of the judge, who married the daughter and heiress of lord chief baron Saunders; one of the detached shields bearing quarterly, 1 and 4, Morgan, 2 and 3, Pemberton, and quarterings, as impaled in No. III. of the last monument; impaling, per chevron S. and Ar. three elephants' heads erased counterchanged, Saunders. A second shield bears Morgan, impaling Burgoyne; and a third, Morgan, impaling Pemberton, and quarterings as before.

Benefactions (vide p. 80.) Free School. William Bliss, of Southwark, wine-cooper, a native of this parish, who died about 1674, bequeathed by his will, dated 23 Feb. 1673-4, the sum of £400 to his executors, in trust, for £100 to be laid out in the purchase of a house in Lower Heyford, to be converted into a school-house for gratuitously teaching and instructing children in learning, born and inhabiting in the towns and parishes of Lower Heyford and Upper Heyford, and all of the name of Bliss residing within five miles; and the remaining £300 to be laid out and disposed of in the purchase of land or rent charges at their discretion, to be held in trust for such schoolmaster as should from time to time be appointed to teach and officiate in the said school. The executors neglecting to carry the trust into execution, a bill was filed in chancery at the relation of the inhabitants of Heyford in 1678, praying to have trustees appointed, and the charity established according to the will. In 1679 lord chancellor Finch directed the executors to pay the money, and appointed six trustees, of whom the rev. Henry Gray, rector of Heyford, was one. The money was vested in the purchase of a house, homestead, and cottage in Nether Heyford, and land at Long Buckby; and Mr. Bedford, one of the executors, and also a trustee, nominated the aforesaid Henry Gray to be the first master of the free-school; which appointment was signed by two of the trustees; but the other three refused to concur, on pretence that they would not appoint any master, who would not enter into an engagement to resign at the expiration of three years, as well as to teach no other boys than those who came free: with which restrictions Mr. Gray refused to comply. These disputes interrupted the settlement of the charity for more than two years, and led to a complaint to commissioners appointed under the great seal to enquire into the due execution of charitable uses, who cited all parties before them at a session held for that purpose at Northampton, 5 Oct. 1682. Additional trustees were added by these commissioners, and the school seems to have been soon after finally established, and Mr. Gray confirmed in the mastership; the bishop of Peterborough, one of the commissioners, giving it as his opinion, that it was not in the power of the trustees to elect the schoolmaster for a limited time, but that when once he was chosen and licensed, he had it for life, unless he rendered himself obnoxious to the law, and was thereby deprived; that the schoolmaster ought to keep the school in repair, as the case then stood; but if there should hereafter be any improvement in the settled estates, the improved rents should in equity go towards the necessary repairs; that the trustees could not debar the schoolmaster from teaching more boys than those which were sent free; and that children, and not men of stature, were properly intended to be taught, in order to be put to apprenticeship, &c.[c]

It was exonerated from the land-tax in 1809 by the commissioners appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), for exonerating small livings and charitable institutions, on which occasion it was returned of the clear annual value of £50. 19s. 5d. Mr. George Wright, the present master, does not reside in the house originally intended for the school-house, which, with the other premises, is now let for £2. 12s. 6d. per ann. exclusive of the orchard, which is in the master's own occupation. The commissioners under the act for inclosing Long Buckby, allotted 42 acres for the open field lands belonging to the trustees of this school; of which about two acres have been since sold to the Grand Junction canal company, and the remainder is now on lease at £130 per ann.

Arnold's Charity. Edmund Arnold, esq. of Doctors' Commons, London, another native of this parish, by his will dated 1 May 1675, devised his manor and estate of Furtho, in trust for various charitable purposes, which will be fully particularised under the account of that property. Amongst other bequests, were £10 per ann. to Nether Heyford, for putting out apprentices, and setting them up in trade when out of their time; and £5 per ann. for the poor in general. The former is now raised to £42 per ann. and the latter to £21 per ann. in consequence of the improved rental of the estate.

Antiquities. Morton, in treating of roman antiquities found in places remote from, or unconnected with, their stations in this county, says, "Of these the most remarkable is the Roman Pavement, discovered Ann. 1699 "in Horsestone Medow at Nether Heyford, about ½ a Mile* from the Watlingstreet. Of this I have given an "exact Draught, which it well deserves, it being indeed a most noble Piece of Art, exceeding all I have seen or "read of, of the same Kind in England, very far exceeding the checquer'd Pavement in Dr. Plot's Nat. Hist. of "Oxfordsh. Tab. 15. Fig. 22, as also that described in the new Edition of the Brittania, p. 607, and even the "famous one of Woodchaster in Glocestershire, mentioned p. 247, ibid. in the great Variety, in the Regularity, and "Beauty of it. For the first Representation of this extraordinary Piece of checquer'd or tesselate Work, I am "beholden to the Reverend and Worthy Mr. H. Gray of Heyford, who with great Accuracy traced out the Work, "of which he drew a fair Sketch, and kindly presented it to me. The whole Work consisted of little Bricks or "Tiles artificially ting'd with Colours, and as smooth as polish'd Marble: all of them Squares, somewhat bigger "than common Dice, of four Colours, White, Yellow, Red, and Blue, disposed into various regular Figures, "which were placed with great Exactness. But a general Description can by no means give the Reader a just "Idea of this valuable Piece of Antiquity, and therefore I refer him to the Icon, Tab. 14.

" That Icon exhibits as much of this ancient Pavement or Floor as has been discovered. By which, tho' only " a part, we may reasonably presume the whole to have been a Square: And that the two other Sides were con- " formable to these. By what remains of the South Side of the Pavement, we may learn that it was about 15 Feet " in length from East to West. The Extent of it from North to South is not to be known with so much Certainty; " the Discovery not reaching far enough for it. It lay under Ground covered with Mould and Rubbish, in a part " of the Meadow which is every Year overflow'd with Land Floods. And yet when it was first uncover'd, it was " so close and firm as to bear walking upon as well as a Stone-floor would do. But having lain a while expos'd " to the Night Dews, the Cement became relax'd, and the Squares easily separable. It appears to have been " the Floor of a square Room in some House or other Structure, of a circular Figure, and about 20 Yards " Diameter; as we may conjecture from the thin and pale Greensword in this place, which is different from the " rest of the Meadow, and which probably covers the Remains and Ruins of it; for whereever they dig underneath " this discolour'd Greensword, they meet with Floors, Foundations of Walls, or other remains of some ruin'd " Building. The Room that had this curious Floor was in the Southern Part of the said Structure. In the " Western and Northern Part of it were several lesser Rooms or Cells, about ten Feet in length and four broad. " That there really were such little Rooms is plain enough from the partition Walls, the Bottoms whereof have " been discovered in digging there. The Stone of the Foundations is small and mean for a Structure so finely " adorned as this is within. Some of the Rooms were found floor'd with a firm Plaister of Lime-morter, drawn " upon Pebbles fixed in Lime. The Borders or Sides of the Floors were painted with three Strait and parallel " Lines or Stripes of three different Colours, Red, Yellow, and Green: So fresh and lively that when the Floors " were uncover'd by the Diggers, the Strokes of the Hairs of the painting Brush were plainly visible. No Painting " appear'd in the inner Part of any of them. Upon one of these Floors were found three Urns; which were " broken by the Countrey People, before any curious Person had a Sight of them. The Floors were all upon the " same Level. In other Parts of the Rubbish, Mr. Gray discovered several Fragments of Urns, and of other " antique Earthern Vessels; that by the Edges of the Fragments seem'd to have been broken long ago. Amongst " the Pieces Mr. Gray preserv'd, was one that by its Figure and Colour I take to have been the Bottom of an Ash- " colour'd Urn: Another that seems to have been the Margin of a large Urn, its Colour white: Another of the " same Colour, which was the Margin of a lesser Urn: Another of a Bluish Cast, which seems to be a Fragment " of a Libatory Vessel: Another that has the Colour and Smoothness of a pure Red Coral, and by the Figure of it " appears to have been part of a Dish or Plate, perhaps of a sacrificing PATERA. And amongst the Stuff of the " Ruins were many Pieces of Slates, as also of Tiles that seem to have been made use of, some of them however " in covering the Roof of the Building; they having such Holes at one End of them, as have those we now " sometimes use in covering: And likewise an Antique Hammer Head.

" This Structure, for so I shall now call it, stood about Half a Mile* Eastward of the Watling-street. The " Situation and other Circumstances will by no means allow it to have been a Tower or other Place of Defence. " Perhaps it was a Sepulchretum or Burial-Place of some Noble Roman Family that might have their Residence at " Bennavenna; from which, whether we set it at Wedon, at Castle Dikes, or at Daintry, 'tis not far distant. 'Tis " well known that Interment within their Cities was not allowed of. ' Hominem mortuum in Urbe ne Sepelito " ' neve urito †.'

" Perhaps it was the Vill or Mannor House of some Eminent Person amongst the Romans: and that the Urns " were the Sepulchres of some of his Family. For according to Servius, Of old all men were bury'd in their Houses: ' Apud majores omnes Homines in suis Domibus sepeliebantur.' This is Servius's Remark on a Passage in " Virgil, Æneid 6. And Isidore agrees with him in that observation ‡.

" We have a Curious Representation of many the like Kind of Sepulchral Monuments, in Bartoli's Antichi " Sepolchri, Vol. I. Of those in Bartoli, the most like to this with us at Heyford, is that of Munatius Plancus, " Vol I. Figg. 75. 76. which is still preserv'd at Gaeta. The Figure of the Structure in the Foundation and lower " Part of it is round, as this of ours appears to have been. It has four Rooms within it on the first Floor, and " Partition Walls between. The Rooms of the Sepulchres of this Sort were usually paved with Mosaic Work, " of which the Curious may meet with many remarkable Instances in Bartoli's Antichi Sepolcri above-quoted; " where among others they will find the Wreathed Border of this Heyford Pavement very well exemplifi'd in his " 17th Table, which describes the Pavement of the Tenth Room of the famous Sepulchre of the Villa Corsina[a]."

This pavement, judging from the subjoined engraving in Morton, does not, it must be confessed, deserve the hyperbolical praises he has lavished upon it. It is composed of regular patterns within a guilloche border. Anxious to ascertain the precise spot, and in the hope of further discoveries, the rev. J.-LL. Crawley, in company with the author, in July last (1821), made several openings, but found nothing more than different sized tesseræ, fragments of tiles and urns, and small portions of the red stucco. An old labourer afterwards informed them, that he was employed about 40 years since to break up and remove the pavement; and that the small square stones (tesseræ), which filled two carts, were by his master's direction applied to the repair of the roads. At the north end, he observed two large stone steps, probably leading to the bath; and the small rooms mentioned by Morton may be presumed to have been the dressing-rooms. The whole site of the building, as marked by the disturbed surface, and discoloured vegetation, extends about 100 feet square.

JOHN STANBRIDGE, one of the earliest and most eminent philologists, was a native of Nether Heyford. He was educated at Winchester School, from whence he was removed to, and became fellow of, New College in Oxford. He was first usher of the free-school adjoining Magdalen college in 1486; and on the death of John Anwykyll, the head master, was appointed his successor.

His mode of instruction was highly approved by his contemporaries, and adopted by Whittington, Lilye, and other leading preceptors of the time. His heart was in his profession, which he regarded rather as a pleasure than a business, resisting the solicitations of his friends to retire in his old age, and pursuing his favorite avocation with a buoyant and cheerful spirit to the close of a long and useful life in the year 1522. The study of the learned languages was zealously promoted, and essentially benefited by his indefatigable labors. His principal publication was "Embryon Relimatum, sive Vocabularium Metricum" 4to.; which first appeared about 1500, and not only passed through various editions in his life-time, but was edited with corrections by Newton in 1589, and Brinsley in 1647; maintaining its popularity for more than a century. To an edition without date, but generally referred to 1522, is prefixed a wood-cut of the author, seated in a chair with his gown on, and his hood on his shoulders. He published also, "Vocabula Magistri Stanbrigii primum jam edita sua saltem editione," 4to 1514. "Parvulorum Institutiones," 4to, 1521. "De Ordine By Wynkyn de Worde, "Latine et Anglice," 4to, 1521. John Preston, D. D. a distinguished puritan divine of the 17th century, was the son of Thomas and Alice Preston, of Nether Heyford, where he was born. The farm which his father occupied being in that part of Heyford which is in the parish of Bugbrook, his children were indifferently baptized at either church. John was baptized at Bugbrook 17 Oct. 1587[d]. He was admitted of Queen's college in Cambridge, where he became so popular a tutor, that Fuller styles him "the greatest pupilmonger in England in man's memory." At a public disputation in the university, he attracted the notice of James 1st, who appointed him one of his chaplains; and he was also preacher of Lincoln's-inn, and prebendary of Lincoln, but never held any parochial benefice. On the death of Dr. Chaderton in 1622 he was chosen master of Emanuel college, the nursery of puritanism, and through his powerful influence with that party, the duke of Buckingham endeavoured to engage their co-operation in his measures. Preston was wary and cautious, however, in forwarding the views of the duke, who, despairing to render him subservient to his interests, "flung him as an useless weed away." He died unmarried in the prime of life, and in possession of an handsome competence, honorably acquired by the exercise of his talents, in July 1628, probably on a visit to the Knightley family at Fawsley, where he was buried on the 28th of that month[e]. "As he "had a short race to run, so he made speed, and did much in a little time." The estimation in which his writings were held is strongly evinced by the authorised publication of some of his posthumous productions, being anticipated by surreptitious editions; and the "New Covenant," edited by his friends Drs. Sibs and Davenport, reaching the 8th edition within six years of his death. A life of him was written by Dr. Clarke, and another by Thomas Ball, vicar of All Saints in Northampton, one of his pupils. His writings are: Sermon on Psalms xxxix. 5, 4to, 1615. Sermon on Psal. ciii. 15, 16. 4to, 1619. Sermon on Job. vii. 1. 4to, 1619. Mr. William Taylor, son of the rev. George Taylor, rector of Keston in Kent, many years master of the free-school here, was employed by Mr. Bridges; and subsequently, during the editorship of Dr. Samuel Jebb, entered into a similar engagement with Gibbons the bookseller, to copy monumental inscriptions and collect local information for the intended history of the county. His correspondence on the subject from the year 1718 to 1739, in which he bears the warmest testimony to the liberal and honorable conduct of Mr. Bridges towards him; and bitterly complains, apparently with too much reason, of the inadequate compensation he received from the London bookseller, has lately come into my possession; and a selection of the most interesting letters will probably be introduced into a retrospective view of the labors of my predecessors, in the introductory portion of the present work. He lived to an advanced age in a state of abject poverty, and was buried here 1 July 1771.

UPPER HEYFORD,

In the several parishes of Nether Heyford, Flore, and Bugbrook, contains about 890 acres, and was inclosed by private agreement in 1712. The principal proprietors are John Wilson Duffin, of Edinburgh, esq. who has about 180 acres; Edward Loveden-Loveden, of Buscot park in Berkshire, esq. who has about 175 acres; and Mr. Thomas Stanton, who has about 115 acres. It is bounded on the north by Clasthorp, in the parishes of Brington and Flore; on the east by Harpole; on the south by Nether Heyford; and on the west by Flore. The soil varies but little from the other Heyford. The mill, which is mentioned in domesday, stands on the river Nen, and is reputed to be in the parish of Flore.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee *. The earl of Moreton held in demesne at the domesday survey, the third part of a virgate in the other (" altera") " Haiford," which was valued with the capital manor[f]: and Walter held of the earl a virgate and three parts of a virgate in " Haiford," of the soke of Bugbrook. There was one carucate of arable land with two servants, a mill worth 16s. yearly, and four acres of meadow. It had been the freehold of Biscop † in the time of the confessor, when it was rated at 10s. yearly, but was now trebled in value[g]. It is not easy to distinguish to which of the Heyfords the several entries of that name in domesday apply; but the above estates are appropriated to Upper Heyford, on the ground of the former being designated the other Heyford; and the mill which stands in that township being included in the survey of the latter.

Barony of Keynes ‡. Golafre or Mauntell Manor. One of these estates, probably the former, was granted out to the family of Keynes; and given by William de Keynes, under the description of the manor of " Over Heyford," to one William, his seneschal, to hold at fee farm of the manor of Dodford; which William enfeoffed his nephew (" nepote") Hugh, from whom it descended through his son Richard to his grandson Hugh, whose daughter and heiress Amabilia, married William, son of Roger Golafre, of Norton; and from them it passed to their son John Golafre, and grandson John Golafre, who was possessed of it in 1340[h] (14 Edw. 3). In the inquisition of Knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), Reginald de Hottot and Amabilia his wife (widow, I presume, of William Golafre), were certified to hold one carucate of land with pertinencies in " Parva Heyford," by socage of the heir of Robert de Keynes, who held of the earl of Leicester, and the earl of the king[i].

'[k] In the fourth year of Hen. IV. John Monceux brought his action against John Harwedon, for the recovery of 'two messuages, four virgates of arable land, eight acres of meadow, and an annual rent-charge of xxiis. in 'Wotton, Over Heyford, and Nether Heyford, which the said John Harwedon and others pretended to, in right of 'Alice, the wife of William Wykewam, who claimed to be daughter and heir of the said John Monceux. In this trial 'Alice Wykewam was proved to be illegitimate; and the jury found that Over Heyford was a village of itself, and 'not an hamlet of Nether Heyford.' Amabilia, or Amiable, de Munceus, whose epitaph is recorded in Heyford church, was, I apprehend, the wife of this John Monceux, and not improbably the heiress of Golafre.

John Mauntell, esq. whose pedigree will be found in Nether Heyford, died 10 May 1503, seised (int. al.) of the manor of " Over Heyford," held of Thomas Stafford, esq. (lord of Dodford[l]), by inheritance, it is presumed, from the Golafres, as their other manors of Norton by Daventry and Farthingho were also in his possession[l]. The further descent of this manor is incorporated with the Mauntell estates in Nether Heyford. It is still within the jurisdiction of the court leet of Dodford.

Honor of Clare or Glocester §. On the confiscation of the earldom of Moreton, the other portion of that fee recorded above, seems to have been annexed to the honor of Clare or Glocester. The amount of the tenure varies in almost every record: in the Testa de Nevill, about 21 Hen. 3 (1236-7), amongst the fees of the honor of Clare, Richard de Flore was returned to have a fifth part of a fee in " Heyford[m];" in the inquisition of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), he, or his successor of the same name, was certified to hold half a fee of the earl of Glocester, in " Heyford[n];" and in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), Nicholas de Heyford[o], upon collecting the aid 'for the 'Knighthood of the King's son, accounted for a twelfth part of one Knight's fee of the honor of Clare.' In 22 Ric. 2 (1398-9) this estate belonged to John Hoggeshawe, as appears from the inquisition after the death of Thomas earl of Stafford[p] §, the paramount lord, as one of the representatives of the Clares, earls of Glocester. In 1606 John Brayne died seised of a capital messuage and certain lands in Heyford, which, according to the first inquisition after his death, formerly belonged to Richard de Flore, and were held of the honor of Glocester[q]; but by an amended inquisition, they were found to be held of the manor of Kislingbury[r], or honor of Gaunt, as has been already stated under Nether Heyford.

The Prior of Luffield, in a plea with William Fitz Richard respecting Heyford mill, in 6 Ric. 1 (1194-5), agreed, in consideration of 8s. yearly rent in Heyford, to release and quit claim a moiety of the said mill, to William and his heirs for ever[s] By inquisition taken 18 Hen. 7 (1503), the late suppressed prior of Luffield was found to have had 21s. yearly rent in Heyford[t].

The Manor-House of the Mauntells and Morgans is supposed to have stood in the field called the Upper Park, and to have been demolished by sir Thomas Preston.

The Village is between five and six miles from Northampton, on the turnpike road to Daventry. According to Bridges it consists of 'twenty-two houses, most of which are in the parish of Flore, some in Bugbrook, and two 'only in the parish of Nether Heyford[a].' By the census of 1801, it contained 23 houses and 122 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 25 houses and 117 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this township is £118. 10s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1645. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £124. 10s. at 3s. in the £.

Benefactions. Besides the joint benefit of the free-school with Nether Heyford, Upper Heyford has £21 per ann. for putting out apprentices from Arnold's charity.

HOLDENBY; or HOLMBY,

As it is now usually called, is written in domesday "Aldenesbi;" and perhaps may be simply expressive of the bye, or habitation of the first saxon possessor. The lordship is old inclosure, and the entire property of viscount Clifden, the lord of the manor. 'By a survey of the Lordship made in 1587, it contained seventeen hundred and 'eighty-nine acres; of which six hundred and six were laid out in the park, site of the manor-house, gardens, 'orchards, and pastures about it[b];' by the schedule annexed to the articles for the sale of Holdenby by sir Christopher Hatton, to king James 1st, in Feb. 1607-8, there are 1768 a. 1 r. 21 p.; of which 499 a. 0 r. 20 p. were included in the park, exclusive of the lawn meadow of 135 a.; but by the modern measurement the whole contains about 1820 acres. It is bounded on the north by Spratton, in Spelho hundred, from which it is divided by a small brook; on the east by Church Brampton; on the south-east by Harleston; on the south by Althorp park; and on the west by East Haddon. The soil is principally a dark loam of a stout heavy staple, but towards the north is a tract of a lighter colour and quality. More than three-fourths of the lordship is pasture and grazing land. The following scarce plants are found here: Equisetum fluviatile, river Horse-tail; Viburnum Lantana, Way-faring-tree; Carex paniculata, panicled Seg; Veronica montana, stalked Speedwell; Sium angustifolium, upright Water Parsnep; Sium latifolium, great Water Parsnep; Festuca sylvatica, wood Fescue; Hypericum hirsutum, hairy St. John's-wort; Rosa dumetorum, downy-stalked Dog-Rose; Senecio sylvaticus, bushy Groundsel; Carduus eriophorus, Friar's Crown; Carduus pratensis, single-headed Thistle; Rubus Idæus, Raspberry. There is a water-mill on the brook, which divides the parish from Spratton.

Manorial History. Moreton Fee*. Siward, with nine socmen, held "Aldenesbi," freely, in the time of Edward the confessor, when it was rated at 20s. yearly. At the domesday survey it was doubled in value, and held by one Ralph under the earl of Moreton. It was within the soke of East Haddon manor, and consisted of two hides and a virgate. The arable land was eight caracutes, of which two were in demesne with four servants, and a villein and nine socmen had two others, leaving four caracutes waste or unaccounted for. There were three acres of meadow, and three acres of wood[x]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, there were certified to be three hides in "Haldeneby" of the fee of the earl of Leicester[y]. On the subsequent division of that earldom, the paramountship of this estate passed in portions to the honors of Winchester and Leicester, under each of which were held two manors.

Honor of Winchester†. Arden or Holdenby Manor. '[z]In the eighteenth year of Henry III. '(1233-4), a fine was levied between Eustachia de Pinkeney, demandant, and Henry de Pinkeney, deforciant, of the 'service of one knight's fee and a half in Haudeneby and Sprocton, claimed by Margery Countess of Winchester; 'and which service the said Henry engaged to perform instead of the said Eustachia de Pinkeney.' Eustachia married Thomas de Arden, and by reference to Spratton it will be seen that in 54 Hen. 3 (1269), Peter de Holdenby held half a fee in Holdenby of her and her son Thomas[a]; and when this manor occurs in the inquisitions of their descendants, it is to be understood as expressive only of the intermediate seignory which they retained between the Holdenbys, the mesne lords, and the chief lords, or representatives of the honor of Winchester. The family who assumed the local surname, was seated here at least as early as the beginning of the 13th, and continued in the direct male line till the 16th, century. In 3 Hen. 8 (1511), Joyce Holdenby, widow of John Holdenby, esq. died seised of the manor of Holdenby, held of Henry Maxe and Thomas Inguarderby, as of their manor of Spratton by service unknown; and also of the manor of Wold, and lands and tenements in East Haddon, Ravensthorp, Haselbech, Thurnby, Kelmarsh, and Long Buckby. Her son Robert, having died s. p. during his father's life-time, Elizabeth Giles, sister of William, father of the said John Holdenby, was found to be the next heir[b].

She was succeeded in her inheritance by John Hatton, her eldest son by her former husband Henry Hatton, esq. a cadet of an ancient Cheshire family. William Hatton, son of John, died possessed of this manor in 38 Hen. 8 (1546), and was succeeded by Francis, his son and heir, a minor[c]; on whose decease, s. p. it devolved on his brother, the celebrated sir Christopher Hatton, who was born here in 1548. It is not a little remarkable, and deserves to be recorded on the bead roll of Northamptonshire fame, that during the brilliant reign of Elizabeth, this county furnished the lord treasurer, and prime minister, Cecil lord Burleigh of Burleigh; the lord chancellor, sir Christopher Hatton of Holdenby and Kirby; the chancellor of the exchequer, sir Walter Mildmay of Apethorp; and the speaker of the house of commons, sir Christopher Yelverton of Easton Mauduit.

Sir Christopher Hatton was a gentleman commoner of St. Mary's hall in Oxford, but left the university before he had taken a degree, and entered himself a student of the Inner Temple. His handsome person, graceful dancing, and prepossessing manners, exciting the queen's attention at a masked ball, he was introduced into the royal household in the capacity of one of the gentlemen pensioners, and continuing to rise in her majesty's favor, was successively appointed gentleman of the privy chamber, captain of the guard, and vice-chamberlain. His talents secured and extended the influence gained by his personal accomplishments; he was admitted into the privy council, and "his opinion became an oracle to his sovereign." In 1586 he was included in the commission issued against Mary queen of Scots, who was induced by his arguments and address to submit to trial, when she resisted every other solicitation to bow to the jurisdiction of the court. On the 29th of April following (1587), the great seal was delivered to him with the title of lord chancellor, though he had never undergone the probation of any subordinate legal office, and had long relinquished the profession. The appointment, as might naturally be expected, gave great dissatisfaction at the bar, and the sergeants at first refused to plead before him, but their prejudices were speedily subdued by the acuteness and rectitude of his judgment. "His place was above his "law, but not above his parts, which were so very pregnant and comprehensive, that he could command other "men's parts to as good purpose as his own." His last illness was attributed to the mortification and chagrin consequent on the queen's unkindness in unexpectedly demanding instant payment of an old debt: he protested his present inability, and begged a short respite; which being denied him, preyed on his spirits and brought on a fever: the queen relented when informed of his danger, and condescended to carry him cordials with her own hands; but it was too late, the malady had taken too deep root, and he yielded to its force on the 20th of Nov. 1591, in the 51st year of his age. "He was," says Camden, "a man, to say nothing of him but that which was "in truth his due, for Religion and godlinesse right devout, of approved faithfulnesse to the State, of incorrupt "equity; for almes deeds of all others most bountifull; and one (which is not the least part of his praise) that was "most willing and ready to support and maintaine learning;" in proof of which he had the singular honor of being lord chancellor of the university of Oxford, and high steward of the university of Cambridge. He published "A Treatise concerning Statutes, or Acts of Parliament, and the Exposition thereof." 4to, 1677; and his speeches during the time of his chancellorship, are still extant in MS. He lived in a style of costly hospitality, and erected two splendid mansions in this county, at Holdenby and Kirby; the former, though destroyed, will ever live in remembrance as the prison of the unhappy Charles; and the latter descended to the adopted representative of the family, and is now the residence of George William Finch Hatton, esq. All the four manors in Holdenby appear to have centered in sir Christopher Hatton, who, on the 19th of April 1568 (10 Eliz.), exchanged them under the general description of "Holdenby" manor, for the site of the abbey and demesne lands of Sulby, with

Queen Elizabeth[d], who, the same day, granted him a lease for 40 years[e]; and 10 Jan. 1570-1, re-conveyed to him the manor of Holdenby in fee, to hold of the manor of East Greenwich in Kent, in free socage[f]. Sir Christopher dying unmarried, devised the whole, or greatest part, of his property to his nephew and heir general,

Sir William Newport in tail male, on condition of adopting the name of Hatton; with remainder to his godson and heir male sir Christopher Hatton. Sir William survived only till 12 Mar. 1596-7[g], when Benefield and the Newport estates descended to his two daughters and coheiresses; and Holdenby and the other Hatton estates passed by virtue of the remainder in the lord chancellor's entail, to

Sir Christopher Hatton, who obtained an act of parliament 3 Jac. (1605), to enable him to dispose of certain lands and hereditaments, notwithstanding a limitation or clause of perpetuity annexed to his estate. By articles of agreement with king James 1st, dated 1 Feb. 5 Jac. (1607-8)[h], sir Christopher covenanted to convey "the greate "mansion-house of Holdenby," the manor with appurtenances, and messuages, and about 1768 acres of land, including the park, to the king's trustees, to the use of his majesty for life, remainder to Charles duke of York, his second son, in tail male, with remainder to his majesty's heirs and successors. The park and lands, according to the schedule annexed, specifying the name and quantity of each field, and the estimated rent per acre, were valued at £1596. 13s. 11d. per annum; and the timber in the lordship at £1922. 3s. The king, on the execution of the conveyance, covenanted to pay £9922. 3s. for the mansion and all other buildings, and the timber; and "for further consideration and recompence," to grant to sir Christopher and his heirs "such and so manie" fee-farm rents reserved in grants of manors, &c. by his majesty or his predecessors, together with the seignories and tenures of the manors, &c. out of which the said fee-farm rents issue, provided the tenures are in free and common socage, and not by ..... knight's service nor socage in capite, "as the said sir Christopher Hatton shall accept and like of," to the clear yearly amount of £1652. 13s. 11d. to be held by the accustomed tenure; and also to grant to the nominees of sir Christopher, all his majesty's interest and reversion in any of the lands of the late lord chancellor Hatton, by virtue or colour of any extent issued for any debt due by the said lord chancellor to the late queen Elizabeth, on condition that the residue of the lord chancellor's debt remaining unpaid at the date of the said grant, shall be duly paid by £1500 yearly, at the days appointed in an instrument made by the late queen Elizabeth for securing the payment thereof. The king further covenanted to grant to sir Edward Coke, lord chief justice of the common pleas, and lady Elizabeth his wife (widow of sir William Hatton), during the life of the said lady Elizabeth, the custody of the said great mansion-house, and the park, gardens, and orchards thereto belonging, with a yearly fee of 40 marks (£26. 8s.), and to the said lady Elizabeth, "the edifices and buildings commonlie "called the Dairy-house, belonging to the said great mansion-house of Holdenby, for her lodginge," during her life; and the said sir Edward and lady Elizabeth covenanted to convey to the king's trustees, whensoever required, all their interest or right in all or any part of the said premises.

* The descent of the Hattons to their connection with the Holdenbies, rests on this authority. Genealogists differ as to the direct ancestor of the lord chancellor, though all agree in deducing the family from Ivon.

HOLDENBY.

Charles duke of York, second son of king James 1st, on whom Holdenby was entailed, became prince of Wales on the death of Henry his elder brother in 1612, and in 1625 succeeded his father in the throne, under the title of Charles 1st. In the political struggle between him and his parliament, Holdenby was seized in common with the whole of the royal demesnes. Thomas lord Grey, of Groby in Leicestershire, one of the most active parliamentarians, is said by Collins to have received a grant from his brethren of the queen's manor-house, park, and lands, at Holdenby, where he made a great devastation in the woods: but no authority is given for the assertion, and his interest could not have extended beyond the temporary custody of the house; for the trustees for the sale of the crown lands, by deed dated 5 May 1650, sold to Adam Baynes, of Knowsthorp in Yorkshire, esq. in fee, for £22,299. 6s. 10d. the capital messuage, or royal mansion-house, of Holdenby, with its appurtenances, gardens, orchards, and walks, containing in the whole, by estimation, 38 a. 1 r. of the present annual value of £26. 2s. 6d.; and the materials of which mansion are stated in the particulars of sale to be worth £6000, over and above the expence of taking them down; the park, containing 500 a. 1 r. bounded on the north by the road from Church Brampton to Holdenby; on the east by the Church-field of Church and Chapel Brampton; on the south by the Delf and Twigden's meadows; and on the west by the mansion-house; of the estimated yearly value of £345. 19s. 8d.; stocked with upwards of 200 deer, of different kinds, worth £200; 11 cows and calves of wild cattle, worth £42; and the timber in the park and lordship, worth £2766. 19s. 10d.; and divers other messuages and lands within the said lordship[i]. Baynes was a captain in the parliamentary army, and M. P. for Leeds in the only parliament in which it was ever represented. The alienated crown lands being resumed at the restoration, he retired to his paternal estate in Yorkshire, where he died in Dec. 1670.

King Charles 2nd, it is presumed, gave Holdenby to his brother James duke of York (afterwards king James 2nd), who sold it to Lewis Duras[k], brother of the duke de Duras, probably prior to 1673, in which year he was created baron Duras of Holdenby. He was marquis of Blamquefort in France, of which country he was a native, and naturalized here by act of parliament 17 Car. 2 (1665). The duke of York appointed him captain of his guards, and whilst serving in that capacity, he distinguished himself by his gallantry in the naval action with the Dutch off Southwold-bay, in June 1665. On the decease of his father-in-law, without issue male, in 1677, he succeeded to the earldom of Feversham by the limitation of the patent. He suppressed the duke of Monmouth's insurrection in 1685; and in 1688 was constituted general of the forces; but the king abdicating the throne, and intimating to the earl that he did not expect him to make any resistance to the prince of Orange, he, with the advice and concurrence of a council of war, disbanded the army; for which measure, however, he was, when sent by the king to Windsor, without the precaution of a passport, to invite the prince to St. James's to hold a conference with his majesty on the state of the nation, put under arrest by order of the prince, but liberated in a few days at the intercession of the queen dowager; who, on her departure for Portugal, confided to him the care of her household, and palace of Somerset-house. He died in 1709, and leaving no issue, his titles became extinct.

[i] Claus. 5 May 1650. [k] Information of viscount Clifden.

Holdenby was purchased of the earl of Feversham's representatives, by John Churchill duke of Marlborough[k], an accomplished courtier, an able statesman, and the most illustrious military hero of the age. To attempt a sketch of his brilliant career, would be to epitomise the history of the kingdom for nearly half a century; and as this county can neither boast of his birth nor residence, the plan of this work requires simply the descent of the property, illustrated by a pedigree. The original patent of creation for the marquisate of Blandford and dukedom of Marlborough, was with the customary limitation to the heirs male of the body; but the duke having lost his only son unmarried, the house of lords, to prevent the extinction of honours so gloriously acquired, addressed the queen to continue them in his posterity; and accordingly an act of parliament passed, 5 Anne (1706), entailing them, and the honor and manor of Woodstock and house of Blenheim annexed, on his eldest daughter and the heirs male of her body, with remainder to his other daughters successively, according to priority of birth, and the heirs male of their respective bodies. The duke, by his will, made a corresponding disposition of his immense private estates, including Holdenby, with ultimate remainder to the female line of his daughters; and dying in 1722, was succeeded in titles and possessions by his eldest daughter

Henrietta, wife of Francis earl of Godolphin, on whose decease, in 1733, her nephew

Charles Spencer 5th earl of Sunderland became duke of Marlborough, by virtue of the parliamentary settlement, and not under the limitation of the patent, as inadvertently stated in the account of the Spencer family under ALTHORP. His son

George 3rd duke of Marlborough, sold the manor and lordship of Holdenby to the trustees of his son-in-law

Henry-Welbore-Agar Ellis 2nd viscount Clifden in Ireland[k], who had recently succeeded to the English barony of Mendip, by the limitation of the patent granted to his maternal great uncle Welbore Ellis baron Mendip; and in pursuance of whose will he adopted the name and arms of Ellis. No manorial court has been held of late years.

Honor of Winchester*. Nevill Manor. A precept was issued to the sheriff of the county 13 Joh. (1211), to summon before him Philip de "Haudenebi" and Julian his wife, who held certain lands in "Haude- "nebi," which, after the death of Julian, ought to descend to Robert Trian (or Treaunt), as his inheritance, to answer to Robert why they had falsely, for the purpose of disinheriting him, adopted a strange child, and brought him up as their own; and in the meantime the sheriff was directed to send discreet men and women to examine or enquire whether Julian was mother of this child, or pregnant when she went to Canterbury, and what was the current belief on the subject in the neighbourhood. Philip and Julian came in obedience to the summons, and admitted the charge: Julian acknowledging, that when she arrived in London on her way to Canterbury, she prevailed on a certain poor woman to give up her child, on condition of its passing for the son and heir of Julian; and that she was induced to resort to this fraud by enmity toward Robert Trian her nephew. It was accordingly adjudged, that Philip and his wife should forfeit the fee, and seisin thereof be given to the plaintiff[l]. Ralph de la Hay, who married Eustachia, sister and heiress of Robert Tryan, died seised of Brampton and Holdenby manors in 38 Hen. 3 (1253)[m], and from him they descended to the Nevills, according to the pedigree given in Church Brampton. '[n] In the forty-third of this reign (Hen. 3), a fine was levied between Ralph de Nevill, 'demandant, and Philip de Nevill, deforciant, of lands (in Holdenby) of the yearly value of vii l. to the use of the 'said Ralph and his heirs, with remainder, in default of issue, to Philip de Nevill, his brother; and in default of 'issue of Philip, to his sisters and their heirs.'

By inquisition after the death of Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester, 54 Hen. 3 (1269), Philip de Nevill and Sibil de Holdenby were certified to have held of him one knight's fee in "Holdenby;" and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-6), his younger grandson William Nevill was lord of "Holdenby" and Whilton[p]. This William had a son, sir James Nevill, who inherited Whilton; but the family do not occur again in connection with Holdenby, nor can their estates here be any longer identified.

Honor of Leicester†. Covele Manor. In that division of the Testa de Nevill compiled about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Philip de Covele is returned to hold one fee in "Haudeneby" and Ravensthorp of the fees of Simon Montfort, of the honor of Leicester[q]. Gascoigne, a skilful antiquary of the 17th century, quoted by Betham, states that Philip de Covele, by his wife Cecily, had four daughters and coheiresses, between whom the manors of Holdenby and Ravensthorp were divided in the latter part of the reign of Edw. 1, before Henry de Spigurnell and the other judges, his associates. Of these four daughters, Joan and Isabella died s. p.; Margery married, first, William Okeden, by whom she had a son John; and, secondly, William de Holdenby, by whom she had a son of the same names; and Agnes, the other daughter, was mother of Roger de Broke, who left four daughters, Maud, Alice, Cecily, and Margery; and a son, William de Brooke, whose wife Agnes was living 25 Edw. 1, and by whom he had two sons, William and Roger, and three daughters, Maud, Cecily, and Margaret, all living 14 Edw. 2 (1285-6)[r]. In the book of knight's fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), Margery de "Cowle" is certified to hold one fee in Holdenby and Ravensthorp of Roger de St. Andrew, and Roger of the earl of Leicester[s]. '[t] In 'the third of Edw. III. (1329), Roesia, the widow of Roger de Broke, brought her action for the recovery of a 'third part of this manor (Ravensthorp), as her dower, against William, the son of William de Broke, Maud, Cecily, 'and Margaret, his sisters, upon whom it had been settled by their father, by a fine levied in the thirty-fifth year 'of Edw. I (1306-7).' '[u] In the third year of Edw. III. (1329), John, the son of Sara (qu. Joan or Isabella?) de 'Couele, commenced an action in the court of King's-Bench against William de Broke and his sisters, for the 'recovery of one messuage, and one virgate of land with its appurtenances in Haldenby, and a moiety of one- 'fourth part of the Manor of Holdenby and Ravensthorp. Upon the defendants making default, judgment was 'given in his favour. [v] The premises had also been claimed by John, the son of Margery de Couele.' '[x] In the 'sixth year of this reign (1332), a fine was levied in fee simple of tenements in Haldenby and Ravensthorp, between 'John de Charleton, of London, demandant, and William, the son of Roger de Broke, deforciant. This John de 'Charleton[y], in the eleventh of the same reign (1337), gave up to Hugh Atte Pole, and others, his Manors of Hal- 'denby and Ravensthorp, which had formerly belonged to Sir Roger de Broke.' '[z] In the twenty-second of the 'same reign (1348), William de Broke, and John, the son of William de Broke, released to John de Charleton the 'elder, John de Charleton his son, Maud his wife, and their heirs, all their right in Haldenby, Ravensthorp, and 'other places.' This manor afterwards merged in the Hatton estate; but how, or at what time, cannot now be ascertained.

Honor of Leicester†. Barony of Keynes†. Welles Manor. In the Testa de Nevill, about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), Hugh de Vallibus held the fourth part of a fee in "Haldeneby" of the fees of Ralph de Keynes, then in wardship of Simon de Montfort, parcel of the small fees of Moreton[a], and accounted for in the scutage of the fees of the earl of Leicester[b]. In the book of knights' fees, 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), Peter de Welles was returned to hold four virgates of land in Holdenby of the heir of Robert de Keynes, who held them of the earl of Leicester[c]. He died in 1307 (1 Ed. 2), aged 80 years[d]; and no further trace of the family occurs till 3 Hen. 7 (1488), when, by a rental of the feudatory tenants of the manor of Dodford, it appears that Peter de Wells held in Holdenby the third part of a knight's fee, which John Wells, John Holdenby, and others, lately held[e].

The Park. Sir Christopher Hatton obtained a licence in 1578 to impark 300 acres of land, 200 acres of meadow and 70 acres of pasture, in Holdenby, Church Brampton, and Chapel Brampton.

Holdenby House was built by lord chancellor Hatton, and esteemed by him "the last and greatest monument of his youth." In a letter to sir Thomas Smith, he writes, "two others of my poor servants are fallen sick; what their distemper will prove is not yet discerned, but the physician feareth the small-pox. By this occasion I am determined to disperse my little company, and to take my pilgrimage to sir Ed. Bricknell's to view my House of Kirby, which I yet never surveyed; leaving my other shrine, I mean Holdenbye, still unseen, until that holy Saint may sit in it, to whom it is dedicated. I beseech you, sir, acquaint her herewith." Camden says, "Holdenby-house, a faire patterne of stately and magnificent building, maketh a faire glorious shew;" and Norden describes it as "a very beautiful building erected with such uniformity and so answerably contriv'd as for the quantity and quality is not to be match'd in this land. In the hall theare are raised three peramides very high standing insteade of a shryne, the midst whereof ascendeth unto the roofe of the hall, the other two equal with the syde walls of same hall, and on them are depainted the armes of all the gentlemen of the same shire, and of all the noblemen of this land. The situation of the same house is very pleasantlie contrived, mounting on an hill environed with most ample and lardge fields and goodly pastures, manie young groves newly planted, both pleasant and profitable; fishe-ponds well replenished, a parke adjoyninge of fallow deare, with a large warren of conyes, not farr from the house, lyinge between East-Haddon and Long-Buglye. Aboute the house are greate store of hares, and above the rest is especially to be noated, with what industrye and toyle of man, the garden hath been raised, levelled, and formed out of a most craggye and unprofitable grounde, now framed a most pleasante, sweete, and princely place with divers walks, manie ascendings and descendings, replenished also with manie delightful trees of fruite, artificially composed arbors, and a destilling house on the west end of the same garden, over which is a ponde of water brought by conduite pypes, out of the feyld adjoininge on the west, a quarter of a myle from the same house. To conclude, the state of the same house is such, and so beautifull, that it may well delight a prince[f]."

King James 1st occasionally resided here, as is evident from "A Sermon," printed in 1610, "preached before his Majesty on Sunday the fifth of August last, at Holdenbie, by the Bishop of Elie, his Majesty's Almoner;" and in the succeeding reign it became memorable, and will ever continue so, for

The Imprisonment of King Charles 1st. In the following narrative, compiled from the journals of parliament, and scarce pamphlets in the British Museum and London Institution, the political negociations between the king and parliament, to avoid too great prolixity, are only slightly touched upon, and the greatest prominence given to those minute incidents and circumstances, which, whilst they are more immediately associated with the place, are beneath the dignity of general history. The decisive battle of Naseby led to the irretrievable ruin of the royal cause; and the king despairing of a reconciliation with his enemies, and finding his personal safety insecure, voluntarily surrendered himself to the Scotch army, then at Newark on Trent. The lords and commons immediately joined in a vote, "that the person of the king shall be disposed of as both houses of the parliament of England should think fit." The Scotch strenuously contended for a concurring right in the disposal of the royal prisoner, but eventually consented to deliver him up to the English parliament on the stipulated payment of £400,000 by instalments, for the alleged arrears of wages due to their army. The king being thus placed in the power of parliament, the lords, on the 22nd Dec. 1646, proposed that he should be removed to Newmarket, and referred their vote to the commons, who, on the 24th, substituted Holdenby-house, in the county of Northampton, as the most eligible place; and on the 29th, the speaker of the lords reported a conference with the commons, at which this amendment was adopted, on the ground of Holdenby being more capacious and better calculated for the reception of the royal retinue; and "in the heart of the kingdom, safer and fitter for addresses "to his majesty." Accordingly, it was "resolved (31 Dec.) by the lords and commons assembled in parliament, "that Holdenby-house be the place which the houses think fit for the king to come unto; there to remain with "such attendants about him as both houses of parliament shall appoint, with respect had to the safety and preservation of his person, in the preservation and defence of the true religion and libertie of the kingdom, according "to the covenants; and when the king shall be at Holdenby as aforesaid, and the Scotts forces gone out of this "kingdom, the two houses of parliament declare, that then they will be ready, according to their former declarations for preserving the peculiar rights of the kingdom of England, to join with the kingdom of Scotland in "employing their best endeavours to procure his majesty's assent to the propositions agreed on by both kingdoms, and presented to his majesty at Newcastle; and to the disposing of the bishops' lands, according to the "ordinances already past both houses in that behalf: and in case the king should not give his assent thereunto, "the two houses are resolved still to maintain the happy union already settled between the kingdoms, according to "the treaties and covenant." A copy of this resolution, with the hypocritical preface of "We, your majesty's "loyal subjects," was (1 Jan. 1646-7) ordered to be conveyed to the king at Newcastle on Tyne, the head quarters of the Scotch army; and Philip earl of Pembroke, Bazil earl of Denbigh, and Edward lord Montagu, on the part of the lords; and sir John Cooke (Coke), sir John Holland, sir Walter Earle, and sir James Harrington, barts. John Crewe, esq. and major-general Browne, on the part of the commons, were appointed to receive his person from the Scots, conduct him with convenient speed to Holdenby, and attend upon, or rather guard, him during his stay; their instructions being "to take care that no person that has been in arms, or assisted in this unnatural "war against the parliament, nor any other but such as (they) shall think fit and allow of, may come, or deliver "or send unto him any letters or messages:" and by an additional instruction (9 Feb.), any three of them were empowered to examine or search all or any persons, papers, or packets, at their discretion; and to secure and restrain all suspicious persons, until the pleasure of both houses of parliament be known.

It having been referred to the committee for receiving the king's person, to nominate who should be employed in the king's service, they recommended (11 Jan.) Mr. Thomas Herbert, Mr. Salkeld, Mr. Maxwell as groom of the bedchamber, Mr. Anstye, Mr. Mall (Mawle), Mr. Gibbs, Mr. Corbett, sir Oliver Fleminge, who was willing to go, if he house would allow him to appoint a deputy; Dr. Wilson as physician; and the cup-bearer, carver, barber, and cooks then in attendance to be continued, unless they have been in arms against the parliament. The house of lords appointed Mr. Babington to be the king's barber, and directed that Mr. Maxwell might act as groom of the bedchamber, but in no other "capacity or construction." The committee of lords and commons for the order of the king's household and servants at Holdenby, on the 4th Feb. proposed the annexed list of the number of servants for the respective offices and departments; and that in filling up the situations, the preference should be given to those servants who had remained in London faithful to the parliament.

At their next sitting (5 Feb.) the committee proposed that the communion-plate, which was formerly set on the altar in his majesty's chapel of Whitehall, consisting of "one gilt shyppe, two gilt vases, two gilt Euyres (Ewers), "a square basonn, and fountaine, and a silver rod," should be melted down to make plate for the king's use at Holdenby, there being none remaining in the jewel office fit for service; and at the same time they submitted the following estimate of the expences of his majesty and his retinue at Holdenby for 20 days, commencing 13 Feb. and ending 4 March, inclusive, 1646-7.

The proposition respecting the communion-plate was confirmed by the commons (6 Feb.), and £3000 ordered to be provided for the necessary expences of the king and the commissioners. The first remittance to colonel Graves, the governor of Holdenby, was made under the direction of parliament, by the committee sitting at Goldsmith's hall, out of the unappropriated fines of delinquents; and the committee of lords and commons having previously represented the revenue to be inadequate to any additional burden, and the national finances becoming daily more deranged, the whole charge of the establishment was, by a vote of the commons (17 Mar.), reduced to £50 a day, one-third only of the original estimate.

The parliamentary commissioners, with their royal charge, accompanied by Mr. Stephen Marshall and Mr. Joseph Carrill, two ministers of the assembly of divines, as chaplains to the commissioners; and sir Fulk Greville, Mr. James Harrington (author of Oceana), Mr. Thomas Herbert, Mr. Anthony Mildman, Mr. Ansty, Mr. Babington, Mr. Muschampe, Mr. Clement Kinersly, Mr. Reading, and other private gentlemen, who had offered their personal services to the king, left Newcastle on the 30th of Jan. 1646-7; and on the 16th of Feb. the three lords commissioners thus announced their safe arrival to the earl of Manchester, speaker of the house of lords: "My lord, "By the providence of God, which hath gone along with us from the first step to the last in this journey, the king "is come well to Holdenby. Colonel Graves, who commanded the convoy, hath managed his trust with great "care and vigilancy, and hath performed extraordinary duty in his own person, which we hold ourselves obliged "to represent unto you. We have here 900 horse and dragoons, which quartering within a little compass, cannot "but be very burdensome to the country; and therefore entreat your lordship to move the houses to give special "directions for their pay. We are here now, after five weeks spent in this service, attending their further orders, "according to the commands laid upon us in our first instructions. Our hope and earnest desire is, that our "employment being come to this period, you will be pleased to move their lordships to enjoin us to wait upon "them at London; which we shall acknowledge as a very great favor done, to, my lord, your lordships faithful "servents, Pembroke and Mountg.; B. Denbigh, Edw. Montagu."

The king reached "his princely manor of Holdenby on the 15th of February, having been something retarded "by reason of white weather." Many hundreds of the gentry of the county met the royal cavalcade two miles on this side Harborough, and "thousands and thousands" of spectators thronged the road, and hailed his majesty with acclamations, "causing many a smile from his princely countenance." A guard of honour was drawn up to receive him at Holdenby; and he entered his palace, and his prison, through the great court gate, with all the state and pomp of royalty. When his majesty's approach to his destination was announced at Northampton, there was great rejoicing; the bells rang, and cannon was discharged, "insomuch that a gallant echo made its "appeal at Holmby."

The commissioners proceeded to the regulation of the royal household; and waiting on his majesty in a body, humbly prayed him to discharge those persons who were with him at Oxford, and still continued in his service. The reluctance with which he acquiesced was evident, from his change of countenance, and the pause which preceded his reply; but after some expostulation he consented, no objection being made to his retaining his favorite grooms of the bedchamber, Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Mawl. Next day, the attendants came into the presence-chamber as usual; but after dinner, his majesty arose, and having informed them of what had passed, and dismissed Mr. Levington, Mr. Murray, Mr. Ashburnham, and Mr. Leg (Legge), he withdrew to his chamber, forbidding any one to intrude on his privacy. He afterwards, with the consent of the commissioners, appointed Mr. James Harrington and Mr. Thomas Herbert grooms of the bedchamber; and calling them to him, instructed them in the duty and services he expected from them.

No sooner was the king settled at Holdenby, than he dispatched a message to both houses of parliament (17 Feb.) for permission to have two or more of his chaplains, viz. the bishops of London, Salisbury, and Peterborough; and Drs. Sheldon, May, Sanderson, Bayly, Heywood, Beale, Fuller, Hammond, and Taylor, to attend upon him for the exercise of his conscience, and the assistance of his judgment, in deciding on the present differences respecting religion. So little, however, were his feelings and wishes regarded by either of the houses, that the lords contented themselves with ordering, that the letter be taken into consideration "to-morrow morning"

(20 Feb.), and never resuming the debate; and the commons—with simply ordering the letter to be read (20 Feb.), without moving any proceedings upon it. The king, anxious to be relieved from suspence and hope deferred, re-addressed (6 Mar.) both houses, in the following pathetic appeal: "It being now seventeene days since I wrote "to you from hence, and not yet receiving any answer to what I then desired, I cannot but now againe renew the "same unto you. And indeed, concerning any thing but the necessary duty of a Christian, I would not thus at "this time trouble you with any of my desires. But my being attended with some of my chaplaines, whom I "esteeme and reverence, is so necessary for me, even considering my present condition, whether it be in relation "to my conscience, or the happy settlement of the present distractions in Religion, that I will slight divers kinds "of censures, rather than not to obtain what I demand; nor shall I doe you the wrong as in this to doubt the "obtaining of my wish, it being totally grounded upon reason. For desiring you to consider (not thinking it "needfull to mention) the divers reasons which no Christian can be ignorant of, for point of conscience, I must "assure you that I cannot, as I ought, take in consideration those alterations in Religion, which have and will be "offered unto me, without such helpers I desire; because I can never judge rightly of, or be altered in, any thing "of my opinion, so long as my ordinary way of finding out the truth is denyed me; but when this is granted me, "I promise you faithfully not to strive for victory in Argument, but to seeke and submit to Truth (according to "that judgment which God hath given me), alwayes holding it my best and greatest conquest to give content-"ment to my two Houses of Parliament in all things which I conceive not to be against my conscience or "honour, not doubting likewise but that you will be ready to satisfie me in reasonable things, as I hope to find in "this particular, concerning the attendance of my Chaplaines upon me." The lords rejected the request the same day it was presented (8 Mar.), and ordered Dr. Love to be sent to the king; but afterwards varied the form of their negative, by voting, that "if the king thinks fit to admit such of his Chaplains as have taken the covenant, "they are inclined to give them leave." The commons treated the royal application as before, with silent neglect.

The commissioners and their chaplains, Mr. Marshall and Mr. Carrill, used every exertion to prevail on the king to assent to the establishment of presbyterianism, and conform to the new directory; but though he discovered no reluctance to engage in social controversy with them, their reasoning made little or no impression on his judgment: he refused to join in "'Amen' to such praying as was against his conscience;" and "argued very "stiffly for episcopacy and the book of common prayer." The two chaplains preached in the chapel alternately every Sunday morning and afternoon to the commissioners and the household; and the king did not object to any of his retinue being present, though he himself chose rather to pass the day secluded in private devotion, than to sanction public religious services which he could not approve. During dinner and supper, the commissioners were uniformly in attendance on his majesty; and their chaplains offered to officiate in that capacity, but the king declined their services, and always "said grace himself standing under the state;" sometimes with an audible voice. After dinner he usually played at chess. He devoted two or three hours every day to reading and religious exercises. His favourite recreation was bowling; and the green at Holdenby being out of order, he frequently rode to the earl of Sunderland's at Althorp, or lord Vaux's at Boughton, to enjoy that amusement. When the weather would not permit, or he was disinclined to these excursions, he walked on the long gravel walk in the garden, accompanied by some of the commissioners; generally with the earl of Pembroke, who being infirm, could with difficulty keep pace with him; or general Browne, whom he distinguished by particular attentions. On these occasions one only associated with him, the rest keeping a respectful distance in some other part of the garden. The king conducted himself towards all of them with the greatest affability, and they in return observed every mark of external respect in their intercourse with him. The trust reposed in them was one of peculiar delicacy and responsibility, and they had the address to execute it to the satisfaction of the parliament, without rendering themselves personally obnoxious to his majesty. Their appointment could scarcely be considered voluntary, for in almost every communication they transmitted to parliament, they solicited their dismission with an earnestness bordering on remonstrance and reproach; and the restrictions by which they were bound must have been irksome and unpleasant, not being allowed to quit their post for the shortest period without leave of absence; and the earl of Pembroke being taken dangerously ill, his physician could not come to his relief, nor his own children and friends visit him, till an express order issued from the house of lords.

On the afternoon of the 9th of April, as the king was riding to Boughton to bowl, he alighted at a narrow bridge in the way (Brampton bridge), at the further end of which, stood major Bosville disguised in a country-man's habit, with an angle in his hand, as if he had been fishing, who was detected in privately conveying into the king's hand letters from the queen and prince (Charles). On his examination before the commissioners, he deposed, that he was with the king at Newcastle, who, on the morning he was delivered up by the Scotch, entrusted him with a letter from the queen, which he conveyed to her in France; and being charged with a packet in reply, he had lodged two nights in a furze bush, and three nights at the countryman's who had furnished him with his disguise, watching a favourable opportunity for delivering it into the king's hand; and if he had not succeeded, he had resolved to give it to the king in the presence of the commissioners, though at the hazard of his life. The house of commons ordered him to be sent for from Northampton by the sergeant-at-arms, but it does not appear how he was disposed of.

About a month afterwards, another attempt to convey secret information to the king was detected. Mrs. Mary Cave, daughter of Mr. William Cave, of Stanford in Leicestershire, undertook to deliver to the king a letter in ciphers, which she received from one Browne, who had brought it from Mr. Ashburnham, at the Hague. To attain her object, she engaged a female friend, who resided in the neighbourhood of Holdenby, to visit the landlady of captain Abbot, one of the king's guards, and through the landlady's influence, to persuade the captain to procure her the honor of kissing the king's hand; which having accomplished, she apprised Mrs. Cave of her success, and contracted with the landlady to receive her as a visitor, and endeavour through the captain to obtain for her also the honor of an introduction to his majesty, by which means she hoped to put the letter into his hand.

Mrs. Cave came, and the captain had good naturedly, but unsuspiciously, acceded to the request; when the lady imparted the plot to her husband, who, though a royalist and favorable to the design, dared not run the risk of detection, and divulged the secret to the captain. On the appointed day (11 May) the captain, who had apprised the commissioners of the circumstance, accompanied Mrs. Cave, who had no suspicion of having been betrayed, to Holdenby; and on her arrival she was carried into a room, but notwithstanding the most diligent search, nothing was found upon her. The letter was accidentally discovered a few days after behind the hangings of the room, where it seems she contrived to slip it whilst she stood with her back to the hangings, conversing with the ladies who searched her.

It was not till the 21st of April that any steps were taken by the parliament towards redeeming the pledge they had given to open a negociation with the king at Holdenby. On that day the commons voted the instructions for the commissioners, when they presented to the king "the propositions for a safe and well-grounded peace;" but here the matter rested, for the debates on the propositions in both houses were adjourned from time to time, without arriving at any decision; till the king, impatient of further delay, transmitted to the parliament (12 May) an answer to the propositions, as submitted to him at Newcastle; in which, amongst other important concessions, he agreed to vest the militia in the parliament for ten years, and confirm the establishment of presbyterianism and the new directory for three years; and expressed the strongest desire for a personal conference. The lords evinced a conciliatory disposition, and passed a vote to bring the king from Holdenby to Oatlands, in the vicinity of London; but the commons evasively replied to a message for their concurrence, that they would send an answer by a messenger of their own. In the midst of the vacillating deliberations of the parliament, as to the disposal of his majesty's person, he was snatched from their control by the bold daring of cornet George Joyce, and placed at the disposal of the army.

On the 2nd of June the commissioners dispatched an express to parliament, informing them of the arrival of a party of 700 horse at Kingsthorp, and that it was reported they intended seizing the king. Joyce, it is presumed, had that morning procured secret admission into Holdenby house; for in the narrative of "the army's preservation of the "king," it is said, he followed his majesty to Althorp to watch the motions of colonel Graves, and a Scotch lord (the earl of Dumferline), having observed them whispering in earnest conversation when the king mounted his horse to go there to bowl, which they had persuaded him to do, contrary to his original intention of taking a longer ride. At night the party rendezvoused on Harleston Heath; intelligence of which being brought to the commissioners by one of their scouts, the gates were closed, the king's guard doubled, and preparations made for defence; but colonel Graves, the governor, whose capture was said to be one of the leading objects of the enterprise, doubting the fidelity of the troops, he was reluctantly prevailed upon by the commissioners to secure his safety by a timely retreat. Soon after midnight, they advanced into the park, and began to surround the house, when the commissioners called a council of the officers of the guard, who coincided in opinion with the governor. Whilst they were yet debating what measures to adopt, they discovered them at break of day (3 June); the horse drawn up in front of the great gates at the back yard, where their own troops were stationed, who, instead of opposing the assailants, opened the gates and received them with open arms, mingling with them as they entered. The commissioners immediately sent captain Middleton to communicate with the chief officers, but he was told they had none—all commanded. Extraordinary as this may appear, it seems to have been the fact; they were composed of a selected detachment out of every regiment; and Joyce owed the command of the enterprise to the free election of his companions, and not to any authorised military appointment; for when captain Middleton urged them to send one or more to the commissioners to state their views and motives, cornet Joyce was deputed "by unanimous consent of the party." He protested to the commissioners that they were come for their protection, and the security of his majesty's person against a secret design, which they had reason to believe existed, to "steal away" the king, and raise a new army to suppress the one of which they formed a part, under general Fairfax. He then took leave of the commissioners for a time, lest he should disturb the king in his bed-chamber, to whom general Browne repaired to relieve his fears, and acquaint him with what had transpired. The official dispatch of the commissioners to the parliament states, that Joyce in the first instance asserted their object to be to bring colonel Graves to trial before a council of war, for having "scandalized the army," and being implicated in a plot to convey the king to London without the orders of parliament; and that in the written declaration which he afterwards at their suggestion prepared and delivered to them, the colonel is intended, though his name is not mentioned. Joyce, having set the guards and placed the sentinels, returned to the commissioners towards noon, and assured them, if they would give him orders, he would see them obeyed, provided they were just and consistent with the king's security. A short respite of apparent tranquillity ensued, till Joyce, discovering the flight of Graves, the governor, and hearing it insinuated that he was gone for succours, promptly summoned his associates, and it was unanimously resolved, for the "peace-sake of the kingdom," that his majesty should be removed with all possible expedition. The cornet informed the commissioners of this determination at 10 o'clock at night, and demanded an instant audience of the king: some of them remonstrated, and detained him in conversation till his majesty was asleep in bed; but, deaf to entreaties, and equally insensible to delicacy of feeling or courtly etiquette, he remained inexorable to his purpose. According to sir Thomas Herbert, then Mr. Herbert, one of the king's pages, his conduct was brutal and outrageous in the extreme. "Centinels," he says, "were ordered by Joyce to "be set at the commissioners' chamber-doors, that he might with less noise carry on his design, and find way to "the Back-stairs, where the Grooms of his Majesty's Bed-chamber attended. The Cornet being come to the "Door in rude manner knock'd; those within asking who it was that in such uncivil manner, and so unseasonable "a time came to disquiet the King's Rest; the Cornet replied, his name was Joyce, an Officer of the Army, sorry "he should disquiet the King, but could not help it, for speak with him he would, and that presently.

"This strange Confidence of his, and the Posture he was in (having a cockt Pistol in his hand), amazed these "four gentlemen, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Mawl, Mr. Harrington, and Mr. Herbert, whose Duty it was and Care to pre-"serve his Majesty's Person, and were resolved to sacrifice their Lives rather than give him admittance; they in "the first place ask'd Joyce if he had the Commissioners' approbation for his Intrusion: he answer'd, No; for he "had ordered a Guard to be set at their Chamber-doors, and that he had his Orders from those that feared them "not. He still press'd for Entrance, and engaged his word to do the King no harm: they on the other side per- "suaded him to lay aside his Arms, and to forbear giving disturbance, the King being then asleep; assuring him, "that the next morning he should have his Majesty's Answer to his Errand. The Cornet refused to part with "either Sword or Pistol, and yet insisted to have the Chamber-door opened. But these Gentlemen keeping firm "to their Resolution, that he should not enter, the Noise was so loud (which in this Contest could not be avoided) "as it seems awakened his Majesty, for he rung his Silver Bell, at which Mr. Maxwell went into the Bed-chamber "to know the King's Pleasure, the other three Gentlemen meantime securing the Door. The King, being "acquainted with the Business and uncivil Carriage of the Cornet, sent word, he would not rise nor speak with "him until morning; which being told the Cornet, he huff'd; but seeing his Design could not be effected in the "night, he retired; so as for a few hours there was silence." Implicit credit must not however be given to Herbert's representation; for unquestionable proofs exist of Joyce having been admitted into the royal presence that night*; and none of the commissioners' dispatches contain the most distant allusion to any personal violence being offered to the king or to themselves. Joyce, on entering his majesty's room, found him in bed, and apologized for having disturbed him out of his sleep; to which the king replied, no matter, if you mean me no hurt. He then announced his intention of removing his majesty from Holdenby, which the king opposed at first, but ultimately consented, on condition that the assurances given him by the cornet were confirmed by the soldiery under his command. The party were mounted in marching order by 6 o'clock in the morning (4 June), and being drawn up in the first court before the house, his majesty descended from his chamber, and addressing them from the top of the steps said, that cornet Joyce having, at an unseasonable hour of the night, proposed conveying him to the army, he was come to give his answer in the presence of them all; he protested that he came to Holdenby, not by constraint (though not so willingly as he might have done), for the purpose of communicating with the parliament; and that having sent several messages to them, he considered himself in some degree bound to wait here for answers: yet, if satisfactory reasons could be given, he would go with them, even though opposed by the commissioners. Joyce replied, that their only motive for securing his majesty's person was to prevent the kingdom being involved in another war; a plot, contrived by some members of both houses of parliament, having existed for the last four years, to overthrow the laws of the kingdom, and convey his majesty to a new army, to be raised for that purpose. The king denied all knowledge or belief of any such design or intended army; and turning to the cornet, who stood at the foot of the stairs in front of the troops, desired to know his authority for securing his person: the soldiery of the army, said Joyce. The king replied, that he knew no lawful authority in England, but his own: and next under him, the parliament; but asked whether he had any verbal or written authority from general Fairfax? He is only a member of the army, rejoined the cornet. The king, dissatisfied with this reply, insisted, that Fairfax, being their general, was not properly a member, but the head of the army: at least he is included in it, said Joyce. Then deal ingenuously with me, returned the king, and tell me what commission you have? Here is my commission, Joyce answered. Where? enquired the king. Behind me, retorted Joyce, pointing to the soldiers. The king smiling, observed, it was a fair, well-written commission, legible without spelling, but to seek an answer with so many gallant men at his back, were to extort it; and added, if I should still refuse, I hope you would not force me: I am your king, and you ought not to lay violent hands on your king, for I acknowledge none to be above me here, but God. Joyce trusted his majesty would not drive them to resort to those means which they would be necessitated to use if he persisted in his refusal; and entreated him to accompany them willingly, promising that the commissioners should continue to attend him in discharge of their duty to the parliament. Joyce had in his interview with the king the preceding night, engaged that he should retain his servants, be treated with honor and respect, and not be forced in any thing contrary to his conscience; and on the king now repeating these stipulations, they were carried by general acclamation. The king enquiring where they intended taking him, Joyce first proposed Oxford, then Cambridge, and Newmarket was finally adopted at the suggestion of his majesty, who was about to retire, when some one whispering him, he returned, and the commissioners came forward to interrogate the troops. Lord Montagu, holding the written authority of the parliament in his hand, said, gentlemen, we are entrusted with the care of the king by both houses; will you sanction cornet Joyce's proposition? and was answered by a cry of all, all. Sir John Cooke followed, and protested against the king's removal; declaring, that if he had forces at his command, he would resist it with his life: in which declaration he was joined by Mr. Crewe. Major-general Browne spoke last to the same purport; adding, that it was not the first time he had been at the head of such a party, and he dare affirm, there were scarcely two in the ranks knew what the cornet had proposed to the king, although they cried, all, all; and raising his voice, called upon those who wished his majesty to continue there with the commissioners to avow themselves; but the appeal was received with an universal shout of, none, none. As the king turned to go into the house, major Tomlins, who had succeeded colonel Graves, regretted his inability to oppose Joyce's party, the guards having positively refused to obey his orders.

The king being seated in his coach, called into it the earls of Pembroke and Denbigh; and lord Montagu, and the commissioners of the house of commons, following, well mounted, the degraded monarch and his retinue quitted Holdenby under the command of a mean subaltern officer, and reached Hinchingbrook, near Huntingdon, that evening.

General Fairfax solemnly disclaimed any prior intimation of this mysterious enterprise, which is supposed to have originated with Cromwell; but whoever gave the orders, they were verbal; no one ever avowed them, and Joyce ostensibly acted on his own responsibility. Every stage of his proceedings was however forwarded express to the head-quarters of the army; and Fairfax, on receipt of the first intelligence of the flight of Graves, detached colonel Whalley with his regiment to supersede him in the guard at Holdenby; and by way of precaution directed two other regiments of horse to follow, in order to assist if needful; but the news speedily arriving of the king's removal from Holdenby, a courier was dispatched to Whalley, ordering him to direct his course towards Huntingdon, between which place and Cambridge he met the royal party (5 June), and conformably to his instructions proposed to escort his majesty back to Holdenby; but the king refused to return, insisting, that having been brought from thence, though against his will, he would not be posted from place to place; and the commissioners, in the absence of directions from the parliament, declining to advise or interfere, the king was permitted to pursue his route towards Newmarket. In the interim, the parliament were thunderstruck by this unexpected blow; yet even their mutual jealousy of the army, failed to effect a cordial coalition between the two houses; for the commons, when reminded by a message from the lords (5 June) of the vote (20 May) for removing the king to Oatlands, repeated their former reply, that they would send an answer by messengers of their own; passing at the same time a resolution for bringing back his majesty to Holdenby (7 June); and being again (11 June) pressed by the lords on the same subject, they neither took the message into consideration, nor communicated their own vote substituting Holdenby. A few days brought the two houses to a better understanding, and they joined in a vote (15 June) desiring general Fairfax to deliver his majesty to their commissioners, who were to convey him to Richmond, escorted by colonel Rossiter. Their injunctions were disregarded, and they made another unsuccessful effort to recover possession of the king's person, concurring in a vote (29 June) for his return to Holdenby, which they transmitted (1 July) to general Fairfax, requiring him to see it put into execution; but the king hesitating to comply, and being secretly supported, if not instigated, by the army, they had no longer the power to enforce their authority, and their vote became a mere dead letter.

Some idea of the extent and magnificence of this mansion may be formed, from the capabilities it afforded for the reception of the royal suite. "The Court," says sir Thomas Herbert, "was accommodated with all things "needful, both in Reference to the King, and likewise to the Commissioners, their Chaplains, Gentlemen, "Attendants, and others, and all within the King's House, without straitning: and all the Tables were as well "furnish'd as they used to be when his Majesty was in a peaceful and flourishing state." Sir Thomas was partially mistaken in stating that "about two years after, that beautiful and famous Structure was, amongst other his "Majesty's Royal Houses, pull'd down by order of the two Houses of Parliament, to satisfie the Soldiers' Arrears;" for by reference to the preceding manorial history, it will be seen, that it was standing when the estate was alienated by the trustees for the sale of the crown lands; and the value of the house for building materials, and of the timber on the domain, being held out by them as alluring baits to the purchaser, tempted him perhaps to the work of destruction. Avarice makes no sacrifice to taste; and the axe was laid to the root of the groves, and the palace levelled to the ground, by the Yorkshire speculator; reserving only a portion of the attached offices, probably, for his own habitation. From a careful inspection of the remains, aided by the personal and traditionary information of an old inhabitant, whose father and grandfather resided on the spot, I have been enabled satisfactorily to retrieve the original outline of this interesting mansion. The principal front faced the east, and the two archways now standing, were the lateral entrances to the principal court. The foundations of the central entrance my informant remembers being dug up close to the wall which bounds the adjoining field: the postern gate, at the north end of this wall, communicated with the stables and coach-houses, which ranged eastward, nearly on the site of the cottages on the south side the green; eastward of these was a large gateway, removed within these few years; beyond which were the malt-house, and probably the dairy already alluded to, and other buildings, the remnants of which are converted into a farm house; the whole of the premises stretching considerably above a furlong in length. Part of the materials were removed to Northampton, where three houses which sprung from them may still be recognised *. The devastating process seems to have been arrested by the restoration of royalty, when the purchase was compulsorily relinquished; some of the surrounding trees and gateways were saved, but it was too late to restore the edifice, which, as observed by Evelyn, "shewed like a Roman ruine, shaded by the "trees about it, a stately, solemn, and pleasing view." It now presents a still more striking and melancholy picture of departed grandeur, crowning the summit of a ridge of hill. Even the pyramid, and other fragments in Buck's view (1729) have now disappeared; the house inhabited by a farmer has been reduced from a double to a single roof; and the intervening space to the gateways is a shapeless mass of earth mounds and foundations. In front to the south were the gardens; and down a rather precipitous slope, the long parallel lines of terrace walks divided into stages by broad platforms, are still visible, as represented in the accompanying vignette. At the extremities of the grounds are dry fish ponds and artificial mounts; and the air of desolation which pervades the whole, is finely contrasted by the rich woods and cultivated scenery of Althorp park on the opposite hill. The two lateral gateways are of uniform design, and dated 1583. Over the arch, within a circle, is the atchievement of the lord chancellor, with 14 quarterings.—1. Hatton; 2. barry of four (Ar. and G.), three lozenges in chief, and three in base (counterchanged), Crispin; 3. The Village is comprised in a few houses and cottages scattered round a small green contiguous to the north-east of the old mansion, and about six miles distant from Northampton. In the time of Bridges, there were

* Mr. Markham's, in St. Giles's Street, which was advertized in one of the early Northampton Mercuries by the name of Little Holmby; Mr. Munday's, in Gold-street; and Miss Fawcett's, in the Drapery.

'seventeen houses, and three others in the grounds[h].' By the census of 1801, it contained 29 houses and 109 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, it was returned to have 163 inhabitants, and only 26 houses. The annual quota of land tax-for this parish, is £206, at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £4703. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £149. 17s. 11d. at 1s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after All Saints.

Advowson. In 9 Ric. 1 (1197), Juliana de Burgaville appointed her husband, Philip de Oxedon, her attorney, to appear in her behalf before Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, in a plea against Henry de Pinkeni, for the advowson of the church of "Andebi[i]." The decision may be inferred to have been in Pinkeni's favour, for the advowson was subsequently attached to the manor held under that family by the Ardens, and was retained by their representatives, the Chambres, when they alienated the manor by a further sub-infeudation to the Holdenbys. It is afterwards found in possession of sir Christopher Hatton, the lord chancellor, and of king James 1st; and not being included in the subsequent sale to Duras, probably from his being disqualified from exercising the patronage by being a papist, it has continued in the crown to the present day.

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[k], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1.)[l], it was rated at 12 marks (£8) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), at £20. 13s. 4d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. in synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[m].

The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative, in the gift of Adam Baynes, esq. worth £44 per ann.; and that Samuel Stable, the incumbent, was resident[n]. To the above £44 per ann. a yearly stipend of £36 was afterwards added, called the duke of Marlborough's gratuity, making together £80 per ann.; which continued to be received by the successive rectors, till the present incumbent, by a suit in chancery, recovered the great and small tithes of the whole parish. There is neither parsonage-house nor glebe.

He appears to have resigned the vicarage of Higham Ferrars for this benefice; and obtained the vicarage of Rowell in 1638, and of Sepulchre in Northampton in 1640. Samuel Stable was incumbent in 1655, but Hill was re-instated at the restoration. In 1763 the rectory of South Kilworth in Leicestershire, another crown living, was given to him, which he continued to hold with this benefice. He published "National Virtue the condition of National Happiness;" a fast sermon on 2 Chron. vii. v. 14; 1757. He died 5 May 1775, aged 46, and was buried in South Kilworth church-yard[r]. His successor,

All the early Registers have been destroyed. The marriage register commences in 1754; but the baptisms and burials not until 1796.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands in a small church-yard, walled round at the expence of Mr. Amiand, about a furlong south of the house, at the foot of the hill in the same field. It consists of a low embattled tower, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. Amongst the items valued to king James when he purchased Holdenby, were six bells in the steeple, "made by the Lord Chauncellor Hatton, weighing seaven thowsand "weight," worth £166. 13s. 4d. which have been removed as private property, and two small ones substituted. The south front of the church is of the 14th century; the windows have dripstones springing from corbels; the buttresses have angular terminations; and a tablet runs through the buttresses, and under the windows. The north front is of inferior stone, and later erection, with plain square-headed windows. The interior is only partly pewed. Nearly the whole area west of the north and south entrances is an open space; and the breadth, exceeding the length of the church, produces a singular effect. The tower is 15 ft. long, by 9 ft. 2 in. wide; the nave and aisles 39 ft. long; the nave 18 ft.; the north aisle 11 ft. 6 in.; and the south aisle 21 ft. 6 in. wide; making a total width of 51 ft.; and the chancel 29 ft. 3 in. long, by 16 ft. 4 in. wide. A large octagonal font, with projecting kneeling stone, is attached to the pillar under the western arch of the south aisle: on each of the upper faces is a shield blazoned. 1. Holdenby, impaling G. a chevron O. between 10 besants, Zouch; 2 Holdenby, impaling, S. a lion rampant Arg. Verdon; 3. Holdenby, impaling De la Carvile; 4. Holdenby, impaling, S. a raven, within a border Ar. Raven of co. Beds; 5. Holdenby, impaling Mortimer of Grendon; 6. Holdenby, impaling, G. semée of cross crosslets (O.), three lucies or pikes hauriant Ar. Lucy; 7. Hatton, impaling Holdenby. The nave is divided from each aisle by three spacious pointed arches on low octagonal pillars with plain mouldings. In the window at the west end of the south aisle, are two small figures of saints, and above them a shield, 1 and 4, Ar. a mullet S. .....; 2 and 3, Hallom, quartering Hatton; which I apprehend ought to have been reversed. The chancel is entered through a very handsomely carved oak screen, the gift of Mr. Amiand. On each side are five wooden stalls, with ornamented turn-up seats.

Monumental Inscriptions:

5. A slab, which formerly had a shield at each corner. On a brass tablet at the centre:

7. On a white alabaster slab are engraved two figures, the size of life: the man is in plate armour; the woman in a plain close dress, with a cap turned up in front, and falling down in lappets at the sides. It is partly covered by a pew, and the inscription is therefore supplied from Bridges:

> Hic jacet Willi'us Holdynby & Margareta

CHANCEL.

17. In the middle of the chancel is a large white stone, with two cross bones in a raised shield at top; and beneath, an inscription in peculiar characters, which appears to have been studiously defaced. Bridges conjectures the date to have been 1570.

Bridges records the following memorials, which no longer remain: 'Under an arch in the south ile is a 'wooden statue of a man in a buttoned gown, with an 'iron sword and head-piece laid by him, but without 'any inscription. At a small distance upon a raised 'pavement is a black marble, on which was the effigies 'of a man in brass, with a coat of arms on each side his 'head, and a brass tablet at his feet, but the whole is 'now gone[t].'

CHANTRY. 'In the fifteenth year of Richard II. (1391), Robert de Holdenby obtained licence to found a 'chauntry, in a chapel to the honour of the blessed Virgin, within his mansion house here, and endowed it with 'three messuages, one toft, one bovate, and five acres of arable land in Holdenby and Estofte.' It is not noticed in the general certificate of chantries previous to their dissolution in the reign of Edward 6th.

KISLINGBURY.

In domesday "Ciselingeberie," and "Ceselingeberie," is probably compounded of the saxon ceosel, gravel, and ing, meadow, prefixed to the british beria, an earth-enclosure, or sometimes a flat wide meadow. If the latter sense be adopted, the two first syllables will be converted into a reduplication of the original name in a subsequent language, combined with the characteristic of a portion of the soil. The open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 19 Geo. 3 (1779); and the whole lordship contains 1808 acres; of which the rector, in right of his church, has 226 acres; Mr. John Watts about 100 acres; Mr. Richard Harris about 150 acres; Mr. William Simons and Mr. John Manning about 100 acres each; and the residue is dispersed in small freeholds. It is bounded on the north by the western branch of the river Nen, which divides it from Harpole; on the east by Kislingbury brook, which separates it from Upton; on the south-east by Rothersthorp in Wymersley hundred; on the south and south-west by Bugbrook; and on the north-west by Upper Heyford. The soil varies from dark loam to gravel; and there is a large proportion of natural meadow and pasture. Elm is the principal timber. This lordship does not furnish many scarce plants: Salix amygdalina, Almond-leaved Willow; Picris echioides, prickly Oxtongue; Sisymbrium terrestre, annual Water-cress; Rumex paludosus, marsh Dock; Sium latifolium, Great Water Parsnep.

Two mills are mentioned in domesday. There is now only one mill on the river; but the situation of the other may be presumed from the name of Mill lane, near the parsonage.

MANORIAL HISTORY. GAUNT FEE[*]. ARMENTERS MANOR. The saxon proprietor of Kislingbury was Tonna, a considerable thane, who held also (with sac and soc, or the privilege of holding courts, and exercising other jurisdictions) Stowe, part of Heyford, Easton near Stamford, and Empingham in Rutlandshire; all of which were bestowed by the Conqueror on Gilbert de Gaunt, under whom "Ceselingeberie" was held at the domesday survey by one Goisfrid or Geoffrey. It contained three hides and a half. The arable land was 10 caracates. In demesne were three caracates, and a hide and a half, with 10 servants; and 22 villeins and seven bordars had four caracates. There were two mills worth 40s. yearly, 14 acres of meadow, and 10 acres of wood. The whole had been valued at £4 yearly, but was then increased to £6 yearly[u]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, there were returned to be three hides and a half in "Kyselyngbyr" of the fee of Gilbert de Gaunt[x]. Of this family and its representatives, the paramount lords of this manor, an account will be given under STOWE, the head of the honor of Gaunt in this county.

Geoffrey, the subtenant of domesday, I strongly suspect to have been ancestor of the family of Armenters, who had the manors and advowsons of Stowe and Kislingbury, and gave portions of the tithes of both to St. Andrew's priory in the 12th century. In that portion of the Testa de Nevill, which was compiled about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Geoffrey de Armenters is certified to hold two fees in "Kyselingbury" of the honor of Gaunt[y]. Alicia, widow of John de Armenters, and then wife of Thomas Maleeake, brought a writ of dower in 21 Edw. 1 (1292-3), when the manors of "Kyslingbury" and Nether Heyford, and Stowe, Magna and Parva, with Burleigh in Rutlandshire, were extended and assigned to her[z]. Alicia de Lisle was on this occasion declared to be the next heir of the said

John de Armenters; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-6), Nicholas de Segrave was in her right lord of Kislingbury[a]. His successor was Warine de Insula or Lisle, son and heir of Alice by her first husband, who, joining in the insurrection against Edw. 2, was taken prisoner and executed at Pontefract. His estate escheating to the crown, the custody of this manor, with those of Kingston (Lisle), Beden, and Lamburn in Berkshire, Mundford in Nottinghamshire, and Heydon in Essex, parcel of his possessions, were committed by the king to Alice his widow[b]. Gerard de Lisle, son of Warine, in plea to a quo warranto, 3 Edw. 3 (1329), substantiated his claim to free warren in the demesne lands of his manors of Stowe and "Kyselynbury" of the grant of Hen 3, to Geoffrey de Armenters, from whom the privilege descended successively to his sons John and Henry, and his daughter Alice, whose son Warine was succeeded by Gerard, the present claimant[c].

This manor was assigned in dower to Anne his widow, who survived him above half a century, and died 13 Hen. 4 (1411-2), leaving Margaret her daughter and heiress by a subsequent marriage, aged 12 years; but Kislingbury passed to

Thomas lord Berkeley, widower of Alice, daughter and heiress of Warine de Lisle[d]. The inquisitions of the Lisles will be incorporated in the pedigree reserved for STOWE, which will embrace the descent of the female line through the noble houses of Berkeley, Beauchamp earl of Warwick, and Nevill lord Latimer. On the partition of the inheritance of John, the last lord Latimer, amongst his four daughters and coheiresses, the manor and advowson of Kislingbury were (int. al.) allotted to

Elizabeth, the youngest, then wife of sir JOHN DANVERS; and in Nov. 1610, she, with her second husband, sir Edmund Carey, joined her son Henry lord Danvers, afterwards earl of Danby, in alienating them[e].

The manor, mill, and a considerable portion of the lands, were purchased by Richard and Samuel Maunsell, both of the Middle Temple, London, esquires; and Ralph Maunsell, of London, gent.; who, jointly by deed 9 Feb. 10 Jac. (1612-3), enfeoffed certain tenements and lands to charitable uses, which will be hereafter specified, and the feoffees under this bequest claim to be lords of the manor, and appoint a gamekeeper.

MORETON FEE*. BARONY OF (RICHARD) KEYNES†. LUNELL MANOR. In the time of Edward the Confessor, Leuric‡ had lands in "Ciselingeberie" rated at 10s. yearly, which at the domesday survey were doubled in value, and held under the earl of Moreton by William (Keynes). They consisted of half a hide. The arable land was one carucate and a half; of which one carucate and two acres of meadow were in the occupation of one villein, two bordars, and two servants[f]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 there was returned to be half an hide in "Kyselingbyr" of the fee of the earl of Leicester[g].

The branch of Keynes, who had the intermediate seignory of this estate, will be treated of under FARTHINGSTON. The mesne manor was granted out within a generation of the conquest, to a family indifferently written Luvell and Lunell; for the letters v and n in early records being perfectly similar, were convertible to either, at the discretion of subsequent transcribers. In the Testa de Nevill, about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), Hugh Luvell, in ward to Silvester de Everdon, had two parts of a fee in Farthingston, and the third part in Kislingbury, of the fees of the late Richard de Keynes, of the small fees of Moreton[h]; and in another part of that record, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), when of full age, he accounted for one small fee in Farthingston and Kislingbury, of the same tenure as before[i]. In 33 Edw. 3 (1359)[k], Philip Lunell, of FARTHINGSTON, senior, granted all his lands and services there and in "Kyse-"lyngbury," to feoffees, who re-conveyed the latter estate to the grantor and Alice his wife for life, remainder to his sons successively in fee tail, with similar remainder to Katherine his daughter, who inherited on the decease of her brothers without issue. In 2 Hen. 5 (1414-5), John Cok, of Lilbourn, to whom she and her second husband John Yate had, in 8 Hen. 4 (1406-7), sold their life interest in Farthingston and Kislingbury, released all his right and title therein to

Thomas Sydenhall†, son and heir of the said Katherine by her first husband. He was succeeded by a son of both names, whose eldest daughter and coheiress Joan, carried these estates in marriage to

Thomas Shuckburgh, of Shuckburgh in Warwickshire, esq.† By inquisition after the death of John Shuckburgh, esq. in 1632, he was found to die seised (int. al.) of Kislingbury manor, held of whom and by what service unknown, leaving Richard his son and heir, aged 30 years, who was afterwards knighted. Dame Grace, his widow, with John Shuckburgh, esq. their son and heir, alienated the capital messuage here, and four yard lands, &c. to the rev. Benjamin Tomkins of Harpole, in May 1658[k]; and the manor and remaining part of the estate was probably sold to different individuals about the same time.

Benjamin Atkins, of Fenny Stratford in Buckinghamshire, son and heir of Thomas Atkins, late of Northampton, deceased, and Francis Atkins, of London, younger son of Thomas, in 1703 conveyed in gross "the manor or "reputed manor of Kislingbury," by which I presume this manor is intended, to sir Thomas Samwell, bart. of UPTON[l]; from whom it has passed, with the other Samwell estates, down to Thomas Samwell Watson Samwell, esq.

The tenants of this manor are within the jurisdiction of the duchy of Lancaster, and owe suit and service to the court at West Haddon. The leet of part of the village belongs to the hundred court, which was formerly held here, but is now disused.

ST. ANDREW'S PRIORY TITHES, &c. Walter Lunell, by deed without date, gave to the prior and monks of St. Andrew's two parts or two thirds of the tithes of his demesne in Kislingbury, consisting of eight virgates of land, and of his house there, in all things titheable[m]; which grant was included in the confirmation charter of Hen. 1[n], between 1117 and 1128, and of St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln[o], between 1189 and 1200. Geoffrey de Armenters gave two parts or two thirds of the tithes of his demesne in Kislingbury and Stowe to the abbot and convent of St. Project, of Vermandois in Normandy, who, by agreement in 1178 (24-5 Hen. 2), farmed them to the prior of St. Andrew, at the yearly rent of one mark [p].

Henry de Armenters, with the consent of Isabel his wife, and David his eldest son, ratified the above grant to the Norman monks, on condition of their demising them to Richard the parson (rector) of Kislingbury for life, for one mark, to be annually paid to the abbot of St. James near Northampton [q]. In the confirmatory charter of St. Hugh bishop of Lincoln, the interest of the abbey of St. Project in this grant is not adverted to [r]. David de Armenters, son of Henry, granted to the priory of St. Andrew, the original donation of Geoffrey his grandfather to the abbey of St. Project [s]. Various proceedings between the two religious houses, reciting prior agreements, remain on record [t]; and in 1280 (8 Edw. 1), the abbot and convent of St. Project released and quit-claimed their tithes of the demesnes of Kislingbury and Stowe to the prior and monks of St. Andrew in perpetuity for an annual pension of one mark [u]. Two minute surveys or terriers were made at different times, describing the local situation and names of these demesne lands [x]. The priory of St. Andrew had also a mill at "Kyselyngbury," of the gift of Henry de Armenters, confirmed by his son David and grandson Henry [y]. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[z], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[a], the portion of tithes in Kislingbury belonging to the priory was valued at two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) per ann.; and the temporalities at 30s. per ann. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the temporalities stood the same, but the portion, then styled a pension, was valued at four marks (£2. 13s. 4d.) per ann. [b] After the dissolution, the tithes of grain and corn of the demesne lands of the site of the earl of Warwick's manor, and of the site of Sydenhall's manor in Kislingbury, parcel of the late monastery of St. Andrew, were (int. al.) granted, 30 Eliz. (1587-8), to Edmund Downing and Myles Doddinge in fee, at a reserved rent of £2. 13s. 4d. per ann.[c]. Thomas earl of Suffolk, by deed poll, dated 2 Dec. 7 Jac. (1609), reciting that the above grant was made by "a rate or particular" of an unjust and wrongful reprise and deduction; for which under value the patentees or their assigns were bound, under an act of parliament 43 Eliz. to pay to the crown after the rate of three-score years purchase; and that the king, by letters patent (12 Feb. 6 Jac.), had granted to him all sums of money and benefits whatsoever due to his majesty or his successors, by virtue of the aforesaid act of parliament concerning lands and tenements purchased of the crown below their real value, with full power to compound and agree with all persons so chargeable, and procure their pardon under the great seal; in consideration of £47 exonerated and discharged the then proprietor George Atkins, alias Atkinson, of Kislingbury, from all penalties and forfeitures to which he would be otherwise liable on account of the said grant [d]. An allotment of 90 a. 26 p. was awarded by the commissioners of inclosure for these impropriate tithes, which now belongs to Mrs. Russel, of Bugbrook, and Mrs. Needham, of Kislingbury, the daughters and coheiresses of the late rev. John Jephcott.

St. James's Abbey had a virgate of land in "Chilingesberia," which was confirmed by David de Armenters, the son of the donor [e]. In the taxations of 1254 [f] and 1291 [g], the abbey had 11s. 4d. per ann. here in rents; and at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 they were rated at 7s. 2d. per ann. [b]

Richard Simmes, gent. of Drayton near Daventry, died in 1593, seised (int. al.) of half a virgate of land in Kislingbury, and another half virgate, and an acre and a half of meadow in Kislingbury and Harpole, and all the fishery in and upon the Kislingbury water, parcel of the dissolved abbey of St. James, late purchased by him of Richard Knowles, esq. and John Randes, gent.; and Richard was son and heir aged 21 years [e].

St. David's Hospital at Kingsthorp had a water-mill at Kislingbury, probably the one originally given to St. Andrew's priory, and bestowed by that house on the hospital. It is not mentioned in the early taxations, but at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 it was rated at 46s. 8d. per ann. [b]

Neither of the Manor-Houses have been standing within memory. The site of one of them is in the Hall close, north-west of the church-yard.

The Village is between three and four miles from Northampton, at the northern extremity of the parish near the river, over which is a stone bridge leading at a short distance to the turnpike road from Northampton to Daventry. In the time of Bridges, 'the number of houses, including seven inhabited by the poor (was) eighty-'nine [h]'. By the census of 1801 it contained 104 houses and 482 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 120 houses and 541 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £161. 8s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3482. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £655. 10s. at 5s. in the £. The wake follows the feast of St. Luke.

The Advowson was immemorially regardant to Armenter's manor, till alienated in 1610 by Henry lord Danvers, in conjunction with Elizabeth his mother, and sir Edmund Carey her second husband, to the rev. Gamaliel Holloway [d]. In 1674 it was purchased of the trustees under the will of the rev. Samuel Holloway, by the rev. John Knighton; and of him in 1683 by Mrs. Mary Abbott, widow, who gave it to her son the rev. Thomas Abbott, by whom it was sold in 1707 to the rev. John Perkins. His son and heir John Perkins, of Orton in Leicestershire, esq. conveyed it in 1733 to the rev. Henry Jephcott, who devised it by his will to his eldest son the rev. John Jephcott, the late rector, and his issue male, remainder to his other son the rev. Henry Jephcott, late rector of Heyford, in fee tail; and it is now vested in the present rector, the rev. R. B. Hughes, in right of his wife Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of the contingent devisee [d].

The Rectory is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[i], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[k], it was valued at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting a portion of two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) per ann. to the prior of St. Andrew's; and at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it was rated at £21. 13s. 3d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton, and a yearly pension of 53s. 4d. (4 marks) to the prior of St. Andrew's [l]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage presentative worth £140 per ann. in the patronage of Mr. Ambrose Holbeach (trustee or mortgagee of Holloway), and that Richard Harris, the incumbent, was resident [m]. The rectory now consists of 4 a. 1 r. 11 p. of old inclosure or homestead; and 222 a. 0 r. 3 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure, in lieu of the glebe, and all tithes and moduses whatsoever due to the rector, except those arising out of cottages and old inclosures belonging to persons not entitled to sufficient allotments of land for their discharge, and which are exonerated by an annual rate tithe, amounting to £1. 8s. 4d.

The parsonage-house stands contiguous to the north-east side of the church-yard, and is a respectable residence built of Harleston stone, by the rev. Mr. Perkins, about a century ago.

William Archbold was presented by Richard Rokeby, clerk, by grant from John lord Latimer, and instituted 14 Feb. 1558-9. He was also vicar of Okeham in Rutlandshire, which he resigned in 1561. He held the rectory of Bugbrook a few months in 1560, and the vicarage of Blakesley from 1551 till his death, when he was succeeded in this rectory by

Gamaliel Holloway, A. M. who had recently purchased the advowson, was inst. 20 Sept. following, on the presentation of Thomas Chamberlaine, of Wickham, co. Oxon, esq. and George Wilkinson, of Greens Norton, gent. He was a grave and pious divine, but refusing to take the covenant, was ejected from his living by the parliamentary committee, when he was sixty years of age. He appears, however, to have continued here, and was buried 26 April 1651 [o]. His son Samuel, the eldest of 20 children, was educated for the church with a view to this living; but though he never obtained it, the incumbent appointed under the commonwealth having been confirmed at the restoration, he resided here, and was buried 24 May 1670, under the designation of "minister of God's holy word [o]."

Walker mentions two worthless successors of Holloway, of the names of Robert Rogers and John Wilmot [o]; but they could not have officiated long, for

Richard Harris ocurs in 1649. Bridges has confounded the date of his death with that of his predecessor Holloway, and placed it in 1651. 'He was succeeded by 'another

'Richard Harris, who married Mr. Holloway's daughter [p].' He held this rectory 43 years, and was buried here 27 April 1700 [n], when

Thomas Abbott, A. M. was presented by his mother Mary Abbott, widow, and inst. 9 Oct. 1700. He was vicar of St. Giles in Northampton from 1697, but resigned for this rectory, and was buried here .. Mar. 1708-9 [n]. His successor was the patron,

John Perkins, A. M. who was inst. 21 Apr. 1709, on the presentation of William Perkins. He was vicar of Orton on the Hill in Leicestershire, from 1705 to 1709; and subsequently succeeded to that manor in right of his wife Sarah, sister, and eventually heiress, of Samuel Steele, esq. He was buried here 21 Aug. 1728 [n]; and

Henry Brereton, of St. John Bap. coll. Oxf. LL. D. was presented by John Perkins, esq. and inst. 13 Nov. 1728. He was buried here 23 May 1736 [n]; and the patron,

The Registers commence in 1538, and are in good preservation.

The Church, dedicated to St. Luke, is situated in a spacious church-yard, at the north end of the village, and consists of an embattled tower (in which are five bells), supporting an octagonal spire, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel.

The inner door of the south porch has no shafts, but deep arch mouldings running down from the crown of the arch nearly to the ground, and the outer hollow studded with flowers. Both the aisles are lighted by square headed windows, having drip-stones with corbel heads. The chancel is built of ashler stone, and is a pleasing specimen of the decorated style of the 14th century in its simplest form. The east window is composed of five days; the mullions are cinquefoiled; and the intersections and branchings in the head, form a line of ogee arches, surmounted by oblong divisions, and subdivided into trefoils and quatrefoils. The drip-stone is supported by small corbel heads, the breadth only of the mouldings. The north and south windows are of three lights, but of corresponding tracery. In the sunk hollow, beneath the projecting cornice on the south side, heads and flowers are introduced alternately; and the same ornaments are repeated on a smaller scale in the hollow of the tablet under the windows and round the buttresses. The north side varies little from the south, except in having a plain flat cornice. The interior is partly new pewed. The tower is 14 ft. long, by 9 ft. wide; the nave and aisles 54 ft. long; the nave 16 ft. 1 in.; the north aisle 14 ft. 6 in.; and the south aisle 14 ft. wide; and the chancel 37 ft. long, by 15 ft. 5 in. wide. The nave, which is lofty, is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches, springing from octangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings. Attached to one of the pillars in the north aisle, is an handsome octagonal font, having a pannelled shaft, roses on the expanding spaces above, and a rose within a quatrefoil on each compartment of the basin. At the east end of the south aisle is an ornamented piscina. The chancel is entered from the nave, through an open arch. In the north wall is a singularly beautiful door of the same period as the exterior of the chancel. Like the inner door of the south porch, it has no shafts, and the architrave mouldings die into a shallow base. The outer moulding consists of a series of five leaved flowers resembling roses, growing on, or connected by, a running stem; and the inner one, of leaves instead of flowers, on a similar stem. The dripstone is terminated on the dexter side by a crowned head, with short hair and beard; and on the sinister side by a mitred head; probably intended as portraits of the contemporary king and bishop. At the east end of the south wall are three stone seats for the officiating priest, deacon, and subdeacon, between plain piers with capitals or bands of woven foliage, under cinquefoil arches, with angular pediments and finials. To the east of them, under a smaller arch and finial, is a piscina. On each side of the east window is a rich canopy, but the statues and brackets are destroyed.

Benefactions (vide p. 81). The consolidated charities vested in feoffees for the purposes specified in the parliamentary return now consist of 33 a. 3 r. 21 p. of land allotted by the commissioners of inclosure; together with the Red Lion Inn, 16 tenements or cottages, and certain quit-rents. The debt of £120, mentioned in the return, is redeemed, and the whole now produces about £75 per ann.

Welch's charity for apprenticing children comprises 4 a. 3 r. 11 p. allotted under the inclosure act, and now lets for £10 per ann.

The Reverend Thomas Seaton, whose parents resided here, but who is said to have been born at Stamford in Lincolnshire about the year 1684, by his will dated 6 Mar. 1736-7, in which he describes himself of Ravenston in Buckinghamshire, makes the following bequest. "After the decease of my wife, I give my Kislingbury estate "above-mentioned (consisting of one yard land and a half), to the university of Cambridge for ever; the rents of "which shall be disposed of yearly by the vice chancellor for the time being, as he, the vice chancellor, the "master of Clare hall, and the greek professor for the time being, or two of 'em, shall agree; which three persons "aforesaid shall give out a subject, which subject shall for the first year be one or other of the perfections or "attributes of the Supreme Being, and so the succeeding years till that subject is exhausted; and after, the "subjects shall be either death, judgment, heaven, hell, purity of heart, or whatsoever else may be judged by the vice "chancellor, master of Clare hall, or greek professor, to be most conducive to the honour of the Supreme Being "and recommendation of virtue. And they shall yearly dispose of the rent of the abovesaid estate to that master "of arts whose poem on the subject given shall be best approved of by 'em; which poem I ordain to be always "in English, and to be printed; the expence of which shall be deducted out of the product of the estate, and the "residue given as a reward for the composer of the poem, or ode, or copy of verses. And the reason of my thus "ordaining it is, the language being changeable, and words growing obsolete, the Great God might ever have his "attributes and perfections celebrated, and extolled in a style perfectly adapted to the taste and understanding of "every succeeding generation; and that virtue may be represented also to the world in the most amiable view." This estate now consists of 27 a. 3 r. 20 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure. A list of the Seatonian prize poems from the commencement in 1750 to 1801, is given in the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. lxxi. 303; lxxix. 1030; lxxxiii. ii. 447; lxxxix. ii. 445. In the series will be found "Death," by Porteus; "The Day of Judgment," by Glynn; and many other productions of distinguished merit.

RAVENSTHORP

Includes the hamlets of Teton and Coton; the latter of which will be treated of under Guilsborough hundred, in which it is locally situated. The orthography of Ravensthorp has varied but little since domesday, where it occurs as "Ravenestorp," and may with some probability be assigned to the saxon thopp, the town or village of Ravene, the first proprietor. It contains, exclusive of the hamlets, about 1430 acres, and was inclosed by act of parliament 35 Geo. 3 (1795). The principal proprietors are, lord Willoughby de Brooke, the lord of the manor, who has about 210 acres; Mrs. Bateman, of Guilsborough, as lessee of the impropriate rectory under the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, about 170 acres, and about 70 acres of freehold; the vicar, in right of his church, about 60 acres; Mr. William Lantsbery, of Spratton, about 150 acres; Christopher Smyth, of Northampton, esq. about 140 acres; and Mr. John Clark, about 110 acres. The parish is bounded on the north by Guilsborough, in the hundred of that name; on the east by Creton, in Guilsborough hundred, and Spratton, in Spelho hundred; south-east and south by East Haddon; south-west by a small part of Long Buckby, in Guilsborough hundred; and west by a brook, which rises in this parish, and divides it from West Haddon, in the same hundred. There is considerable diversity both of soil and surface. A large proportion of the lordship is good light arable land, intermixed abruptly with strong clay, and in the western part of the field with gravel. The ash grown here is distinguished for its goodness[r]. There is neither water nor windmill.

Manorial History. Peverel Fee*. Goldington Manor†. At the domesday survey Drogo† held of William Peverel an hide and a virgate of land in "Ravenestorp." The arable land was three carucates, cultivated by three socmen, three villeins, and five bordars. There were three acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 10s. yearly, but was then doubled in value[t]. '[u] In Hen. I's time this lordship was in the hands of Peter de Goldington, who had a grant of free warren in Cotes and Ravensthorp, in the same manner his ancestors had before him.' In the hydarium of Hen. 2, there were returned to be four hides in "Ravenestorp and Chetu" (Teton), of the fee of Peverel[v]. By the inquisition of knight's fees belonging to escheated honors in the hands of the crown 13 Joh. (1211), it appears that Peter de Goldington had four fees of the honor of Peverel in different counties; of which one fee and three parts or three quarters was at Cotes in Northamptonshire[w]. In the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Peter de Goldington, son of the former, was certified to hold one fee and a half in "Ravenestorp," Coton, Teton, Hollowell, Winwick, Thurnby, and Cold Ashby, of the honor of Peverel[x]. He died in 37 Hen. 3 (1252-3), seised of the manor of Cotes (Coton), of which the other places were considered members, and consequently included, though not named, leaving three daughters and coheiresses, Dionisia, Isabella, and Matilda[y]; between whom and their then husbands, Milo de Hastings, William de Nodariis or Nowers, and Alan Fitz Roald, a litigation arose in 2 Edw. 1 (1273-4), respecting their purparties[z]. The jurors of Newbottle Grove hundred presented that Ravensthorp and Teton, which used to pay geld, had subtracted suit to the hundred court from three weeks to three weeks, and sheriff's aid to the amount of 15s. 2½d. per ann.; and paid all to the fee of Peverel; and that Alan Fitz Roald, for thirty years past, had appropriated to himself warren in Ravensthorp, but they knew not by what warrant[a].

In the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1 (1295-6), Alan Fitz Roald was returned to hold the towns of Ravensthorp and Teton by the service of one fee, except the fourth part of Ravensthorp, which was parcel of the honor of Leicester[c]. The descent from Fitz Roald, through heirs female, to the present lord Willoughby de Brooke, will be introduced more appropriately under the capital manor of COTON.

The earliest notice which can be retrieved of the mesne manor of Ravensthorp is in 21 Hen. 8 (1529), when William Tanfield, esq.* died seised of it, held of the heir of (Robert Willoughby) lord Brooke, as of his manor of Coton, by fealty, and 18d. yearly rent[d]; from whom it passed to his grandson Clement Tanfield, who was in possession at his death in 1585[e], and whose son Francis, afterwards knighted, probably alienated it; for in March 1596-7,

Robert Breton, gent. of TETON, died seised of the manor of Ravensthorp, held of sir Fulk Greville, as of his manor of Coton under Guilsborough, by fealty, and 1 lb. of cummin yearly rent[f]. It is now the property of John Peyto Verney, 7th lord Willoughby de Brooke; and the mesne and paramount manors are consequently blended by unity of ownership.

MORETON FEE †. HONOR OF LEICESTER ‡. COVELE MANOR. Edmar §, a saxon, had a small freehold in "Ravenestorp," which the earl of Moreton held in demesne at the time of domesday, when it was surveyed at half an hide. The arable land was two carucates, occupied by one villein with two bordars. It had been, and was still, valued at 5s. yearly[g].

To this fee was probably added, soon after the death of the norman grantee, another insignificant estate in "Ravenestorp," which at the domesday survey belonged to Gilbert the Cook, and consisted only of one virgate. The arable land was two carucates, cultivated by a villein and a bordar. It had been rated at 3s. but was then raised to 5s. yearly[h]. In the Testa de Nevill about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Philip de Covele accounted for one knight's fee in "Handeneby and Ravenestorp," of the fees of Simon Montfort, of the honor of Leicester[i]. The Ravensthorp part of this estate appears from the exception in the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1, quoted under Goldington's manor, to have comprehended a fourth of the lordship. All which can be recovered respecting its subsequent descent, down to the reign of Edw. 3, has been anticipated in the manorial history of HOLDENBY (p. 200). 'From henceforward we meet with no mention of this manor till the time of Henry V[k], in the ninth year of whose reign a fine was levied of it by Sir Thomas Beuchampe, Kt. in fee to Thomas Barton. This Sir Tho. Beuchampe we apprehend to have been the successor of John de Beauchampe[l], who married Joan, the daughter of John de Charleton, junior. It appears, however, to have soon after reverted to the family of Brooke[k]; for in the eleventh of Hen. VI. a fine was levied of Ravensthorp Manor, by Joan, the wife of Sir Thomas Brooke, Kt. in fee tail to William Bushet, Joan his wife, and their heirs. And in the nineteenth of the same reign[m], a second fine was levied of it by Sir Thomas Brooke, Kt. in fee to himself.' It has long since been disused, or united to the other manor. As parcel of the honor of Leicester, it owes suit and service to the court of the duchy of Lancaster. In the Holdenby pedigree, in HOLDENBY, is incorporated a branch of the family who had lands here, probably by inheritance from Covele.

THE VILLAGE is about nine miles from Northampton, and in the time of Bridges consisted of 'fifty-eight houses, and twelve erected for the poor[n].' By the census of 1801, it contained 84 houses and 390 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 87 houses and 396 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax is £67. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2167. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820 raised £617. 19s. 7d. at 10s. in the £. Coton and Teton have distinct poor-rates; but each of them contributes a fourth to the church-rates, and Ravensthorp the remainder. The wake is kept on the Sunday after St. Dennis.

ADVOWSON. The church of "Ravenesthorpe," with its pertinencies, was given by Robert de Cales, at an early and dateless period, to the knights hospitallers of Jerusalem[p]. After the dissolution, the rectories of Guilsborough and "Ravensthorpp," including the rectorial tithes of Teton, Hollowell, Coton, and Nortoft, in the said parishes, and the advowsons of the vicarages of Guilsborough and Ravensthorp, and manor of Nortoft, parcel of the dissolved priory or hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England, were, with other premises in the counties of York, Lincoln, and Nottingham, granted in 33 Hen. 8 (1541-2), to Charles (Brandon) duke of Suffolk[o]. The rectory of Ravensthorp (except Teton), and the advowson of the vicarage, were (int. al.) in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), conveyed by Thomas Gibbs, gent. in exchange for other lands, to king Henry 8th[p], by whom they were granted the year following, to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford[q], who demise the impropriate rectory on a beneficial lease of 21 years, renewable every seven years, and retain the advowson in their own hands.

The Rectory is valued in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann.[r]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), at £18. 3s. 4d. per ann. deducting a portion not liable to tenths[s]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is erroneously stated to belong to the hospital of St. John in Northampton[t], instead of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. The impropriate rectory now consists of 170 a. 1 r. 28 p. and a rate tithe of 5s. 1d. per ann. in Ravensthorp, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure; and 55 a. 1 r. 34 p. in Coton, awarded under the act for inclosing Guilsborough and Coton. The present lessee is Mrs. Bateman, of Guilsborough, widow of the rev. Dr. Wigley, rector of Clipston, who has re-assumed her paternal name, in pursuance of the will of her father, the late John Bateman, of Guilsborough, esq.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the vicarage is rated at eight marks (£5. 6s. 8d.) per ann.[x]; but it must have been dissolved soon after; for in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1.), no vicarage occurs, though a pension not liable to tenths is deducted, and the gross total of the rectory corresponds with the united amount of the rectory and vicarage in the former valuation. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315-6), Richard de Pavely, prior of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, paid to the king a fine of 80 marks (£53. 6s. 8d.) for licence to appropriate the churches of "Hetherington" (Harrington), "Ravensthorp," and Kirkeby in the diocese of Lincoln, and Normanton in the diocese of York[u]; and accordingly a vicarage was ordained here, and a vicar presented in 1318. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the vicarage is rated at £11. 13s. 4d. per ann.[z] The parliamentary commissioners, in 1655, certified "Ravensthorp with Teeton" to be a vicarage worth £52 per ann. in the patronage of Christ Church, Oxford; and that Martin Billing, the incumbent, was resident. They also reported that Teton, being a village of 30 families, a mile distant from Ravensthorp, and the tithes payable to Ravensthorp being £30 per ann. "if maintenance sufficient could be annexed, it is fit to be "divided[a]." The vicarage now consists of 59 a. 1 r. 20 p. and a rate tithe of £1. 0s. 4d. per ann. in Ravensthorp, allotted by the commissioners of inclosure, in lieu of all vicarial tithes; 32 a. 0 r. 10 p. in Coton, awarded by the commissioners for inclosing Guilsborough, Coton, and Nortoft, 4 Geo. 3 (1764), in lieu of the vicarial tithes of Coton; and a pecuniary composition for the vicarial tithes of Teton. The vicarage-house stands north-west of the church.

The Registers commence in 1551, but some parts of them are in a mutilated state.

The Church, dedicated to St. Dennis, stands in a church-yard separated from the road by a sunk wall, and consists of a tower with small pinnacles, in which are five bells, opened in 1810, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The window at the east end of the south aisle has an ogee arch, and is probably a remnant of the improvements of Henry de Stokes; at the west end is a perpendicular window, and most of the others have been modernised. The chancel has been recently re-built. The interior is paved with brick and stone. Many of the old rectangular benches, with trefoiled compartments, remain. The tower is 9 ft. 10 in. long, by 8 ft. 11 in. wide; the nave, 38 ft. 7 in. long, by 23 ft. wide; the north aisle, 31 ft. 6 in. long, by 14 ft. 2 in. wide; the east end, or Teton chapel, 15 ft. 4 in. long, by 15 ft. 2 in. wide; the south aisle, 38 ft. 10 in. long, by 15 ft. 3 in. wide; and the chancel, 22 ft. 4 in. long, by 17 ft. 9 in. wide. The font is circular, on a small central shaft, surrounded by four others. The nave is divided from each aisle by three large drop arches, connected by tablets springing from corbel heads in the spandrils, and supported by low multangular pillars with square basements and shallow capitals of plain mouldings. At the south-east end of the nave, a narrow arched entrance for the rood-loft still remains. The arch leading into the tower, which is now closed, is unusually low, and has three broad plain mouldings, rising from recessed demi-columns of the same character with those in the nave. The east end of the north aisle is appropriated to the lords of Teton, and is elevated four steps from the chancel. The whole is included in a pew, with a spacious vault beneath. Between the two windows in the south aisle, is a depressed arch in the wall, but no appearance of a tomb. At the east end is a piscina. The entrance to the chancel from the nave is through an ancient wooden screen handsomely carved, and formerly painted; two of the compartments are still perfect.

The whole of the rents subject to a rent-charge of £3 per ann. to the poor of Abington, and £1 per ann. to the poor of Great Creton, is to be distributed annually on St. Thomas's day amongst the poor of Ravensthorp, at the discretion of the minister, churchwarden, and principal inhabitants. It is now let for £49. 4s. per ann.

TETON, or TEETON;

In domesday "Teche," and in early records Tekne, Tekene, &c. may possibly be derived from the saxon teagh, an inclosure, to which the latter syllable, expressive of habitation, was subsequently added. It forms the north-east angle of Ravensthorp parish; and consists of about 640 acres, and was inclosed by private agreement in 1590[a]. The principal proprietors are Thomas Langton, esq. lord of the manor, who has about 250 acres; and Mr. William Borton, of Northampton, about 150 acres. The soil is principally a strong loam, with a considerable portion of light red land; and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The mill mentioned in domesday is on the brook which divides from Holdenby.

Manorial History. Peverel Fee*. At the domesday survey, Drogo held of William Peverel two hides in "Teche." The arable land was four caruates, cultivated by four socmen, two villeins, and four bordars. There was one acre of meadow. The whole had been rated at 10s. yearly, but was then doubled in value[b]. This estate was associated with Ravensthorp in the hydarium of Hen. 2, the Testa de Nevill, and the book of knights' fees 24 Edw. 1, as will be seen by reference to Goldington's manor.

Manor. The family of Breton obtained an interest here at a very early period. William Breton, of "Tekene," confirmed Tekene mill to St. Andrew's priory, of the gift of Peter de Goldington, by deed s. d.; but which, from one of the attestations, may be placed about 1200[c]. In 16 Hen. 3 (1231-2), Peter de Goldington levied a fine to William Briton of two virgates of lands in "Tekne," and of all other lands there which he had before held of the said Peter[d].

No further mention of the family or their possessions can be traced in public records till 39 Eliz. (1597), when Robert Breton, gent. was found to have died seised (int. al.) of the manor of Teton, with nine virgates of land, held of sir Fulk Greville, as of his manor of Coton under Guilsborough; and the impropriate rectory, or "portion of tithes," of Teton, held of the heir of Richard Andrew; and John Breton was son and heir, aged 25 years[e]. The family, after being seated here five centuries, became extinct in the direct male line on the death of Robert Breton, esq. in Jan. 1714-5; and in 1718, his four daughters and coheiresses, Frances, Dorothy, Penelope, and Sarah, alienated the manor of "Teton, alias Tecon, alias Tekyn," with court leet and court baron, mansion, mill, and lands; together with the impropriate rectory of Ravensthorp in Teton, to John Langton, of London, esq. in fee[f].

John Langton, esq. died soon after his purchase of Teton, and was succeeded by his son Thomas Langton, esq. whose son Thomas Langton, esq. by his will, devised it to his sons in succession: on the decease of the eldest, it devolved to the second son Thomas Langton, esq. the present possessor.

The court rolls of this manor, including both court leet and court baron, are extant from the reign of Elizabeth. Certain lands in East Haddon, Ravensthorp, and Thurnby, owe suit and service to the leet. No court has been held since 1762.

LANGTON OF TETON.

From information of the family and parish register of Ravensthorp*.

Arms. Quarterly, Sable and Or, a bend Argent. Crest. Two winged serpents interwoven and erect on their tails Vert.

St. Andrew's Priory in Northampton, had "Theke" (Teton) mill, by grant s. d. from Peter de Goldington, with consent of Eve his wife[g], confirmed by William Briton, of Tekene, the mesne lord, about the year 1200[g]; and re-confirmed by his son William[g]. The prior and convent subsequently granted it to William Breton, of "Teken," at a fee farm rent of 8s. per ann.[h]; which, at the dissolution, passed to the crown, and may be found in the fee farm roll of 1650[i].

The present Manor House was built by the late Mr. Langton.

The Village, which is about eight miles from Northampton, stands about a mile west of the turnpike road to Leicester through Welford. By the census of 1801, it contained 15 houses and 77 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, the same number of houses and 73 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax is £67. 8s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1247. The poor's-rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £167. 13s. 1½d. at 5s. in the £.

Inpropriate Rectory. Teton, being a member of the parish of Ravensthorp, was included in the grant of the impropriate rectory to Charles duke of Suffolk. It was, however, soon severed from it; for, in 36 Hen. 8 (1545), Richard Andrew, of Daventry, esq. conveyed the rectory of "Teken," comprising all the tithes of grain and hay, and two acres of arable land, which he late had of the gift and feoffment of the said duke, to Christopher Breton, gent. and the heirs of his body; rendering to the said Richard Andrew, and his heirs, a rose flower yearly, for all secular services[k]; and from him it has accompanied the descent of the manor down to the present time.

Chapel. The commissioners appointed 2 Edw. 6 (1547-8), for the survey of chantries, chapels, &c. certify, that there is "A chapell of Ese, at Teton within the parishe of Ravensthorpe, distant a myle from the pish churche, "to which there belongethe no lands, and the pson of Ravensthorpe sayithe mass there ones a weke. Howstling "people (communicants) there xl[l]."

The chapel has been desecrated many years.

UPTON.

In domesday written "Optone," is obviously derived from the saxon up, upper, and tone, a town, in allusion to its situation relatively to the parish of St. Peter's in Northampton, of which it is still a parochial member in its ecclesiastical, though distinct and independent in its civil capacity.

The lordship is old inclosure, and contains about 960 acres, the whole of which belongs to T. S. W. Samwell, esq. the lord of the manor. It lies on a gradual ascent from the river Nen, which divides it on the south from Kislingbury, and south-east from Wotton in Wymersley hundred; on the east it is bounded by Duston; and on the north and west by Harpole. A considerable proportion of this lordship is meadow and pasture; and the soil varies from light red land and gravel to a strong grey loam. All kinds of timber thrive here, and there are two small woods called Berry Wood and Norwood. Morton, in enumerating the largest oaks of the county, states, that "in one of Upton grounds, not far from Duston, there was lately felled a very stately Oak, whose Body was "Six Foot in Diameter, 18 in Circumference. The Stick or Trunk 31 Feet in Length, the Distance betwixt the "Extremity of the Branches 42 Feet. It yielded 12 Waggon Loads and 8 good Carriage Load of Timber, "besides Lap and Roots, and a Load and an half of Bark[l]." The lordship abounds with scarce plants: Geranium rotundifolium, round-leaved Cranesbill; Betonica officinalis, Wood Betony; Poterium Sanguisorba, common Burnet; Epilobium tetragonum, square-stalked Willow herb; Picus echioides, prickly Ox-tongue; Helleborus viridis, Green Hellebore; Hypericum hirsutum, hairy St. John's-wort; Sium latifolium, great water Parsnep; Rumex pulcher, fiddle Dock; Carduus eriophorus, Friar's Crown; Rubus coryliifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble; Viburnum Lantana, Way-faring Tree; Asplenium scolopendrium, Hart's-tongue; Polypodium vulgare, (variety 3 With.) common Polypody; Agaricus gracilis, elegant Agaric; Agaricus Stercorarius, slender Agaric; Agaricus latus, broad Agaric; Agaricus æruginosus, verdigris Agaric; Agaricus stipitis, stump Agaric; Agaricus terreus, dirt-colored Agaric; Agaricus varius, (variety 3 With.) variable Agaric; Boletus squamosus, scaly Boletus; Helvella mitra, curled turban-top; Clavaria Hypoxylon, horned Club-top; Clavaria muscoides, pointed Club-top. The mill mentioned in domesday is situated on the river Nen, and was one of the earliest donations to St. James's abbey.

An unusual number of birds, of comparatively rare occurrence, have been shot here within the last three or four years; Falco Tinnunculus (Lin.), Kestrel; Strix Otus (Lin.), long-eared or horned Owl; Lanius excubitor (Lin.), great ash-colored Shrike, or Butcher Bird; Picus Medius (Lin.), middle-spotted Woodpecker; Sitta Europea (Lin.), Nuthatch, or Woodcracker; Loxia Curvirostra (Lin.), Cross-bill; Fringilla Montefringilla (Lin.), Mountain Finch, or Brambling; Motacilla regulus (Lin.), Golden-crested Wren, frequent; Caprimulgus Europeus (Lin.), Night Jar, Goat sucker, or Fern Owl; Columba anas (variety Lin.), Bologna Dove, or Rock Pigeon.

MANORIAL HISTORY. TERRA REGIS OR ANTIENT DEMESNE. The saxon proprietor is not known, but at the domesday survey the king himself held "Optone." It consisted of two hides. The arable land was ten carucates; of which one was in demesne, and five were in the occupation of ten villeins and ten bordars; leaving four waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 12s. 8d. yearly, and six acres of meadow. To this manor also belonged half a hide in "Erlestone" (Harleston). The arable land was two carucates, and there were two socmen with one carucate. The whole was valued, as in the time of Edward the confessor, at £15 yearly[m].

MANOR. According to the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Upton" contained two hides and a half, and was still in possession of the crown[n]; but at a later period of that reign, appears to have been bestowed on

Robert Fitz Sewin[o], of Northampton. By deed, dated 14 Mar. 1 Ric. (1189-0), the king granted "Ufethonam juxta Norhanth," two hides of lands in "Norhanth," which William de Ballivo had held of earl Simon, and "Kingshale" meadow (in Northampton), with all their pertinencies in wood and plain, in meadow and pasture, in water and mills, in ways and paths, and in all other places within the borough and without, to Robert Fitz Hugh de Northampton for his services, and £30 sterling, to hold to him and his heirs, conformably to the charter of king Henry his father[p]; and in 4 Ric. (1192-3), the sheriff of Northamptonshire, in rendering his account of the profits of the county arising from the royal demesnes, deducted £14 blench for "Uppeton," which had been severed from the corpus comitatus, and given to Robert Fitz Hugh, son of Robert Fitz Sewin[q]. These lands were sometimes excepted in the sheriff's accounts many years after their alienation, and entered in the name of the contemporary lord, who might therefore inadvertently be mistaken for the first grantee; thus, in 1 Joh. (1199), the sheriff deducted £14 blench for Upton, in possession of Robert de Bella-aqua[r] or Bellew, who had married the eldest daughter and coheiress of Robert Fitz Hugh[s].

In 6 Joh. (1204), William Cumin, husband of the youngest coheiress, owed a palfrey, worth five marks (£3. 6s. 8d.), or five marks in money, for a settlement respecting the fine made between Robert de Bella-aqua and James the Jew, of Northampton, concerning the debts of Robert Fitz Hugh[t].

The widow of Bellew was married to John de Cancell or Chaunceux in 15 Hen. 3 (1230-1), and being then designated daughter and heiress of Robert Fitz Hugh[t], it may be presumed her sister was dead without issue. In the Testa de Nevill about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), John de Cancell was certified to hold the manor of "Upton," with the hundred thereto belonging, and 18s. yearly rent, with pertinencies, in "Herleston," by sergeanty of finding a soldier in an haubergeon or coat of mail to serve forty days in the king's army[u]. Under the head of sergeanties rented by Robert Passelewe, temp. Hen. 3, in another part of the same record, it is stated that the sergeanty of John de Cancell in "Hupton," by which he was bound to find a servant to travel in the hundred of "Neubotlegue," to execute the sheriff's writs on behalf of the king, had been partly alienated. William Marescall had thereof one virgate worth 1 mark (13s. 4d.) per ann. Emma de Hamesescap, half a virgate worth half a mark per ann. Richard de Frankelayn, half a virgate worth half a mark per ann. William, son of John de Nor'ht', five acres, and a messuage worth 3s. per ann. Henry Fullo, a cottage worth 2s. per ann. Richard Jordan, a messuage worth 3s. per ann. Simon, son of Roger, a cottage worth 2s. per ann.

The whole of these alienations amounted to 36s. per ann. but the tenants compounded with the said John for 12s. being a third of the value; and he engaged to do the service of half a knight's fee for the portion which he still retained, because the service of the sergeanty was small. The abbot of St. James near Northampton had also, parcel of the said sergeanty, a mill and four acres of land worth £4 per ann. and a meadow worth 20s. per ann.; amounting in the whole to 100s.; for which the said John agreed to receive 50s. per ann. in acquittance of all secular services[x]. A subsequent summary of these alienations exactly corresponds, except in the orthography of some of the tenants' names[y]; and in the account of the sergeanties changed into military service, John de Cancell stands charged for half a fee[z]. By the inquisition after his death, he was found to have died seised of the manor of Upton with Newbottle Grove hundred, and rents in Harleston, Pightesley, and Flore, leaving Hugh de Chauncaux his son and heir[a], who is erroneously incorporated in the pedigree of Chauncy, by the historians of Hertfordshire[b]. In 18 Edw. 1 (1289-90), he came before the barons of the exchequer and claimed his liberty of view of frank pledge in "Upton," which had been lately seised into the king's hands for default in a plea of quo warranto, and obtained restoration by a plea of replevin[c]; but the ultimate decision was probably in favour of the crown, for in the 29th of the same reign, the king, by charter dated at Lincoln 19 Feb. granted to Thomas de Chauncus, son and heir of Hugh de Chanceus of "Upton," the bailiwick of the hundred of "Neubotelgrave," with its pertinencies, then in the crown by forfeiture of the said Hugh, to hold to him and his heirs by the same tenure as his father had previously held it[d]; and in the year following, the sheriff was commanded by writ to give him the peaceable enjoyment of all the immunities thereto belonging[e]. Hugh, the father, in 1 Edw. 2 (1307-8), attempted to settle the manor of Upton on himself and Juliana his wife for life, remainder to Thomas de St. Hilary (of HARPOLE), Maud his wife, and her heirs; but on a recital of the above grant, in an inquisition ad quod damnum, it was certified that he had no power to make any settlement without the concurrence of his son[f]. Nicholas de Chaunceus, son and successor of Thomas, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), was summoned before the king's justices itinerant by writ of quo warranto, to show by what authority he claimed view of frankpledge and toll of salt and fish within his manor of "Upton," parcel of the ancient demesne of the crown; view of frankpledge of his tenants holding of that manor in "Herleston;" and the hundred of "Neubotelg've," and a court in the said hundred from three weeks to three weeks, together with wayf therein; to which he pleaded prescription for the privileges of the manor of Upton: and that his grandfather Hugh, whose heir he is, as well as all his ancestors from time beyond memory, had held the hundred of "Neubotelg've," with wayf therein, by the yearly rent of one mark to the king through the medium of the sheriff, until the forfeiture of the said Hugh, when it was seised into the hands of king Edward, grandfather of the present king, who by his charter (19 Feb. 29 Edw. 1), granted the bailiwick of the said hundred to his son Thomas, father of the present claimant, who proffered the charter in proof of his right. Richard de Aldeburgh, on behalf of the king, required him to shew the court in what manner and from whom he claimed to take toll of fish and salt in the manor of Upton, and whether he had a pillory and tumbril in the said manor, by which offenders within the said view might be rightfully punished. Nicholas, in reply, claimed toll of such fish and salt only as passed through the said manor for sale, viz. of every cart load of fish one penny, and of every horse-load one farthing, and of every cart load of salt one fourth part of a bushel of salt, and of every horse load one farthing; and as to pillory and tumbril, he acknowledged that he had neither, because when any one offended against the regulations of the view of frank pledge, instead of resorting to those corporal punishments, he had recourse to a fine, as his ancestors had done from time beyond memory. To which Richard rejoined, that Nicholas well knew that the pillory and tumbril had been from the earliest times the necessary appendages to courts of view for the due punishment of offenders and for the common benefit of the people; and that the prescription which he set up, of punishing such offenders by fine, was manifestly against common justice and the law of the land; and therefore prayed judgment whether such prescription could give a legal sanction to the customs: and as to the said hundred, he, the said Nicholas, well knew that it came to king Edward, the grandfather of the present king, by the forfeiture of his ancestor Hugh; and, admitting that it had once been annexed to his manor of Upton, yet he had shewn no cause for retaining it, except the charter of king Edward the grandfather, which made no mention of the hundred itself, but only of the bailiwick; and therefore prayed judgment, that the hundred be again annexed to the crown: as to wayf, it was a royal privilege, belonging only to the crown of our lord the king, and could not be separated therefrom without some special grant, which had not been shewn; and therefore he prayed judgment. Richard alleged further, that Hugh, grandfather of Nicholas, claimed in the last iter to hold the said hundred of the king by the service of 40s. yearly; and the service having been found to be 47s. yearly, he was charged with the arrears of the said 7s. a year, as a punishment for the concealment thereof, and the hundred adjudged to be seised into the king's hands, but restored to him again, on his petition, for the yearly payment of four marks (£2. 13s. 4d.); and whereas Nicholas now claimed the hundred for the yearly payment of one mark only, to the injury of the king, he therefore prayed judgment: and since Nicholas could not refute this, nor in support of his claim had pleaded any thing, except the charter of king Edward, in which was found no mention of the grant of the hundred, but only of the bailiwick thereof, and which bailiwick he did not even claim at the commencement of the iter, it was adjudged that the said bailiwick be seised into the king's hands, and Nicholas was in mercy; whereupon he waived his claim to the hundred, and prayed to replevy the bailiwick, which was granted him for a fine of half a mark, Robert de Chanceux being his surety. Nicholas then claimed the said bailiwick by virtue of the aforesaid charter by the service of four marks, in the same manner as his ancestor Hugh formerly held it; when Richard, on behalf of the king, contended that, besides the four marks for the bailiwick, he ought to pay 40s. to the king for a mill in Upton, and also 12s. for certain tenements in the same village, now alienated; and therefore prayed to have an inquisition for fuller information concerning the premises, whether the said payments had been made for the time past, and how and in what manner Nicholas and his ancestors had exercised the said privileges; wherefore a jury was empannelled on the Saturday after the octaves of the holy trinity, who presented on their oaths that Nicholas was entitled by prescription to the said view of frank pledge and tolls, with all rights of the said view belonging to the manor of Upton; and that Nicholas and Thomas his father, from the time of the said charter, and that Hugh his grandfather, and his ancestors, from time beyond memory, were seised of all the aforesaid liberties, and that no part of the rent of four marks was in arrear; and it being enquired as to the reason for taking the said tolls, they presented that on account of the deepness of the king's highway adjoining the lands of Nicholas, travellers were frequently hindered and aggrieved, and that one of his ancestors enlarged the highway out of his own lands, for which easement or accommodation he and his ancestors had from time beyond memory levied the said tolls, and that they had legally exercised all the said liberties, except punishing offenders against the assize of bread and beer by fine of forty pence instead of the corporal punishments of pillory and tumbril, for which transgression the view of frankpledge was seised into the king's hands, but restored to Nicholas again for a fine of half a mark, Robert de Cancellis and John de Shelton being his sureties; and the said bailiwicks and liberties were adjudged to him, saving to the king his right of future enquiry[g].

Ellen, daughter and heiress of this Nicholas, married Richard Knightley, by whom she had a son and heir John Knightley, "ut habitur in scaccario[h]," according to the splendid pedigree of Knightley of FAWSLEY, entered in the college of arms, where, by a singularly glaring anachronism, these two descents are interpolated between Richard Knightley, who was aged 30 in 14 Edw. 4 (1474), and sir Richard Knightley, who died in 26 Hen. 8 (1534). The only Richard in the family to whom this match can be assigned with chronological probability, is a younger brother in the fifth generation anterior to the Richard who lived in the reign of Edw. 4; and, admitting the marriage, both parties and their issue appear to have died in the life-time of Nicholas de Chanceux, for, in 18 Edw. 3 (1344), he paid a fine of £12 to the king for licence to enfeoff William, son of Ralph de Upton, chaplain, of the manor of Upton with its pertinencies to the use of himself for life, remainder to Nicholas de Parles, son of Walter, and Roesia his wife, and their heirs, with ultimate remainder to his own right heirs[1]; and by the inquisition after his death, 21 Edw. 3 (1347), reciting the above settlement, he was found to die seised of Upton manor and Newbottle Grove hundred by the service of providing an armed man for the king's army within the four seas of England for 40 days at his own expence, whenever required, and a bailiff to execute the sheriff's writs within the hundred; leaving Nicholas Parles his next heir, aged 21 years[k].

Roesia, widow of Nicholas Parles, died in 35 Edw. 3 (1361) seised of the manor of Upton with its pertinencies, and Richard, son of William de Clendon, was next heir, aged 15 years[l]. Richard Clendon occurs here as lord of the manor in a trivial grant dated 21 Oct. 5 Hen. 5[m] (1417); but soon after alienated the manor and hundred to William Grendon, John Kydlington, ... Bowyer, and Walter Clendon, who, in 7 Hen. 5 (1419), granted them to Richard Knightley, esq. and Elizabeth his wife, for life, remainder to John their son and heir, remainder to the right heirs of Richard[n]. The pedigree of this ancient family will be more appropriately introduced under FAWSLEY, which still continues their property and residence. Sir Richard Knightley, the fourth in lineal descent from the purchaser, suffered a recovery in 33 Eliz. (1591), of the manors of Upton, Plumpton, Badby, Newnham, Everdon, and Hellidon, the hundred of Newbottle Grove, and the advowsons of Plumpton, Bugbrook, and Litchborough, &c. to the use and appointment of his son and heir Valentine Knightley, esq.[o] afterwards knighted, who in May 42 Eliz. (1600), conveyed the manor and estate of Upton, and hundred of Newbottle Grove, for £7366. 13s. 4d. to William Samwell, of Northampton, esq.[m] afterwards knighted, in fee, whose great grandson sir Thomas Samwell, was created a baronet in 1675. On the decease of sir Wenman Samwell, 4th baronet, in 1789, the title became extinct, but this manor with the other family estates devolved under the limitations of the will of sir Thomas Samwell, the 3rd baronet, to his nephew T. S. Watson, esq. who adopted the name and arms of Samwell by act of parliament in 1790, and is the present proprietor.

No court has been held of late years for this manor.

St. James's Abbey, near Northampton, had Upton mill, of the grant of Robert Fitz Sewin, successively confirmed by Hugh Fitz Robert Fitz Sewin, and Robert Fitz Hugh, who added 2s. yearly rent for the anniversary of his father[p]. The sergeanty of the mill has been noticed in the account of the manor, and in 1 Edw. 3 (1328), there was an agreement respecting it between the abbot and Hugh de Cancell[q]. The temporalities of the abbey in Upton were rated at £4. 12s. per ann. in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8[r]); and were granted, 4 June (32 Eliz. (1590), to Richard Knowlys, esq. and John Rande, gent.[s] who sold them the same year to Valentine Knightley, esq. from whom they have passed with the manor.

The Manor House is seated on a gentle declination to the south, surrounded by embellished grounds, in which deer were kept till about the middle of the last century. The oldest part of the mansion is of stone; but the father of the late sir Thomas Samwell re-built the east or principal front of brick, to which he added a wing containing several good rooms which are unoccupied; and the south-west side was taken down a few years since and modernised by the present possessor. The different apartments are decorated with several interesting family and miscellaneous portraits. The Hall or Saloon, which is lofty and spacious, contains nine large full-lengths of sir Richard Samwell; Richard Samwell, esq. his eldest son; sir Thomas Samwell, 1st bart.; sir Thomas Samwell, 2nd bart. with his son Thomas, afterwards 3rd bart. and three of his daughters; the three daughters and cohceresses of Thomas 2nd viscount Wenman, Frances, wife of Richard Samwell, esq. Lely; Penelope, 2nd wife of sir Thomas Cave, of Stanford, 1st baronet, Lely; and Elizabeth, wife of Greville Verney, of Compton Murdak in Warwickshire, esq. Lely; Thomas, 2nd viscount Wenman, habited in black, and seated in a chair; and Charles, 12th king of Sweden. In this apartment also are portraits of Mary, daughter and coheiress of Thomas Catesby, esq. by Margaret Samwell, and wife of Henry (Paget) 1st earl of Uxbridge; dame Milicent, 1st wife of sir Thomas Samwell, 2nd bart.; and dame Mary, his 2nd wife; sir William Fermor, ancestor of the earl of Pomfret, Vandyck; sir John Finet, master of the ceremonies to kings James 1st and Charles 1st, author of Finetti Philoxenis, or Choice Observations concerning the reception and precedency, &c. of foreign ambassadors in England, Vandyck; and various others which cannot be appropriated. Pink Drawing Room. Lucy countess of Bedford, sister and coheiress of John 2nd lord Harrington, Honthorst; rev. A. D. 1705, aged 127 years. Dining Room. Over the chimney is a large and interesting bacchanalian group, by Mercier, representing sir Thomas Samwell, the 2nd baronet, attended by his favorite black servant Cæsar Parisetti, seated at a table, drinking Burgundy with his friends John Neale, of Allesley in Warwickshire, esq.; general de Jean; and ..... Floyd, esq. who, as president, is crowned with a chaplet of vine leaves. In this room are two fine portraits of an unknown lady and gentleman, and a few cabinet pictures. Staircase, &c. Godfrey Clarke, of Chilcot in Derbyshire, esq.; lady Catherine his wife, daughter of Philip 2nd earl of Chesterfield; Elizabeth Samwell, 1st wife of sir John Langham, of Cottesbrook, 4th bart.; sir William Samwell; sir Thomas Parkyns, of Bunny in Nottinghamshire, 1st bart. Lely; Charles 1st and Henrietta his queen, Vandyck; sir William Humble, of Thorp Underwood, 5th bart; dame Elizabeth his wife, sister of Henry 1st earl of Darlington; Thomas Catesby, of Whiston and Ecton, esq. Lely; Margaret Samwell, his wife, Lely; James Harrington, esq. author of Oceana; and the following by Mercier—sir Thomas Samwell, 2nd bart.; sir Arthur Hesilrige, of Northampton, 7th bart.; Robert Andrew, of Harleston, esq. the last of the first line; John Neale, of Allesley in Warwickshire, esq.; general de Jean, of the 3rd Caribineers; and John lord Ligonier, of Ireland. Here is also a small bust of Mr. Henry Hunt, formerly of Northampton, a provincial statuary of some celebrity, and a pupil of Grinling Gibbons. Upper Drawing Room. Jane Skipwith, wife of sir William Samwell, Janssen; and the present proprietor, and his lady, both by Phillips, R. A.

THE VILLAGE, now nearly depopulated, is two miles west from Northampton, on the left of the turnpike road to Daventry. By the rental of Richard Knightley, esq. taken after his decease in 17 Edw. 4 (1477), it appears there were 24 houses in Upton[t]. In the time of Bridges it contained 'eleven houses, including the mill[u].' By the census of 1801, it consisted of 4 houses and 32 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 5 houses and 33 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £87. 4s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2276. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £245. 11s. 3d. at 5s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after Michaelmas day.

THE ADVOWSON has been immemorially attached to the rectory of St. Peter's in Northampton, and is a chapel of ease with Kingsthorpe. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified that Upton, a vill of 40 families, was a member of St. Peter's in Northampton; and that the tithes thereof were £60 per ann. which the minister who supplied the cure enjoyed by "leave" from the minister of Kingsthorpe[x]. The rector now receives a pecuniary composition for the tithes.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1594.

THE CHURCH OR PAROCHIAL CHAPEL, dedicated to St. Michael, consists of an embattled tower, containing two bells, nave, south porch, and chancel, and is situated on the right of the approach to the house, but secluded from observation by an avenue of elms. Nearly the whole outline is of the original fabric: the north and south doors have plain norman arches, and small lancet windows may be still traced in the walls, though superseded by others of a comparatively modern date. The interior is of one pace, without any division between the body and the chancel. The tower is 8 ft. 4 in. long, by 6 ft. 2 in. wide; and the nave and chancel 76 ft. long, by 17 ft. 2 in. wide.

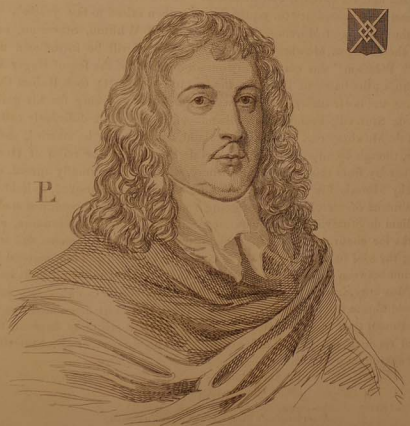
'[7] Under the south window of the chancel was formerly an altar tomb, on which was the effigies of a man in armour, and his wife lying by him. It was ornamented with several coats of arms, and round the verge was the following inscription:

℣ Orate pro anima Ricardi Knightley armigeri qui obiit tricesimo die mensis Martii Anno D'ni MDLLLLIJ. et pro anima Johanne uxoris eus que obiit .... Anno D'ni MCCCCC. quorum animabus propitietur Deus. Amen.

'It was the monument of Sir Richard Knightley and Jane his wife, the daughter of Sir John Spencer. Only some fragments of it are now remaining.'



The mutilated figures are now placed upright in the wall, and over them a fragment of the tomb on which they were originally placed. He is in a suit of plate armour, with a collar of S. S. round his neck; his head resting on his helmet, and his feet on a lion. His greaves are terminated by a broad band at the instep, and scaled iron shoes. The lady reclines on a cushion formerly supported by angels. Her hair flows in long tresses, and is bound round the head with a bandeau of jewels; her neck is encircled with three chains of jewels; her boddice is richly bordered; and her mantle open, and fastened by a cordon which falls below her waist.

James Harrington, an eminent political writer and projector of the 17th century, was eldest son of sir James Harrington, by Jane, daughter of sir William Samwell, of Upton, where he was born on the first Friday in January 1611-12, and baptized there on the 16th of the same month. He was entered a gentleman commoner of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1629, and was placed under the tuition of the celebrated Chillingworth. He quitted the university on the death of his father, without taking a degree, and devoted several years to travelling on the continent for improvement. On his return to England he joined the presbyterian party, but being unsuccessful in his attempt to obtain a seat in parliament, he remained in comparative obscurity till the beginning of 1647, when he volunteered his services to attend the parliamentary commissioners deputed to receive the person of the king from the Scots at Newcastle, and conduct him to Holdenby in this county. His moderation gained him the confidence of both parties; he was first appointed to a domestic situation in the household by the commissioners, and on the dismissal of some of the king's favorite servants in May, his majesty selected him for one of the grooms of his bed-chamber. His learning and ingenuity soon attracted the notice of his royal master, who delighted in his society, and treated him with the greatest familiarity and kindness. Pleased and flattered with these attentions, and being naturally of an amiable and affectionate disposition, Harrington, though a zealous republican in principle, formed a strong personal attachment to the unfortunate monarch, and served him with the most unremitting fidelity, till forcibly dismissed from his office for too warmly vindicating the king's conduct in the Newport treaty. During his subsequent retirement from public affairs, he composed his celebrated work, "The Commonwealth of Oceana," which, by the zealous activity of Cromwell, was seized at the press, but restored again through the medium of Mrs. Cleypole, the protector's favorite daughter, at whose suggestion it was dedicated to her father, on its publication in 1656. It is a species of political allegory or romance, exhibiting in the fictitious land of Oceana, the form of government which he conceived to be most conducive to public liberty. The basis is too refined and speculative for practical adoption, but "was well adapted," says Hume, "to that age, when the plans "of imaginary republics were the daily subjects of debate and conversation; and even in our time it is justly admired "as a work of genius and invention. The style of this author wants ease and fluency; but the good matter "which his work contains makes compensation." To aid the propagation of his theory, he established, in 1659, a political debating society, called the Rota, which met nightly at Miles's Coffee-house in New Palace Yard,

Westminster. Their debates were spirited, and the sense of the meeting was taken by ballot; which mode, being first invented or introduced by them, drew crowds to the room every evening. This society was dissolved at the Restoration, and Harrington, having rendered himself obnoxious by his anti-monarchical sentiments, was arrested in Dec. 1661, and committed to the Tower on suspicion of treasonable practices; from whence, after the rejection of his application for trial, he was clandestinely and illegally put on board a ship in the night, and conveyed to the island of St. Nicholas near Plymouth, for the purpose of evading the operation of a writ of habeas corpus, reluctantly granted on the motion of his sisters. The severity of his confinement, aggravated by the free use of deleterious medicines, having impaired his health, and produced occasional mental aberration, his friends at length procured a warrant for his release. In this debilitated state of body and mind, he married Katherine, daughter of sir Marmaduke Dorrell, who, in the bloom of youth and beauty, had rejected his addresses. He died of a paralytic stroke in 1677, and was buried in St. Margaret's church, Westminster.

Besides the Oceana, he wrote various political pieces:—"The Use and Manner of the Ballot," printed on one side of a sheet of paper; and a translation of part of Virgil. His works were collected and published by John Toland, with a memoir and portrait prefixed, 1700, folio. Dr. Birch edited another folio edition in 1737, with an appendix, containing all the political tracts omitted by Toland; which reached a second edition in 1747. Granger mentions several engraved portraits of Harrington*; to which may now be added the subjoined etching from the picture in the possession of T. S. W. Samwell, esq. Granger notices also a portrait of lady Katherine Harrington, which he supposes to be intended for the wife of the author of Oceana.

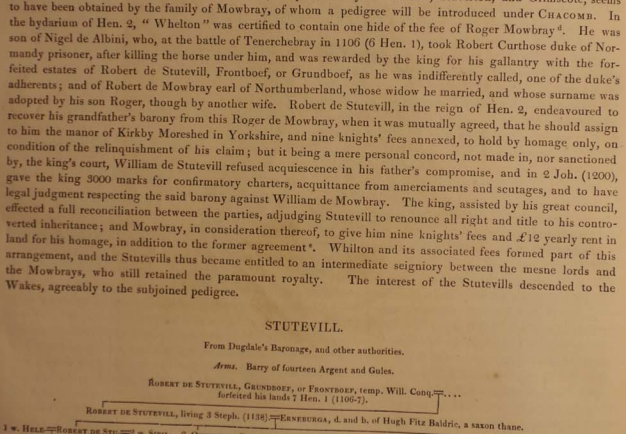
WHILTON

Has not received its present appellation more than two or three centuries. In domesday it is written "Woltone," which furnishes no clue to a rational etymology; but as the orthography of the norman scribes was extremely loose, and the name occurs in the earliest charters and records as "Welton" and "Whelson," its origin may with some plausibility be referred to the genuine saxon compound of well, a well or spring, and tone, a town. The lordship was inclosed by act of parliament 17 Geo. 3 (1777), and contains about 970 acres, exclusive of 60 acres, called Muscott-field, which was inclosed under the same act. The principal proprietors are, the rector, who, in right of his church, has about 188 acres; Mr. Aholiab Bradshaw, of Priors Marston in Warwickshire, about 240 acres; and Mr. Thomas Emery about 100 acres. The boundaries are formed, on the north by Long Buckby, in Guilsborough hundred; east by Brington; south by Brockhole; and west by Norton, in Fawsley hundred, from which it is partly divided by the Roman Watling-street road. The lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture; the soil of the former being for the most part gravel, and of the latter dark loam with a mixture of clay. Morton, in his list of scarce plants, introduces Sambucus Ebulus, dwarf Elder or Dane-wort, at Whilton[a]. There are lime-kilns near the bridge, adjoining the Grand Junction canal. The mill, mentioned in domesday, stands on the brook which rises at Nen moor in West Haddon lordship.



MANORIAL HISTORY. MORETON FEE[a]. MOWBRAY OR STUTEVILL BARONY. Bovi, the saxon proprietor of this lordship[b] and of Rockingham[c], was ejected from both by William the conqueror, who retained the latter in his own hands, and bestowed "Woltone" on the earl of Moreton, under whom it was held by Alan at the domesday survey. It contained one hide. The arable land was two caracates; one in demesne, with two servants; and two villeins, with a priest and six bordars, had the other. There were five acres of meadow, and a mill worth 40d. yearly. The whole had been valued at 10s. yearly, but was then raised to 60s. yearly[b].

On the confiscation of the earldom of Moreton, the paramouncy of Whilton, Staverton, and Grimscote, seems to have been obtained by the family of Mowbray, of whom a pedigree will be introduced under CHACOMB. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Whelton" was certified to contain one hide of the fee of Roger Mowbray[d]. He was son of Nigel de Albini, who, at the battle of Tenerchebray in 1106 (6 Hen. 1), took Robert Curthose duke of Normandy prisoner, after killing the horse under him, and was rewarded by the king for his gallantry with the forfeited estates of Robert de Stutevill, Frontboef, or Grundboef, as he was indifferently called, one of the duke's adherents; and of Robert de Mowbray earl of Northumberland, whose widow he married, and whose surname was adopted by his son Roger, though by another wife. Robert de Stutevill, in the reign of Hen. 2, endeavoured to recover his grandfather's barony from this Roger de Mowbray, when it was mutually agreed, that he should assign to him the manor of Kirkby Moreshed in Yorkshire, and nine knights' fees annexed, to hold by homage only, on condition of the relinquishment of his claim; but it being a mere personal concord, not made in, nor sanctioned by, the king's court, William de Stutevill refused acquiescence in his father's compromise, and in 2 Joh. (1200), gave the king 3000 marks for confirmatory charters, acquittance from amerciaments and scutages, and to have legal judgment respecting the said barony against William de Mowbray. The king, assisted by his great council, effected a full reconciliation between the parties, adjudging Stutevill to renounce all right and title to his controverted inheritance; and Mowbray, in consideration thereof, to give him nine knights' fees and £12 yearly rent in land for his homage, in addition to the former agreement[e]. Whilton and its associated fees formed part of this arrangement, and the Stutevills thus became entitled to an intermediate seigniory between the mesne lords and the Mowbrays, who still retained the paramount royalty. The interest of the Stutevills descended to the Wakes, agreeably to the subjoined pedigree.

In that portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be dated about 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), Roger de Welton is returned to have paid 26s. 9d. scutage for one fee in Staverton, one fee in "Welton," and one fee in Grimscote, of the fees of Mowbray, of the small fees of Moreton[f]; and the same sum, probably the second instalment, in Easter week[g]; and in another part of that record, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), under the head of fees which Roger de Mowbray held of the king in capite, Roger de Welton is certified to hold three small fees in "Welton," Staverton, and Grimscote, under Joan Wake[h]. From this period these fees will be found in the inquisitions of the Mowbrays, as held under them by the Wakes and their representatives[i]; and in the inquisitions of the Wakes and their representatives, as held under them by the representatives of the Wheltons, the mesne lords, without reference to their own tenure under the Mowbrays[k].

Bridges states, that 'all the inhabitants [of Whilton] owe service to Sir Tho. Samwell's Hundred Court, held 'at Kislingbury[l];' but the court has been discontinued of late years.

Manor. Alan, or Allelme[m], the domesday tenant of Whilton, was also mesne lord under the earl of Moreton, of Staverton, (Grimscote in) Cold Higham, Wedon, and Desborough[n]. His posterity settled here, and adopted the local surname. Sir Roger de Whelton, in whom the direct male line terminated, is said to have alienated his patrimony[m]; but however correct the statement may be, as applied to his other estates, Whilton and Staverton appear to have continued unalienated. The jurors of Newbottle Grove hundred, in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), presented that Robert de Mortimer [or his predecessor] had appropriated to himself warren in "Whelton," but they knew not by what authority[o]. This Robert, it is presumed, derived his right by marriage with the widow of Nicholas de Whelton, brother and heir of sir Roger; for, in 14 Edw. 1 (1285-6), Felicia, daughter and heiress of Nicholas, claimed against Robert de Mortimer, and Joyce his wife, two parts of the manor of Whelton, and seisin was adjudged to the defendants[p]. The other third part of the manor was demised by Philip de Montgomery and Felicia de Whelton, by deed without date, in consideration of £40 sterling, to Felicia de Cowe for life, who had formerly held it in dower[q]; and by another deed s. d. they granted to Henry Fabro a messuage, with a workshop and two acres of land in "Wheltone," to hold as freely as in the time of Robert de Mortimer, rendering half a mark of silver yearly for all services, except suit at their court of Whelton from three weeks to three weeks[q]. Philip de Montgomery died 23 Edw. 1 (1294-5), seised of the manor of "Whelton," with rents in Staverton held of John Wake by service of one fee, and of lands in the counties of Lincoln, Stafford, and Sussex, together with the stewardship of Cannock forest in Staffordshire, leaving Anne his daughter and heiress, aged 3 years[r]; but this manor remained in possession of Felicia his widow, who, prior to 28 Edw. 1 (1299), married

Sir William Nevill, younger son of sir Robert Nevill, of Brampton. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), he was lord of Whelton and Holdenby[s]; and in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), he was summoned by writ of quo warranto to shew his right to free warren in his demesne lands in "Whelton;" when, pleading the prescriptive usage of the ancestors of Felicia his wife, and reciting the settlement of the manor on her marriage with her first husband Montgomery, he contended, that having issue by her a son, James Nevill, he was entitled to the manor, with its privileges, for life, by the courtesy of England. A jury was summoned for next Easter term, but the claimant dying in the interim, no proceedings took place[t]. Sir James Nevill, son and heir of William and Felicia, succeeded to this manor, and dying without surviving issue, seems to have devised it to Joan his wife for life, who in her widowhood styled herself lady of Whelton[u]; and by deed, 49 Edw. 3 (1375), granted to John Holt, of Brampton, near Dingley, the manor and advowson of "Whelton," with all her lands in Whilton and Staverton[u].

Anne, daughter and heiress of Felicia de Whelton by her first husband Philip de Montgomery, married John de Swynnerton[x]; and on the extinction of the Nevills, the estates of his grandmother reverted to their son and heir

John de Swynnerton, who, in 3 Ric. 2 (1380), probably as the price of their renunciation of right under the deed of Joan Nevill, granted and confirmed the manor of "Whelton" to John Holt and Alice his wife, for their lives, and to the executors and assigns of the survivor for one whole year, rendering for, or instead of, the said John and his heirs, the services due and accustomed to the chief lord[u]. Thomas Swynnerton, esq. grandson of John, left two daughters and coheiresses, one of whom, Alice, then wife of William Hugford, esq. died in 12 Edw. 4 (1472), seised of this manor and advowson, and

Humphry Beaufo, her son by her former husband Richard Beaufo, esq. was heir, aged 18 years[y]. From him it came in course of descent to Thomas Beaufou, esq. who in August 1625 conveyed the manor, advowson, and lordship of "Whilton" to certain trustees appointed by 15 of her tenants — the rev. William Phillips, William Langton, Robert Langton, William Crowley, William A'Carr, alias Carr, William Harding, Robert Bate, Nathaniel Lynnell,

The history of this county will furnish but few additional instances of a pedigree, exhibiting the unbroken descent of a manor in lineal succession through heirs female, from the norman grantee down to the middle of the 17th century.

The purchaser of this manor from the Beaufoys sold it, in 1664, to Richard Freeman, of Whilton, gent.[z] by whom it was devised to his eldest grandson Richard Freeman, esq. who bought several of the small freehold estates originating in the sale of 1625. By virtue of a settlement made in 1709, on his marriage with Elizabeth Langton, his second wife, the manor passed to her eldest son the rev. Langton Freeman, whose eccentricities will be long remembered in the neighbourhood, and who, in his will, dated 16 Sept. 1783, gave the following singular directions for his interment: "and first, for four or five days after my decease, and till my body grows offensive, I would not "be removed out of the place or bed I shall die on; and then I would be carried and laid in the same bed, "decently and privately, in the summer-house now erected in the garden belonging to the dwelling-house where "I now inhabit in Whilton, and to be laid in the same bed there, with all the appurtenances thereto belonging, "and to be wrapped in a strong double winding-sheet; and in all other respects to be interred as near as may be "to the description we receive in Holy Scripture of our Saviour's burial: the doors and windows to be locked-up "or bolted, and to be kept as near in the same manner and state they shall be in at the time of my decease; and "I desire that the building or summer-house may be planted around with evergreen plants, and fenced off with "iron or oak pales, and painted of a dark blue colour: and for the due performance of this, in manner aforesaid," he devised the manor of Whilton, with his dwelling-house and certain lands there, to his nephew Thomas Freeman, of Daventry, gent. (son of his brother Thomas), whose daughter and heiress Marianne, carried it in marriage to Charles Rattray, M. D. of Daventry, the present possessor. Court rolls of this manor, as early as the reign of Edward 3rd, are still extant[z], but no manorial privileges have been exercised of late years.

Manor House. By the inquisition after the death of Philip de Montgomery, 23 Edw. 1 (1294-5), there was found to be a capital messuage here, with garden and dove-house, worth 20s. yearly[a]. All memory, even of the site, has perished, but it probably stood in the field still called the park.

The Village is situated within four miles of Daventry, and eight miles of Northampton. In the time of Bridges there were 'forty houses, and four for the use of the poor[b].' By the census of 1801, it contained 61 houses and 309 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 64 houses and 310 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this lordship is £72. 16s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £1876. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £388. 10s. at 7s. 6d. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after the 4th of November.

The Advowson was immemorially regardant to the manor till 1625, when it was included in the purchase of the rev. William Philips, from Thomas Beaufou, esq. From this family it passed, by mesne conveyances, to George (Montague) 2nd earl of Halifax, the trustees of whose will, under an act of parliament, 13 Geo. 2 (1739-40), empowering them to dispose of certain estates to raise portions for younger children, &c. sold it, in 1742, to John Rose, of Daventry, gent. His only son, William Rose, esq. dying unmarried, devised this advowson to his sister Christian, wife of the rev. John Cadman, rector of this parish; on whose decease in 1812, at an advanced age, it devolved, in pursuance of her brother's will, to the son and heir of Mary, his other sister, the rev. William Lucas Holden, who had adopted the name of Rose by act of parliament in 1785, and under whose will it is now enjoyed by his widow for life, with remainder to his eldest son William Rose Rose, esq. of Chapel Brampton.

THE RECTORY is in the deanry of West Haddon. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[c], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[d], it is rated at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is valued at £13. 6s. 8d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[e]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified it to be a parsonage presentative, worth £73. 13s. 4d. per ann. in the supposed patronage of Samuel Philips; and that Richard Morris, the incumbent, was resident[f]. The rectory now consists of 187 a. 2 r. 8 p. in lieu of the glebe, tithes, and moduses of both the old and new inclosures and a share of the tithes of Muscote field, together with a rate tithe of 5*s.* 4½d. for the cottages and homesteads awarded by the commissioners of inclosure; and an annual payment of 3*s.* 4d. for the tithes of the mill. The parsonage-house, north-west of the church-yard, is a large genteel residence erected by the late incumbent, and contains a few good family portraits.

Richard Chaunterell was presented by John Beaufoe, esq. and instituted 22 Oct. 1557. His death introduced

Baldwin Uttinge, inst. 27 Nov. 1586, on the presentation of Thomas Beaufo, of Guy's Cliff in Warwickshire, esq. He survived only three or four years, when

John Tomlin was presented by the same patron, then described of Edmondscote in that county, and inst. 6 Aug. 1590. He was buried here 5 Mar. 1604-5[h], and

William Philips was inst. 2 Aug. 1605, on the presentation of sir Thomas Beaufo, of Guy's Cliffe, of whose son he purchased the advowson in 1625. He was buried here 5 July 1644[h], and was probably succeeded by Richard Morris, who was returned to be incumbent here by the parliamentary commissioners in 1655.

Samuel Philips, rector, subscribed to the act of uniformity 17 Aug. 1662[h], but when instituted, or by whom presented, does not appear. He was buried here 21 Mar. 1670-1[h], when a commission was issued by the bishop of Peterborough to enquire why John Freeman, clerk, should not be admitted to the rectory of Whilton on the presentation of Samuel Philips, gent.[i]

Henry Philips was inst. 6 Mar. 1673-4, but gave a bond of indemnity to the bishop, being presented by Thomas Carr, Mary Philips, widow, and John Langford, between whom and Samuel Philips, gent. proceedings at law concerning the advowson had been pending several years[k]. He was buried here 11 Aug. 1684[h], and John Nailer, of Pembroke coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. 12 Sept. 1684, on the presentation of John Smith, gent.

Samuel Rose, of Trinity coll. Camb. A. B. was presented by Richard Rose, of Monks Kirby in Warwickshire, gent. and inst. 14 Feb. 1698-9, vice the last incumbent, deceased. He resigned the rectory of Pitsford, which he had held from 1690, for this benefice; and, on his decease,

Henry Johnston, of Jesus coll. Camb. A. M. and LL. D. 1728, was inst. 3 Jan. 1719-20, on the presentation of John Rose, gent. He subsequently obtained considerable preferment, being rector of Stowmarket in Suffolk, chancellor of the diocese of Llandaff, prebendary of Lincoln, and rector of Stoke and Monks Soham in that county. He was grandson of the celebrated antiquary Nathaniel Johnston, M. D. of Pontefract, who devoted about 30 years to amassing materials for the illustration of the antiquities and natural history of Yorkshire; the greater part of whose collections, extending to 97 folio volumes, descended to him, and were sold after his decease in 1755, to Richard Frank, esq. On his resignation,

John Spateman, of Catherine Hall, Camb. A. M. was presented by George (Montagu) 2nd earl of Halifax, and inst. 22 Mar. 1722-3. He issued proposals in 1740 for publishing by subscription "Tobias, a poem in "blank verse, in 12 books, consisting of near 10,000 "lines;" but I know not whether it even made its appearance. In 1745 he published "Jesus, a poem in "blank verse; 6d." He died 20 June 1749, and was buried here on the 24th[1]. His successor,

John Cadman, of Pembroke coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 28 July 1749, on the presentation of his father-in-law John Rose, of Daventry, gent. He died in March 1766, and was buried at Daventry on the 25th[1], when

John Onely, of Christ coll. Camb. A. B. was presented by William Rose, of Daventry, esq. and inst. 30 Apr. 1766; but after retaining it ten years, resigned, and the same patron presented his nephew,

William Lucas Holden, of Clare hall, Camb. A. B. and A. M. 1782, who was inst. 16 Dec. 1776, and afterwards assumed the name of Rose. He has been already noticed under East Haddon, which vicarage he held with this rectory from 1782; and dying 16 Jan. 1814, was buried here on the 26th[1], when his second son, John Rose, fellow of Trinity coll. Camb. A. M. was presented by his mother Ann Rose, widow, and inst. 14 July 1814.

The Communion Plate comprises a flagon, chalice, paten, and salver, inscribed, the gift of William Rose, esq. in 1779.

The Registers commence in 1570.

The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, consists of a tower, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. Successive alterations and repairs have nearly obliterated every vestige of the original building. The upper part of the tower was erected at the expence of W. Rose, esq. the late patron, who contributed also a ring of six bells; and the chancel was rebuilt by the last incumbent. The interior is modernized to a state of great neatness. The tower is 10 ft. 10 in. long, by 14 ft. 4 in. wide; the nave and aisles 38 ft. 3 in. long; the nave 14 ft. 8 in.; the north aisle 11 ft. 10 in.; and the south aisle 8 ft. 10 in. wide; and the chancel 21 ft. 3 in long, by 16 ft. 2 in. wide. The nave is divided from each aisle by two pointed arches, rising from low circular pillars, with capitals of plain circular mouldings. Over the entrance into the chancel is a handsome small organ, presented by the late rector; and at the west end of the nave is a gallery for singers. Upon a beam in the old chancel was inscribed, 'Hoc instauravit Gulielmus Philips istius Ecclesiæ Rector & Patronus 1632[m].'

Sacred to the Memory
The Reverend William-Lucas Rose M. A.
Patron and Rector of this Church: and for many years an active and upright Magistrate for the County.
Constant in the practice of every Virtue that can adorn the Character of Master, Husband, and Father, he directed his chiefest care to the more important concerns of the Pastoral Office, conducting them for thirty-seven years with a fidelity, diligence, and zeal, which afforded to all who knew him abundant testimony that the service of his God, and the Spiritual improvement of his Flock, constituted the first Business and Pleasure of his Life.
Born September 3rd 1752.
Died January 16th 1814.

Benefactions (vide p. 81). School. About 30 years since, a school-house and garden adjoining, in Whilton, now in the occupation of the schoolmaster, and nearly 11 a. of land in Long Buckby, now let for £36 per ann. were purchased with Mr. Jonathan Emery's bequest of £500.

Mrs. Judith Worsfold, of Edmonton in Middlesex, daughter of the rev. John Spateman, formerly rector of this parish, died in March 1815, and by her will bequeathed £1000, 3 per cent. cons. which she directed to be invested in land for the augmentation of Emery's school in Whilton; and though such bequest was invalid by the statute of Mortmain, the parties entitled to the money generously forbore to avail themselves of the legal informality, and the amount of the legacy was paid, in February 1818, to the present rector, who has vested it in the 3 per cent. reduced.

Roman Antiquities. 'At Whilton and Heyford, not far distant from Wedon, we meet with many and 'evident Footsteps of the Romans[m].' 'In that part of Whilton Field adjoining to the Watling street, have been 'plow'd and digg'd up old Foundations, the Stones of ruin'd Walls, and the like; and amongst the Ruins some 'Pieces of Roman Money; which with the Country People there, have the Name of Dane-Money[n].'

Fawsley Hundred,

So denominated from the parish of that name, is bounded on the west and north-west by the county of Warwick, and on the north-east by Guilsborough hundred. The eastern side from the point of junction with Warwickshire and Guilsborough hundred is traversed for a distance of 12 or 14 miles by the Roman Watling-street road, which, on leaving Stowe lordship, enters the hundred of Towcester; but though its course lies throughout on the extreme border, it seldom or never supplies the precise line of division from the adjoining hundreds of Guilsborough, Newbottle Grove, and Towcester. The southern boundary is formed by the hundreds of Greens Norton and Chipping Warden.

The parishes and hamlets comprehended in this hundred are:

Ashby Ledgers; Badby (including Newnham); Barby (including Onley and Nortoft); Braunston; Catesby (including Upper and Lower Catesby, and Newbold); Charwelton (including Church and Town Charwelton); Daventry (including Drayton); Dodford; Everdon (including Great and Little Everdon, and Snoscomb); Farthingston; Fawsley; Hellidon; Kilsby; Litchborough; Norton (including Thorp); Preston Capes (including Great and Little Preston); Staverton; Stowe Nine Churches (including Church and Little Stowe); Wedon Bec (including Upper and Lower Wedon); and Welton.

This hundred is co-extensive with the two saxon hundreds of

GRAVESENDE and EGELWEARDESLE.

The former carries along with it its own etymology — ȝpave, wood, and ende, the end,—the end of the wood; and the latter is scarcely less obvious, being the genitive case of the saxon proprietor, combined with leȝ, a field — Egelweard or Aylward's field. Both names are evidently allusive to the places where the hundred meetings or courts were assembled.

By the account of the Northamptonshire hundreds, taken between the death of Edward the confessor and the norman conquest, there were in "Ghaverende" hundred, as in the days of king Edward, 100 hides; whereof 18½ hides were rated (or taxed), 35 hides were inland (or demesne), 5 hides were the king's own farm land, and the remaining 41½ hides were waste[a]. "Egelweardsherle" hundred contained also 100 hides, as in the days of king Edward: 16½ hides were rated (or taxed), 40 hides were inland (or demesne), and at "Norðtune" were 6½ hides, which paid nothing, belonging to Osmund the king's scribe; the remaining 37 hides were waste[b].

In the loose orthography of domesday, the former hundred occurs as Gravesende, Gravesend, Gravesede, and Gravsende; and the latter is noticed but twice, and spelt differently both times — Aluardeslea, and Aluratleu. The specific places attached to each of these hundreds in that invaluable survey it is now impossible to ascertain; for, through the ignorance or inadvertence, probably, of the norman transcriber, Barby[c] and Kilsby[d] only are assigned to Aluardeslea; and all the rest, not excepting Norton, which is expressly mentioned above as included in that hundred, are placed under the hundred of Gravesende. The certificate of hides in the reign of Hen. 2, however, rectifies the error, and supplies the omission, by the following distinct enumeration of their respective contents: in "Graveshende Falewesle" hundred, "Falewesle, Chelurdescote, Fardingstone, Wedon, Charwelton, Catesby, Eliden (Hellidon), Preston, Lichebarue, Everdon, Snobescombe, and Stowe[e]." In "Aylwoldesle" hundred, "Baddeby and Newenham, Norton, Thorp, Beruby, Gildesborn (Kilsby), Stav'ton, Braundeston, Davintre, Welton, Esseby (Ashby), Dodeford, and Chelredscote[f]." According to the foregoing distribution, Aylwoldesley comprised the northern, and Gravesend the southern moiety of the hundred as at present constituted; and the consolidation of them under the appellation of Fawsley hundred, took place towards the close of the 12th, or early in the 13th, century. The first time the hundred of "Falewesle" is distinctly recognised in a public record, is in a portion of the Testa de Nevill, which from circumstantial evidence may be safely dated between 1246 and 1255 (31 to 40 Hen. 3); and it is rather remarkable that no similar document is introduced relative to any other hundred in the county. It commences with the names of the knights or 12 jurors impannelled. Their presentment, arranged under each vill, follows, specifying the respective lords, and distinguishing those places which did suit to the hundred court, those which had subtracted suit, and those which claimed exemption, from having been transferred to the leet or jurisdiction of some capital honor or barony. In the several accounts of Barby, Badby, and Fawsley, it is stated that Hugh de Capes* had a grant of the hundred for life, rendering to the king 15 marks 8s. 4d. (£10. 8s. 4d.) yearly[g].

After his decease, the same king made a similar grant to William de Tulus, who, in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), had demised his interest to Thomas de Capes[h], son and heir of the above Hugh. In 33 Edw. 1 (1304-5), this hundred, then valued at £11. 16s. 8d. per ann. was (int. al.) assigned to queen Margaret in augmentation of dower[i]; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), it was certified to be in her possession[k]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1328), Isabella, the queen dowager, was required, by writ of quo warranto, to substantiate her right, amongst other claims, to view of frankpledge, with infangtheof and outfangtheof, in this hundred[l].

Anne, widow of Ivon Holewell, late one of the farmers of this hundred, was in 10 Ric. 2 (1386-7), attached to render to the king an account of its issues or profits[m]; and in 14 Hen. 4 (1412-13), William Carnell rendered an account of the issues of this hundred, formerly belonging to queen Philippa (widow of Edw. 3), deceased[n]. "In the nineteenth year of Henry VI° (1440-1), Ralph Rawlins, Esq. was bailiff of the liberty of the Hundred of 'Fawesley, and amerced xxs. for a neglect in the discharge of his office. In the twenty-eighth year of Henry VI. 'this hundred with the bailywick of the Hundred was[p] granted to Thomas Bradley, Esq. who paid ten pounds 'per annum for the farm of it. [q] In the thirty-third year of the same reign a like grant was made of it to Thomas 'Willoughby, Esq. and the rent advanced to xl. and xii d. but before the expiration of the year' it was given from 'him to Thomas Rothwell and John Allen.' Thomas Rothwell, in 36 Hen. 6 (1457-8), obtained a second grant for the term of 12 years[r]. The hundred of Fawsley was included in the jointure settled on Elizabeth, queen of Edw. 4[t]; but appears to have been seised by Hen. 7 into his own hands, for in the act of resumption passed in the 1st year of his reign, amongst the exceptions, is the appointment of Richard Morley to be bailiff of this hundred[s]. In 18 Hen. 7 (1503), John Abell had a grant of the bailiwick of this hundred[t]. How long it continued in the crown, under the custody of a bailiff removable at pleasure, or when it was first demised to the family of Knightley*, I have vainly endeavoured to ascertain.

The hundred court was formerly held in Fawsley park beneath the spreading branches of an enormous beech tree, called Mangrave; which, however, according to Morton, 'seemed to be two or three different stems united 'in their growth, rather than one single trunk,' and measured 19 feet in circuit above the spurs[y]. It was felled about 30 years since, but the site is still remembered. Imagination may without "running riot" identify this spot with the end or boundary of the wood, where, in the saxon era, the meetings were convened at the primary institution of the hundred; and the local historian might with peculiar propriety have adopted the beautiful apostrophe addressed by the poet to another celebrated tree in this county[z]:

"By thee I might correct, erroneous oft,
"The clock of history, facts and events
"Timing more punctual, unrecorded facts
"Recov'ring, and misstated setting right."

The hundred court was removed about the beginning of the last century to Everdon, but it has now nearly fallen into disuse.

"Celverdescote," in "Gravesend" Hundred,

At the domesday survey, belonged to the earl of Moreton, and contained four hides. The arable land was 10 caruates. Two hides were in demesne, and there was one servant: and nine villeins, with three bordars and a priest, had four caruates and a half. There were six acres of meadow, and a wood two furlongs long, and one and a half broad. It had been rated at 40s. yearly, but was then trebled in value. Turbern and Alli held it freely before the norman conquest[a]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2, two hides of "Chelurdescote" were certified to be in "Graveshende Falwesle" hundred, of the fee of the earl of Leicester[b]; one hide and two small virgates held by Geoffrey de Toreville, of the fee of the earl of Leicester in "Aylwoldesle" hundred[c]; and half a hide in the hundred of "Abbodestowe" (King's Sutton).

There can be no doubt of this vill having been seated within Gravesende hundred, as it is the first place surveyed after a fresh heading of the hundred; but neither subsequent documentary evidence, nor tradition, afford the shadow of a clue to rescue it again from oblivion.

ASHBY LEDGERS,

In domesday "Ascebi," is probably compounded of the saxon Æsc, an ash tree, and bÿe, a dwelling or habitation; with the addition of Ledgers from the patron saint of the church, to distinguish it from other villages in the county of the same name. The lordship contains about 1920 acres, and the open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 4 Geo. 3 (1764). About 1320 acres belong to the devisees of the late Joseph Ashley, esq. lord of the manor and impropriator; about 510 acres, principally old inclosure, to George Henry Arnold, esq. of Ashby Lodge; and about 66 acres to the vicar, in right of his church. It is bounded on the north by Kilsby, from which it is partly divided by a brook, which rises between the two parishes, and joins the river Nen beyond Watford; east by Watford, in Guilsborough hundred; south by Welton; and west by Braunston. The soil is various: on the north it is a deep clay; towards the south, light and gravelly; and approaching the west, light, on a substratum of stone. The Fritillaria Meleagris, chequered Daffodil, is the only scarce plant which has been noticed here. Several birds of unusual occurrence in this neighbourhood have been shot in this lordship within the last few years: Picus Medius, the middle-spotted Woodpecker; Loxia Curvirosta, Cross-Bill, or Shell Apple; Columba turtur, Turtle Dove; Rallus aquaticus, Water Rail; Fulica atra, Bald Coot; Anas crecca, Teal; Pelicanus bassanus, Gannet or Soland Goose.

Manorial History. Grentemaisnil Fee. Honor of Leicester*. At the domesday survey Hugh held under Hugh de Grentemaisnil four hides in "Ascebi." The arable land was ten carucates, of which three carucates were in demesne, and six servants; and fifteen villeins and three bondmen had five carucates, leaving two waste or unaccounted for. There were eight acres of meadow. The whole had been rated at 40s. but was then increased to 60s. yearly[a]. Hugh de Grentemaisnil accompanied William the conqueror to England, who rewarded his services with upwards of 100 manors in the different counties, but principally in Leicestershire and Northamptonshire. In this county he retained only part of (West) Farndon in demesne, but was paramount lord of the whole, or portions, of 13 lordships, besides Ashby Ledgers. He was associated with Odo bishop of Baieux, and William Fitz Osborn, in executing the high office of justiciary of England. He endeavoured to reconcile the king to his eldest son Robert Curthose, whose claim to the crown, on the death of the conqueror, he supported against his younger brother William Rufus, but subsequently became one of his warmest opponents. He died in 7 Will. 2 (1094), a few days after assuming the habit of a monk, and was succeeded by his son Robert de Grentemaisnil, who survived him 28 years, but died s. p., leaving Ivo de Grentemaisnil, his eldest surviving brother and heir. In 3 Hen. 1, he joined the confederacy in support of Robert Carthose, but the enterprize failing, and being heavily fined for his delinquency, he solicited the mediation of Robert earl of Mellent, one of the king's chief counsellors, at whose suggestion he resolved on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem; and to enable him to carry his purpose into execution, borrowed of him 500 marks (£333. 6s. 8d.), for which he pledged his whole estate in security for 15 years, on condition that it should be restored to his son Ivo, whom the earl engaged on oath should be married to his niece, the daughter of Henry (Newburgh) earl of Warwick. The king ratified the agreement, but Ivo, the father, dying on his pilgrimage, the son was deprived both of his wife and his inheritance. Hugh de Grentemaisnil, son or brother of the younger Ivo, appears to have recovered his patrimony, which principally descended to Parnell, or Petronilla, his eldest daughter and coheiress.

In the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Esseby" was certified to contain four hides of the fee of the earl of Leicester[b]; and in 6 Joh. (1204), Petronilla, countess of Leicester, owed the king 3000 marks (£2000) for the free enjoyment of her inheritance, including the town of Leicester with its appurtenances, and all the knights' fees and demesnes of the honor of Grentemaisnil[c]. The earldom and honor of Leicester subsequently became annexed to, or parcel of, the duchy of Lancaster, as will be shewn under DODFORD.

CRANFORD MANOR. By the inquisition of knights' fees, taken 12 and 13 Joh. (1210-11), it was found that William de Cranford and Leodegarius, or Ledger de Dive, had one fee in this county of the portion of the fees of Leicester, then in the king's hands[d], by escheat from Simon Montfort. In 16 Joh. (1214), the sheriff was directed to deliver to John de Arden the custody of the lands and heir of William de Cranford within his bailiwick, except the wardship should exceed in value 10 marks[e] (£6. 13s. 4d.) In the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240), John de Cranford, William de Dyve, Andrew de Thorp, and Simon de Turevill, are returned to hold one fee in "Esseby Cranford" of the fees of Montfort, of the honor of Leicester[f]; and in another part of the same record, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented, that there were four hides in "Esseby" of the fee of the earl of Leicester, and that John de Cranford and William de Dive were lords, but neither of them came to do suit to the hundred court[g]. The Cranford manor descended to Emma, daughter and heiress of Robert de Cranford, who, with her first husband John Saxinford, levied a fine of the manor of "Ashby Leger," and 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) rent there, in 48 Edw. 3[h] (1374); and in Michaelmas term the same year Margaret de Cranford, mother of Emma, levied another fine of the manor in fee tail[i] to her daughter, who soon after carried it in marriage to her second husband, John de Catesby, of Ladbroke in Warwickshire, one of the commissioners appointed in that county for the suppression of unlawful assemblies in the reign of Ric. 2. In 13 Hen. 4 (1411-12) his widow, and John de Catesby her son, obtained a grant of free warren in their demesne lands of Rodburne, Ladbroke, and Shuckburgh in Warwickshire, and "Assheby leger," Welton, and Watford, in this county[k]. Sir William Catesby, grandson of John, in conjunction with sir Richard Ratcliffe, and viscount Lovell, formed the triumvirate which gave rise to the memorable distich—

"The Rat, the Cat, and Lovell our dog,
"Rule all England under the hog;"

alluding to king Richard 3rd having adopted a boar for one of his supporters. For this poetical libel, Collingbourn, the author, was "hanged, headed, and quartered" on Tower-hill. Catesby is charged with ungratefully deserting or betraying his early patron lord Hastings, to whose friendship he owed his introduction to the Usurper, who in the first year of his reign constituted him esquire of the body, chancellor and chamberlain of the exchequer for life, and chancellor of the marches of Wales. He obtained grants also of various forfeited manors and lucrative wardships; and, amongst other local appointments, was steward of the manors in this county belonging to the duchy of Lancaster, master forester of Rockingham, "justice" of Whittlebury forest, and joint constable, with viscount Lovell, of Rockingham castle. He was well versed in the law of the land, and is said to have made the judges shake at his displeasure. He followed the fortunes of his royal master to the fatal field of Bosworth, where he was taken prisoner, and three days after beheaded at Leicester. On the morning of his execution he made the following will: "This is the Will of William Catesby Esq. made the xxv[th] of August 1 H. 7. to be "executed by my dere and welbeloved wife, to whom I have ever be trew of my Body, putting my sole trust in "her for the executing thereof for the helth of my soul, the which I am undoubted she will execute: and for my "Body, when she may, to be beryed in the Church of S. Sir James Blount[m]; and in the following year his manors, called Catesby, alias Peyton's manor, in Welton; Gauge's manor, in Wold; Revell's manor, in Buckby; Catesby's manor, in Watford; Watford's manor, in Great Creton; and the moiety of the manor of Crick, were granted to sir David Owen and his heirs male[n].

His son George Catesby, esq. however, in 11 Hen. 7 (1495), obtained a reversal of his father's attainder[o], and the restitution of his lands. He died in 21 Hen. 7 (1505), possessed of this manor[p], having, "by his Testament "bearing date 8 Maii, 19 H. 7. bequeathed his Body to be buried in the Church of Ashby Legers, before the "Image of the Holy Trinity, in his Chapell there, appointing that two Marble Stones, Price of each vi l. xiii s. iiij d. "should be brought thither, one to be layd upon his Father and Mother, and the other upon himself, as a "Memoriall for him and his Wife[q]."

Sir William Catesby, great grandson of George, was, on the 15th of Nov. 1581 (23 Eliz.) cited before the court of star chamber, with lord Vaux, of Harrowden, and sir Thomas Tresham, of Rushton, for harbouring the jesuits in their houses, and being present at the celebration of mass; of which offences, rendered punishable by statutes recently enacted, they were convicted, principally on the confession of Campion, one of that order, who was shortly after executed for treasonable practices. Amongst the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, is a detailed account of this trial, supposed to be drawn up by sir Thomas Tresham, in which he states the reasons why a christian should refuse to answer upon oath in matters of conscience, though such oath be tendered by the lawful magistrate[r].

Robert Catesby, esq. the son and successor of sir William, is "damned to everlasting fame," as the projector of the diabolical Gunpowder Plot in 1605. He was a man of considerable talents, insinuating manners, and inflexible resolution; daring and fertile in expedients, but subtle and circumspect in the developement of his purposes; and ready to sacrifice his life, his fortune, and every feeling of humanity, in defence of the Roman Catholic cause. Towards the close of the reign of Elizabeth, he, and Francis Tresham, esq. son of the above sir Thomas, engaged with Garnet and Tesmond, two jesuits, in secret intrigues for the overthrow of the protestant establishment. In 1601, Thomas Winter was sent by them to solicit the co-operation of the court of Spain, and returned with promises of active support; but the death of the queen, and a treaty of peace between James and the Spanish king, destroyed all hopes of foreign aid; and the expectations they had been led to cherish, of James tolerating their religion, being also dissipated by his avowed determination of enforcing the penal statutes, and pursuing the vigorous measures of his predecessor, Catesby resolved to resort to desperate means, and conceived the infernal idea of accomplishing the restoration of popery, by ingulfing the king and both houses of parliament in one common tomb. He first ventured to disclose his horrid secret, about Easter 1604 (2 Jac. 1), in a conversation with his friend Percy, one of the king's pensioners, and distantly related to the earl of Northumberland, on the injuries and persecutions suffered by their catholic brethren; when Percy, in the heat of momentary passion, offering to rush into the presence chamber and assassinate the king, Catesby replied, to what purpose would the king be removed, so long as the other branches of the royal family survived to perpetuate his maxims of government? nor would even the extinction of the royal house be sufficient, whilst a parliament remained devoted to the same views and principles. The only way, therefore, to secure that object, was to extirpate all the seeds of heresy at once, which might be safely and easily effected, by laying a mine of gunpowder under the parliament house, and exploding it at the moment the king was opening the session with his speech from the throne. Percy entered warmly into the project, which was next communicated to Winter, who was dispatched in search of Guy Fawkes, an officer in the spanish service, in whose bravery and prudence they placed the fullest confidence. Catesby, Percy, Winter, Fawkes, and Christopher Wright interchangeably vowed fidelity under the double sanction of an oath and the holy sacrament; and their new associates, as they were successively enlisted, were subjected to the same solemn tests. Percy having hired the house adjoining the one in which parliament was accustomed to meet, the conspirators commenced their operations in December, under the direction of Fawkes, who passed for Percy's servant. With such zeal did they embark in the cause, and so anxious were they to elude observation, that they carried in with them provisions for three weeks, and laboured day and night in excavating the foundations; but the walls being upwards of three yards in thickness, their progress was necessarily slow, and they began to despair of completing their enterprize before the meeting of parliament, which was announced for the beginning of February (1604-5), when an opportunity unexpectedly offered of hiring the vaults immediately beneath the house of lords, into which, at various times, they privately conveyed 36 barrels of gunpowder, carefully covering the whole with coals and faggots; and the prorogation of the parliament to October afforded them ample leisure for completing the subordinate arrangements of their plot. As the duke of York, the king's youngest son (afterwards Charles 1st), an infant five years old, was not likely to be present, Percy undertook to be in readiness to convey him away or assassinate him; and a party, under the pretence of hunting, was to assemble near lord Harrington's house, at Combe in Warwickshire, where the princess Elizabeth then resided, to seize her person; and proclaiming her queen, use her name in stilling and composing the minds of the people. The band of conspirators now amounted to above twenty persons, including sir Everard Digby and Francis Tresham, esq. the former of whom contributed £1500, and the latter £2000, towards carrying their plans into execution. Nearly eighteen months had elapsed without the slightest suspicion being awakened; and all had proved themselves so true to their purpose, and to each other, that they were more concerned how to manage their success, than to fear it. The 5th of November was finally fixed for the meeting of parliament. Never was ruin more apparently inevitable; but as the crisis approached, friendship prompted a mysterious warning to (William Parker) lord Monteagle, the brother-in-law of Tresham. The letter, which had neither date nor signature, conjured him, as he valued his life, to absent himself from parliament, for "they would receive a terrible blow, and yet not see who hurt them." Perplexed and surprised, he felt inclined to consider it a foolish attempt to render him ridiculous, by making him the dupe of a false alarm; but reflecting that the safety of others might possibly be involved, he repaired with it to lord Salisbury, the secretary of state, who, coupling the circumstances with the vague intimations which had previously reached him from abroad, of a catholic conspiracy, deemed it of sufficient importance to communicate to the king. The ambiguous expressions pointing to the suddenness of the danger, and the invisibility of the hand, strongly indicated an intended explosion of gunpowder; and it was determined, therefore, to explore the vaults underneath the houses of parliament. The search was conducted by sir Thomas Knevett, and proper attendants, between twelve and one o'clock in the morning of the 5th of Nov. (1605), when Guy Fawkes was arrested at the door of one of the vaults, which they entered, and removing the fuel, discovered the concealed gunpowder. Fawkes had completed his preparations, and three matches, a tinder box, and dark lanthorn were found on his person. Disdaining to affect innocence, he boldly gloried in his meditated guilt, and declared, that had he been within the vault when detected, he would have set fire to the train, and thus have put an end to all enquiry.

Catesby had quitted London the preceding evening on his way to Dunchurch in Warwickshire, the place of rendezvous for the party who were to secure the princess Elizabeth. Sir Everard Digby, to whom this enterprize was confided, kept his appointment faithfully, but the attempt failed, and the princess escaped into Coventry. Percy, the two Winters, and the other confederates who waited the issue of the main plot in London, had by this time joined them with the disastrous intelligence of Fawkes's arrest. Despair generates resolution, and they endeavoured to incite a general rising of the catholics, but the number of their adherents never exceeded eighty or an hundred; and sir Richard Verney, the sheriff of the county, having, at the head of the posse comitatus, taken some of them prisoners, and pursued the remainder to the borders of that county, they continued their flight till they reached Holbeach, in the parish of King's Swinford, Staffordshire, a house belonging to Stephen Lyttelton, gent. one of their associates, where they resolved to make a desperate stand. They refused to surrender on the summons of the sheriff, and had defended themselves two days, when, by a singular coincidence, they were defeated by the same means which they had employed to destroy others; for, having spread some gunpowder in a pan to dry, and a spark accidentally dropping amongst it, as a servant was passing to light a fire in the room, it instantly ignited, wounded several of the conspirators, blew up the roof, and set fire to the house. Reduced to a state of utter hopelessness, they rushed out in the face of their enemies, one of whom loaded his piece with two bullets, and taking aim at Catesby and Percy, who were standing together, mortally wounded both of them; Catesby dying on the spot, and Percy surviving only two days. All their confederates were either killed or taken prisoners, except Lyttelton and Thomas Winter, who escaped, but were afterwards apprehended, and hanged at Worcester. Digby, Fawkes, Rookwood, Grant, Thomas Winter, Keyes, and Bates, Catesby's servant, were convicted of high treason, and executed in London. Tresham died prisoner in the Tower previous to being brought to trial. Garnet, provincial of the jesuits, and Tesmond, another jesuit, subsequently suffered death for concealing their knowledge of the conspiracy, communicated to them at confession. Catesby, at the outset of his horrid scheme, was startled by the reflection, that some who were decidedly friendly to the catholic cause, and others who were at least neutral, would fall victims to the blow directed against their enemies; but these scruples were soon silenced by the sophistry of Garnet, who maintained that when the interests of the true religion were at stake, it was perfectly justifiable to sacrifice the innocent in order to secure the guilty. Thus fortified, he confirmed the resolutions of the wavering, and so unbounded was the influence he obtained over his companions in guilt, that both Digby and Rookwood declared they had been guided solely by his judgment, and would have hazarded their lives in any enterprize which he advocated.

An act of parliament was passed "for the attainder of divers offenders, in the late most barbarous, monstrous, "detestable, and damnable treasons[1];" and the estates of Catesby thus escheating to the crown, the manor, lordship, and advowson of the vicarage of "Ashby Legers" were granted in 9 Jac. 1 (1611), to

Sir William Irving, in fee[1]; who, the following year, to strengthen his title, gave Richard Catesby, esq. the tenant in tail under a settlement made by sir William Catesby, father of the conspirator, £1600 for a release of his right by fine and recovery.

Dyve Manor or Estate. Leodegarius de Dive, already mentioned under the Cranford manor as a joint proprietor of this vill, was probably a branch of the Dyves of East Haddon; and the supposition is strengthened by certain lands here being, in late inquisitions, returned to be of that barony [a], but the point of connection cannot now be traced. In 17 Joh. (1215), he was constable of Knaresborough Castle in Yorkshire, and a mandate was issued to provide him with £20 in land for his support, out of the possessions of the king's enemies [x]. William de Dive had this estate in the reign of Hen. 3 [y]; soon after which it passed to another family, for on the inquisition in Ledgers Ashby [z]; and in 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), he was certified to be joint lord with Nicholas Cranford [a]. In 46 Edw. 3 (1372), John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, in consideration of £23. 6s. 8d. granted to John Osborn, of Braunston, the wardship of the lands of John de Stoke, of "Asheby Leger," until the full age of the heir [b]. In 3 Hen. 4 (1402), Emma Catesby obtained a similar grant of wardship of the heir of Thomas Stokes [c]; and the line probably became extinct in the issue of Thomas Stokes who died in 1416 (4 Hen. 5), and to whose memory there is a handsome brass plate in the south aisle of the church.

Turville Lands. To the notice of this estate in the Testa de Nevill, which has been incidentally introduced under the Cranford manor, it remains only to add, that at the death of Edmund earl of Lancaster, Nicholas Turville held one fee of him in Ashby Ledgers, Adston, and Croughton, and a fee and a half in Helmdon [a], where a pedigree of the family will be given.

Catesby Priory had lands here at an early period, but the donors are not known. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), their temporalities here were valued at 26s. 8d. per ann.[a]; part were granted in 37 Hen. 8 (1545), to George Rithe and Thomas Grantham[b]; and the remainder, in 4 and 5 Ph. and Mar. (1557) to William Rigges and William Buckberde[c].

Nuneaton Priory, in Warwickshire, had possessions here which were valued at 9s. at the dissolution[d], and sold to William Crowther in 1557[e].

The Prior of St. John of Jerusalem had lands here, which were held under them, prior to the dissolution, by the family of Burnaby of Watford[h].

Ashby Lodge Estate. The manor, or manors, impropriate rectory, advowson of the vicarage, and entire lordship of Ashby, centered in the Jansons; but becoming deeply encumbered with heavy mortgages, Bryan Janson, sen. esq. and Bryan Janson, jun. esq. his son and heir, joined in vesting the whole in the hands of trustees for certain specified uses; as to "the Lodge ground, with the Lodge therein standing," and various other old inclosures, with the impropriate tithes arising therefrom, and Follom wood, in Braunston parish, in trust, to sell[i] towards the liquidation of the incumbrances. In May 1680, Thomas 2nd lord Leigh, of Stoneley in Warwickshire, entered into an agreement to purchase this estate for £4,400, "the money to be received and counted and "sealed up att Rockingham, and my Lord to be att the hazard of any robbery betweene that and Daventry." It was accordingly, in September following, conveyed by the two Jansons, their trustees and mortgagees, to his lordship in fee, who settled it on the hon. Lewis Leigh, his second son; but he dying unmarried, his lordship devised it to the hon. Charles Leigh, of Leighton Buzzard in Bedfordshire, his second surviving son, of whom it was purchased, in 1718, by George Arnold, esq. great-grandfather of George Henry Arnold, esq. the present possessor[l].

The site of a manor, probably Dyve's, is on this estate; no manor nor manorial privileges, however, are mentioned in the conveyance, and the subjoined pedigree should, therefore, in strict conformity with the plan of this work, have been reserved for the manorial history of Barby; but as the family reside in this lordship, it will, perhaps, be more appropriately introduced here.

The Manor house of the Catesbys stands contiguous to the north side of the church yard. The west and south fronts retain their original character, and are finished with gables and an open parapet; the east front is modernized. In the hall, which is wainscotted in pannels, are several family portraits of the Ashleys, amongst which are, Joseph Ashley, esq. and his lady, Solomon Ashley, esq. M. P. and John Ashley, esq.

Over the gateway, between the west end of the church and the house, is an old chamber with a bay window, where, according to the tradition of the neighbourhood, Catesby held frequent conferences with Percy and the other conspirators *

Another Manor House stood at the north western extremity of the village. It is now a mere cottage; but in the adjoining field, the foundations of an extensive building, probably the ancient residence of the families of Dyve and Stokes, are still visible.

Ashby Lodge is situated near the western boundary of the lordship, and was built by George Arnold, esq. in 1722. The late proprietor enriched it with an interesting assemblage of pictures, principally by the old Masters. The most prominent in the Drawing Room are, the Crucifixion, Cornelius Poelemburg; Christ appearing to the two disciples after crucifixion, a sketch by Rubens; virgin and child, Paul Veronese; a Magdalen, Rubens; Voss and

The grounds in the immediate vicinage of the house are tame and uninteresting, but the scene is enlivened by a fine expanse of water covering about 25 acres. From the opposite banks, a belt of thriving plantations lead to an elevated ridge, which opens into Braunston Cleves (or Fallom wood), a romantic spot of singular beauty, intersected by shady secluded walks, disposed and planted with great taste, and winding up to a rustic temple on the summit, from whence an almost illimitable champaign stretches on the view. In the distant line of horizon may be discerned Edge hill, on the borders of Warwickshire and Oxfordshire; the Malvern hills, in Worcestershire and Gloucestershire; and the Clee hills in Shropshire; and the spires of Coventry glitter conspicuously in the valley to the right. With the assistance of a glass, in a clear atmosphere, some of the Welsh mountains are said to be visible.

THE VILLAGE is about five miles from Daventry, on the right of the turnpike road to Lutterworth in Leicestershire. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'fifty houses, but there was a tradition among the inhabitants 'that it was anciently a market town[k].' By the census of 1801, it contained 44 houses and 232 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 36 houses and 229 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £142. 15s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3608. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £458. 8s. 6d. at 5s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the 2nd of October, the feast of St. Leodegarius or Ledgers.

ADVOWSON. In the foundation of Laund priory, in Leicestershire, by Richard Basset[o] and Matilda Ridel, his wife, about 1125, the church of "Essebi" formed part of the original endowment, as appears from the confirmation charters of king Henry 1st[l]. In the confirmation charter of Hugh bishop of Lincoln, it is called the church of St. Leodegarius of "Asseby[m]"; and in that of Robert bishop of Lincoln, "Assebi juxta Davintre[n]." The right of Basset to this advowson must have been derived from a grant during the period when the possessions of Ivo de Grentemaisnil were seized into the king's hands; and that his representatives on their restitution contested the validity of the donation, is evident from the pension paid out of the rectory by the priory of Laund to the priory of Ware in Hertfordshire, a cell to the abbey of St. Ebrulf in Normandy, founded by the Grentemaisnils; a payment which may safely be regarded as the terms of commutation for the relinquishment of their claim. After the dissolution, this rectory was (int. al.) granted in 34 Eliz (1592), to William Tipper and Robert Dawe[o], but subsequently surrendered by them to the crown; and in 3 Jac. (1605) re-granted to Henry Stanley and John Standish, gents[p], who conveyed it the same year to sir Clement Fisher, by whom it was sold, in 1616, to Bryan Janson, esq. and thus became united in ownership with the advowson of the vicarage, which had passed with the manor since the attainder of Catesby.

THE RECTORY was valued, in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[q], and of 1291 (20 Edw 1)[r], at 15 marks (£10) per ann. deducting an annual pension of two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.); in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the profits, as farmed by the priory of Laund, were rated at £12 per ann.[s]; and on the dissolution of the priory, at £10. 13s. 4d. per ann.[t] The commissioners of inclosure allotted 148 a. 1 r. 16 p. in lieu of the rectorial tithes of the open fields; and the whole of the old inclosures belong to the impropriators, except the Ashby Lodge estate, which was exonerated from the impropriate tithes, when sold by the Jansons.

THE VICARAGE is in the deanry of Daventry. The priory of Laund obtained an appropriation of this church during the episcopacy of Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln[l], between 1209 and 1235; but the vicarage then ordained may be presumed to have been relinquished prior to the taxations of 1254 and 1291, as no valuation of it occurs in either of them. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the vicarage is returned at £6. 13s. 4d. per ann. free from deductions[s]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, certified it to be a vicarage worth £36 per ann.; that Bryan Janson, esq. was patron, Mr. Richard Smith, incumbent; and that it was two miles distant from any other church[u]. It is a discharged living, being returned, under the act 5 Anne (1707), to be only of the clear yearly value of £35. 7s.; and has been exonerated from land tax by the commission appointed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), when it was entered of the clear yearly value of £107. 7s. 6d. The vicarage now consists of 66 a. 0 r. 5 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the vicarial tithes of the open fields; a modus or annual payment of £4 for the old inclosures of the Ashley estate, and another of £11 for those of the Arnold estate. The vicarage house stands a short distance west of the church, but is unfit for residence.

THE REGISTERS commence in 1554.

THE CHURCH stands at the east end of the village, and is dedicated to St. Leodegarius, or Ledgers, bishop of Angustodunum, or Autun, in France, who was canonized in 685. It consists of a tower, containing four bells, nave, north aisle, porch, and chapel, south aisle and porch, and chancel. The tower is 10 ft. 10 in. long, by 7 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave 53 ft. by 21 ft. 2 in.; the north aisle 54 ft. 5 in. by 10 ft. 11 in.; the north chapel 31 ft. 5 in. by 10 ft. 10 in.; the south aisle 52 ft. by 12 ft. 5 in.; and the chancel 32 ft. 2 in. by 15 ft. The interior is only partially paved with stone, and still retains some of the old horizontal pews. The nave is divided from each aisle by four uniform pointed arches, on lofty multangular pillars with plain capitals. At the east end of the south aisle is a piscina; and attached to the western pillar is a plain cylindrical font, elevated on two steps. "In one of the windows of the church," says Vincent[z], "there is kneeling, John Catesby and Margaret his wife, "and sir William their son, in the middle pane, with their hands up; in the pane behind kneel two women, who "seem to be their daughters, with arms, whereby may be gathered, that the eldest was married to Richard Har-"rowden, esq. who bears, Ar. a chevron G. between three martlets S. like Bagot" [from whom he descended, through St. John of Plumpton]; "the other, to John Tirringham*, who bears, Az. a saltire engrailed Ar.; in the "third pane, it seemeth, there were three other of their sons, the writing under them being broken out; the 1st "broke out; the second hath a cross formy on his upper lion O.; and the 3rd, a border G." No trace of this memorial now remains; but, coupled with the circumstances of each aisle being lighted with four uniform windows of the 15th century, and the arcades dividing both aisles from the nave being of a corresponding period, the strongest presumption is raised of the church having been rebuilt by this John de Catesby. The north chapel is of an earlier period, and was afterwards assigned to the chantry, founded towards the close of the reign of Hen. 6. The three windows on the north side, and the east window, all exhibit mutilated borders of stained glass round the mullions, and amongst imperfect remnants of arms in the quaterfoil compartments above, the following coats may still be distinguished. In the 1st window, 1, G. a lion rampant, qu. Ar.; 2, G. a fess O. between six bezants, ... impaling, G. two bends O. Fitzwith; 3, Ar. a lion passant S. crowned O. Catesby, in base Az. a chevron Erm. impaling, G. two bends O. Fitzwith; 3, Ar. a lion passant S. crowned O. within a border G. Ladbroke, impaling barry of six Vaire and G. Keynes; 4, Ar. two lions passant S. crowned O. Valence earl of Pembroke, 2 and 3, O. a maunch G. Hastings earl of Pembroke; 2, O. three fishes naiant in pale within a border engrailed Ar.; 3, Keynes, impaling G. a fess between six martlets O. Beauchamp, of Powick, co. Worc. In the 3rd window, Az. a cinquefoil Erm. Astley, impaling Az. two lions passant Ar. Camville. In the east window, Vaire O.

and G. Ferrars, impaling Az. a lion rampant gardant, semée of fleurs de lis G. The two arches, which communicated with the chancel, are built up; and in the wall is a piscina on a shaft. Between the nave and the chancel is an elaborately carved wooden screen, formerly gilt and painted, which spreads into fan tracery above the arched compartments, and forms the basis of a rood loft, ascended by a staircase at the end—the only perfect one which I have hitherto met with in the county. In the south wall of the chancel is a piscina and locker.

6. At the east end of the aisle, nearly concealed by a pew, is the brass figure of sir Richard Catesby in plate armour. His head rests on his helmet and crest; and on his arms and tabard are displayed, quarterly, 1 and 4, Catesby, 2, bendy of eight (O. and Az.) within a border (G.) Montfort of Lapworth, 3, (O.) two bars (G.), over all a bend (Az.) Braundeston; impaling, quarterly, 1 and 4, bendy of eight (O. and Az.) a canton (Erm.) Bishopston, 2, (Az.) an eagle displayed (Ar.) Willicote, 3, (Ar.) a chevron engrailed between three escallop shells (S.) Trillow. In the dexter chief of the slab is a shield with the same bearings; the shields at the other corners cannot now be seen. The inscription is partly destroyed, and the remainder is inaccessible, but, according to Bridges[a], it was,

Here lyeth Syr Richard Catesbye Knt. who dyed in Marrii viij of Edw. VJ. He married first the daughter of Sir John Spencer Knt by whome he had yssue William, Thomas, George, John, Joabell, Jane, and ii he married Elizabeth daughter of William Astell esq; and by hir had Richarde, Edmond, Edward, Jane and Elizabeth, and iii he married the daughter of Edmund Lord Bray, and by her had only Anne.

NORTH CHAPEL OR CHANTRY. In this chapel, sometimes called St. Mary's chapel, Bridges states[a] that 'several of the Catesbyes were buried, though the Inscriptions on their monuments are now effaced. 'Amongst the rest, there lay John de Catesby, the first of 'the family who possessed this Lordship, with Emma 'his wife, as may be gathered from two escutcheons 'remaining over their heads, the one of Ladbroke quar-'tering Catesby, and the other of Catesby impaling Cran-'ford. In this place was likewise the following inscrip-'tion.

Here lyeth William Catesbye son and heire of George, who died the last of September 1581.

9. Under a small brass figure of an ecclesiastic:

Hic jacet d'n'us Willi'us Smyght quondam Rector eccl'ie de Dxhulle
ac etiam Rector eccl'e de Eldrosk qui obiit quarto decimo die mensis
Februarii anno d'ni mill'o v° decimo cui' a'i'e p'picietur deus ame'.

10. On a slab in the middle of the aisle are two small brass figures. The man is in a lay habit, and the woman in loose flowing drapery with a veil over her head. From the hands of both, which are elevated, issue labels; on his is inscribed, Parce nobis d'ne; and on hers, miserere n'r'i d'ne. Over their heads is an arched canopy, surmounted by two slender columns, supporting a crocketed arch, with lateral finials. At their feet is inscribed:

Hic jacent Thomas Stokes Armig. qui obiit xviij die
mensis Aprilis anno dom' mill'o ccccxvi & Etern us' eius ac pueri eorumdem quor' animabus p'picietur deus Amen.

Beneath the man are four sons, kneeling; and beneath the woman, a group of twelve daughters, closely ranged above each other, in three receding rows.

CHANCEL. II. In the middle of the chancel is a large grey marble slab, on which, in the time of Bridges, were still remaining the effigies of sir William Catesby and his two wives, in brass[a]. They have since been torn off, but by the shape of the impress, it is evident they were represented in winding-sheets. Round their heads were semicircular, or rather horse-shoe, labels; and small labelled scrolls were profusely dispersed over the whole surface.

This chapel is now appropriated for the burial place of the Arnold family, and has been entirely new paved.

SOUTH AISLE. 7. On a brass plate is a small figure of a man in plate armour, with mail collar and skirts, and a long sword, kneeling on an embroidered cushion. The arms of Catesby are repeated on his arms and tabard, but the inscription is destroyed.

8. On a brass plate fixed into one of the pannels of a pew:

Emeon ille Ricardus erat cognomine dictus.

Below the principal figures were placed six children; and at each corner of the slab is a shield. In the dexter chief, quarterly, 1, Catesby, 2, Montfort, 3, (Az.) a chevron (Erm.) Ladbroke, 4, (G.) a fret (O.) and chief (Ar.) Cranford; impaling, 1, (G.) three bars (gobonated Ar. and S.) Barre, 2, (G.) a lion rampant within a border engrailed (O.) Talbot, 3, defaced, 4, barry of six, a bend ...., 5, defaced, 6, Talbot. II. In the sinister chief, Catesby, quartering as before, impaling quarterly, 1 and 4, Bishopston, 2 and 3, defaced. III. In the dexter base, quarterly, 1, Catesby, 2, Bishopston, 3 and 4, defaced, impaling quarterly, 1 and 4, (G.) ten bezants, four, three, two, one, a canton (Erm.) Touch of Harringworth, 2 and 3, (G.) three leopards' heads jessant de lis (O.) Cantilupe. IV. In the sinister base, Catesby, quartering 1, Montfort, 2, Braundeston, 3, Cranford, 4, (G.) a chief (O.) Watford, 5, Ladbroke, 6, Chequy (O. and Az.) a chevron (G.) Arden, 7, Bishopston, 8, Trillow. The following inscriptions, on three plates beneath the figures, are now only partially legible; and the words within inverted commas are supplied from Vincent[b].

Hic iacet domina Johanna secunda uxor Will'i Catesbie militis "antea uxor" Nesardi de la Bere et filia Thome Barre militis et Alicie uxoris eius sororis Joh'is D'ni Talbot "creati com." Salop. que obiit vi Augusti A° D'ni MCCCCLIII *.

To the inscription under Johanna, Vincent has added "Liberi ejus Willus Catesby Ar. qui habuit uxorem "Margaretam, Thomas Catesby, Johannes Catesby, Alicie quæ ob. virgo, Anna uxor Robti Witelberii Ar. Eli- "zabetha uxor Rogeri Wake Armigeri." This, however, cannot be correct, as the plate is not sufficiently large to admit of such an addition. The mistake may probably have arisen from copying the labels affixed to the children, and afterwards misplacing the transcript. Round the slab was a ledge of brass, on which were 'the following lines[c].'

Omnibus ꝑ singulis vere penitentibus ꝑ confessis qui iotam ecclesiam in festo sancti Leodegarii ꝑ per octabas ejusdem devote visitarunt annuatim —— aconem edificii calicum librorum aliorumque ornamentorum pro divino cultu inibi necessariorum manus quecienacunque porrexerint adiutrices seu alias orationem dominicam cum salutac'one angelica pro salubri statu Willielmi.

12. Within the altar rails, on a marble slab, is a rich brass in fine preservation, for William Catesby, the favorite of Richard 3rd, and his lady. On his arms and tabard are, Catesby, quartering, 1, Montfort, 2, Braundeston, 3, Cranford; and on her mantle, Touch and Cantilupe, quarterly. On the centre pinnacle is suspended Catesby, quartering as before, with helmet and crest. In the dexter spandril of the arches, Catesby, quartering as before, is again repeated: and in the sinister spandril is Touch quartering Cantilupe. The subjoined etching supersedes the necessity of any further description.

His death, it will be perceived on a comparison with his will, is ante dated five days in the epitaph; and it is not improbable but the error was wilful, and intended to raise doubts of his tragical end in the minds of posterity, by placing his decease prior to the battle of Bosworth.

On common slabs in the chancel:

Under two arches flanked by pilasters, are Bryan Janson and his lady, kneeling opposite to each other before a desk, on which is a shield, but the bearings are obliterated. Beneath, on two compartments, are five sons in the same posture, labelled Richard, Clement, sir Brian, John, James; and five daughters, Eliz., Hanner, Anne, Margaret, Eliz. On a shield below, which divides the inscription into two tablets, are Janson, impaling a fess between three crescents.

BADBY,

In the saxon grants, and in domesday, is spelt "Badby," or Badebi," and may be derived from the saxon bad, or bade, a pledge or security, and bye, a dwelling or habitation; in allusion, possibly, to circumstances now forgotten, connected with its original foundation. The parish includes the parochial chapelry of NEWNHAM, which maintains its own poor; and certain old inclosures, called the Quarterns, which contribute in equal proportion to the poor and other civil rates of both places.

These lands formerly constituted the "demaynes called the quarterns of the manors of Baddeby and Newenham," and were distributed by the abbots of Evesham into "four score quarterns," or quarters of yard land, "with the "meadows and commons thereto belonging" to tenants at will, as appears from an indenture of arbitration between the parties, dated 14 Feb. 17 Hen. 8 (1525-6)[a]. Being the common demesnes of both manors, and no part being specifically appropriated to either, it was, probably on the first institution of the poor laws, deemed the most fair and simple arrangement to make the whole jointly and equally chargeable to both townships, without regard to relative situation. The lordship of Badby, together with the Quarterns, consisting of about 613 acres, but, exclusive of Newnham, strictly so called, contains about 2155 acres; of which about 830 acres are old inclosure, and the remaining open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 19 Geo. 3 (1779). Sir Charles Knightley, of Fawsley, bart. lord of the manor, has about 695 acres; William Watkins, of Daventry, esq. as lessee of the impropriate rectory under the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, about 225 acres; the vicar, in right of his church, about 110 acres; T. R. Thornton, of Brockhole, esq. about 200 acres; Mr. Thomas Congreve Philips, about 150 acres; and the devisees of the late Mr. Edward Grant, about 110 acres. It is bounded on the north by Daventry; east by Newnham; south-east by a small part of Everdon; south by Fawsley; south-west by Catesby; and west by Staverton. The lordship is hilly; the soil of the downs is a red sand, and of the lower parts of the field principally a grey stone brash loam.

Badby Wood, in which the men of Fawsley enjoyed right of common, was inclosed for a park in 30 Hen. 3 (1245-6), by charter granted to the abbot of Evesham[b]. In 3 Edw. 1 (1274-5), the abbot produced the charter on a plea[c]; and in 8 Edw. 1 the men of "Fauesle" impleaded him for common of pasture in the wood of "Baddeby[d]," but no ulterior proceedings are recorded. The wood now consists of nearly 180 acres, the whole of which, except about 23 acres belonging to T. R. Thornton, esq. is the property of sir Charles Knightley, bart. The drive from the entrance lodge connects with, and forms a beautiful approach to, Fawsley park. It is peculiarly rich in indigenous plants; amongst the rarest are, Veronica hybrida*, Welch Speedwell. Orchis bifolia*, Butterfly Orchis. Asperula odorata*, sweet Woodroof. Galium erectum*, upright Goosegrass. Galium procumbens, trailing Goosegrass. "Rapunculus Esculentus, C. B. Rampions[e]." Rumex pulcher, Fiddle Dock. Scabiosa Succisa, Devil's-bit Scabious. Stellaria glauca, Glaucus-leaved Marsh Stitch-wort. Rubus corylifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble. Cistus Helianthemum, little Sun-flower. Ajuga alpina, alpine Bugle. Galeobdolon luteum, yellow Archangel. Genista anglica, Needle Furze. Hypericum pulchrum, upright St. John's-wort. Hypericum humifusum, trailing St. John's-wort. Solidago Virgaurea, common Golden-rod. Senecio tenuifolius, hoary Groundsell. Equisetum sylvaticum, wood Horsetail. Equisetum fluviatile, river Horsetail. Tremella mesenterica, Star-jelly. Agaricus Listeri, Lister's Agaric. Agaricus nivens, snow-white Agaric. Agaricus umbilicatus. In other parts of the lordship, principally on the downs, have been found, "Scirpus fluitans, floating Club-rush. Montea fontana, water Chick-weed[f]." "Viola hirta, hairy Violet. Alsine parva Palustris trisoccos*, &c. Raii. Small Water-Purslain, by some called Blinks. Gramen junceum capsulis triangulis cauliculis tenuibus, foliis ad nodos prælongis, Raii. Gramen junceum clavatum minimum, &c. Raii. Marsh Rush-Grass with Fleawort Heads[g]." Rumex paludosus, Marsh Dock. "Juncus bulbosus, bulbous Rush[f]." Sedum Telephium, Orpine Stone-crop. Rubus Idæus, Raspberry. Ranunculus hirsutus, pale-hairy Crowfoot. Digitalis purpurea, Foxglove. Gnaphalium rectum*, upright Cudweed. Polypodium rhæticum, stone Polipody. "Filix pumila saxatalis altera, Clusii, or Male Stone Fern[e]." Helvella mitra, curled Turban-top. Bridges states, that 'there are several quarries of a fine blue rag stone, very hard and durable, from whence large 'quantities are carried into Warwickshire, for building and pavement[g].' Quarries of this kind are still worked, but not on so extensive a scale as formerly. Morton found in the gravel-pits at Badby "an Ammonites resembling (the Ammonites modiolaris), but of a flatter shape[h], which he has engraved in Table 9. fig. 5. The mill mentioned in domesday was probably Newnham mill, as there is none in this lordship.

MANORIAL HISTORY. This manor was one of the earliest acquisitions of the abbey of Croyland in Lincolnshire. The original endowment by Ethelbald king of Mercia, in 716, extended only to the island where the monastery was erected; but the confirmation charter obtained from king Witlaf in 833, included a grant from Norman, formerly earl's deputy ("vicecomitis") of Sutton near Bosworth and Stapleton (in Leicestershire), and four hides of land with their appendages in "Badby[i]." In the confirmation charter of king Beorred, in 868, Norman is styled lord's deputy ("vicedomini"), and his donation of "Badby" is expressly denominated the manor, with four hides of land and 30 acres of meadow[k]. About three years afterwards, Beorred, under pretence of enabling him to carry on the war against the Danes, who had made a sudden irruption into Mercia, seized the whole isle of Eley, and the lands and revenues of several religious houses. The possessions of Croyland lying in its immediate vicinity, he reserved to himself; and Badby, with many other of their distant manors, he bestowed on his stipendiary soldiers[k]. Most of these alienations were, however, redeemed in the beginning of Edred's reign, about 946, by Turketul, the king's chancellor, who compounded with earl Athelwolf for Staundon (in Hertfordshire), and "Badby," at ten marks of gold[l]. Badby accordingly occurs, in the confirmation charters of king Edred in 948[m], and king Edgar in 966[n], obtained at the intercession of Turketul, after he had accepted the pastoral staff of the abbey. When the Danes renewed hostilities under Sweyn in 1013, and spread dismay and terror in the neighbourhood of Croyland, abbot Godric and his convent, having no money to purchase assistance against impending danger, stipulated with Norman, one of the principal associates of the powerful but perfidious duke Edric Streon, and brother of Leofric earl of Leicester, to settle on him the manor of "Badby" for 100 years, to hold of St. Guthlac, by a pepper-corn rent, payable yearly at the feast of St. Bartholomew, on condition of his entering into a written engagement to defend and protect them from their enemies. The speculation did not prove a fortunate one to either party; for Norman was slain, with Edric, in 1017, by king Canute, who seized all his lands, but restored them to his brother and heir, earl Leofric, by whom "Badeby" was, at the instigation of his confessor Avicius, prior of Evesham abbey in Worcestershire, assigned to that monastery for the residue of the term[o]. In 1018, Canute, king of all England, gave the lordship of "Badby" and "Newnham" to the abbey of Evesham[p]; but this was evidently a ratification only of the grant of earl Leofric, on whose death, in 1057, abbot Ingulphus remarks, that it was just 40 years from the time he gave the lease of "Badby" manor to the monks of Evesham—the only act of his life injurious to Croyland[q].

"Badebi" was entered in domesday under the head of Croyland abbey, and contained four hides. The arable land was 10 caruecates; in demesne were four caruecates, with eight servants and five maidens: and 12 villeins and eight bordars had the remaining six caruecates. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly, and 30 acres of meadow, with a wood, four quarentines or furlongs in length, and two furlongs in breadth. The whole was valued then, as in the time of Edward the confessor, at £8 yearly[r]. The number of hides, it will be observed, corresponds with the first saxon charter in 833; and Newnham, though its existence prior to the survey is proved by Canute's charter, is not specified by name, but silently included as a member of the lordship. Ingulphus has inserted in his narrative a transcript of this invaluable national record, so far as relates to his abbey: the only point in which his copy of the survey of Badby varies from the original, is in the amount of the value, which, by the mistake or negligence of the scribe, is stated to be only £4[s], instead of £8; and its insertion under Croyland, when it was in the actual possession of the monks of Evesham, is justified by Ingulphus, on the ground that the commissioners ("melatores et "taxatores"), were satisfied his monastery was entitled to the fee, though twenty years were yet unexpired of the term for which it had been granted to Norman, the deputy ("vicecomes") of earl Edric[t]. Wulsius, a kinsman of earl Leofric, being fond of retirement, withdrew to Croyland, where he continued several years, till, being much annoyed by the concourse of people who fled there during the disputed succession to the throne after the death of Canute, he removed to Evesham, and lived in a cell near the abbey[u]. According to John abbot of Peterborough, this holy anchoret, who wore the monk's habit 75 years, and died about 1104, first gave Badby to Croyland, and afterwards transferred it, with "Neuhamp" (Newnham) to Evesham[x]; but the slightest reference to dates will shew the palpable anachronism involved in this statement. Peter de Blois, or Blesensis, the continuator of Ingulphus, records that the pious Wulsius, in his last moments, adverting to the circumstances connected with Badby, thus addressed Maurice abbot of Evesham:—"Abbot Walter was succeeded by Robert, a monk of Gimeges, "your immediate predecessor. What lands belonging to the monastery he disposed of to his relatives you know "better than I do, as you are mournfully experiencing the loss daily. You, venerable father Maurice, are in the "peaceable enjoyment of 'Neuhamp' (Newnham), the manor of my forefathers; but I must remind you that a few "years only remain of the farm of 'Baddeby,' and I therefore earnestly advise and charge you, on your conscience, "to restore it, when due, to its lawful possessors, the abbot and monks of Croyland; and that you most religiously "preserve and retain all the property of your convent, which you hold by a just title, as you would secure to your-"self the blessing of God, promised to the faithful in the kingdom of heaven, to which I am now hastening, Amen." Such, it is said, was the exhortation of the holy hermit, which, having concluded, he immediately fell asleep in the Lord. The successor of abbot Maurice in the pastoral office was Reginald, a monk of Glocester, during the first years of whose abbacy the term of 100 years in "Baddeby" expired; and although the venerable Joffrid, abbot of Croyland, was much engaged in re-building the conventual church, which had drained his treasury of immense sums, he held a consultation with his brethren, and by the advice of persons well skilled in the law, it was resolved, notwithstanding the original deeds relating to Badby were destroyed by the fire which consumed the abbey (in 1091), and the renewed charter, which had been placed in the treasury by abbot Ingulphus, was mislaid, to assert their right to the manor, and maintain it from the domesday roll. If the monks of Evesham were disposed to act conscientiously, they would instantly surrender the manor; but if, relying on their power or money, they should persist in withholding it, an appeal to the king's court of justice might still be made; and with the fixed determination of resorting to this alternative, were it necessary, abbot Joffrid repaired to Evesham, and demanding restitution of Badby, exhibited a copy of the renewed charter to Croyland, and strongly urged the authority of the royal record of domesday as decisive in his favor. But Reginald abbot of Evesham, trusting in the powerful support and influence of his connexions and friends, especially Milo earl of Hereford, who happened to be on a visit at the abbey, evasively replied, that he was not versed in temporal concerns, nor sufficiently informed on the subject, but he believed the manor of Badby had come to them by the grant of Avicius, a former prior, and his relative St. Wulsius, the anchoret, deceased, whose family had inherited it from an early period.

To add weight to this answer, it was delivered in the presence of earl Milo, who vehemently opposed abbot Joffrid, and undertook to defend the manor in the king's courts against the monks of Croyland. The venerable abbot, perceiving there was no fear of God in the place, and knowing that the original charter could not be produced, returned home, and relating to his whole convent the harsh and unjust conduct of the earl of Hereford, and the abbot of Evesham, declared that it was useless to make any further attempt to regain the manor[y]. In 30 Hen. 3 (1245-6), the abbot of Evesham obtained a charter for free warren in "Baddebi" and "Newenham," a member of the said manor[z]; which grant was confirmed by another the same year, with the additional privilege of inclosing Badby wood for a park[a]. In 36 Hen. 3 (1251-2), the abbot consigned the manor to Simon de Wanton at farm[b]; and in the portion of the Testa de Nevill which may be dated between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that "Baddeby" used to do suit to the hundred court, but that it had been withheld for 14 years past. Mast. Simon de Wanton had the vill at farm of the abbey of Evesham, and held view of frank pledge, but was not entitled to return of writs, nor pleas of withernam. They presented, also, that the sheriff had taken Robert le Jevene, and imprisoned him till he promised to pay 3 marks (£2) for his discharge. The vill had used to pay the king 39s., and the abbot answered for 4 marks and 5s. (£2. 18s. 4d.) for privileges in "Baddeby" and "Neweh'm[c]." It is certified, also, in the hundred roll, 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), that the abbot of Evesham was entitled to view of frank pledge and gallows, for which privileges he rendered yearly into the exchequer the above sum of 4 marks and 5s.[d] In the ecclesiastical taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the temporalities of the abbey of Evesham in "Baddeby" were rated at £12. 15s. per ann.[e]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), they were rated at the same for "Baddeby" and "Newenh'm;" of which sum £10. 5s. arose from rents, mill, coppice wood, and court; and £2. 10s. from fruits of the earth, flocks, and cattle[f]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), a writ of quo warranto was exhibited against the abbot to shew cause why he claimed view of frank pledge, with assize of bread and beer, tumbril, and wayf, free warren, and park, in "Baddeby," and in a hamlet called "Newenham," a member of the said manor, together with sac and soc, tol and theam, infangtheof, gallows, and various other immunities throughout his fee; and acquittance for himself, his successors, and all resiants within his fee, from shire and hundred courts, gelds, scutages, and all other secular services, except providing four knights and a half to attend the king in his wars whenever he went in person. For the view of frank pledge and the privilege associated with it, he pleaded prescription and the admission of the claim of the then abbot at the last iter; and for the free warren and park, the charter of Hen. 2 [qu. Hen. 3?], and the pleas were allowed, except as to wayf, which no ecclesiastic can exercise by prescription. The claims of acquittance and exemption for the resiants was withdrawn, and the other immunities were confirmed[g].

A branch of the noble family of SPENCER held certain lands, and were lessees of the demesne and tithes of Badby under the abbey of Evesham in the reign of Hen. 6*; and after residing here for several generations, removed to EVERDON, where a pedigree of them will be introduced.

On the dissolution of the abbey of Evesham, the annual value of Badby and Newnham is stated as follows, in the minister's accompts 33 Hen. 8 (1541):— Manor of "Badbye." Rents of Assize, 18s. 6½d. Rents of customary Tenants, £7. 5s. 6½d. Rents of Tenants at the will of the Lord, £10. Sale of work due from the Tenants, £11. 13s. 6d. Rent called Frithe Silver, 12s. The farm of the Demesne Lands, £3. 16s. The farm of a Windmill, £1. 13s. 4d. The farm of Tithes of Grain, £9. 6. 8d. The farm of the Wood, £6. 3s. 4d. Profits of Courts, £5. 10s. In 34 Hen. 8 (1542), the manors of Badby and Newnham were granted, with other manors and lands in the counties of Warwick, Worcester, and Northampton, to sir Edmund Knightley and Ursula his wife, daughter and coheiress of John Vere earl of Oxford, and their heirs[i]. On their decease without surviving issue, these manors passed to sir Valentine Knightley, of FAWSLEY, brother and heir of sir Edmund, whose grandson sir Valentine Knightley died in 1618, leaving three daughters and co-heiresses[k].

Fawsley and the entailed estates passed to his nephew and heir male, Richard Knightley, esq. of Preston Capes; and in the division of the estates which descended to his daughters, or their representatives, the manors of Badby and Newnham were assigned to his eldest daughter Anne, who, with her husband Richard Chetwode, esq.† sold them to the trustees of the above Richard Knightley, Philip Holman, of WARKWORTH, and John Thornton, of NEWNHAM, esquires, by whom they were held in joint tenancy, till 16 Feb. 1634-5, when, by a deed of partition, the manor of Badby, with court leet in Badby and Newnham, and court baron in Badby, with the wood and other lands there, were allotted to

Richard Knightley, esq. in fee; the capital messuage called the court-house, with certain lands in Badby, to Philip Holman, esq. in fee; and the manor of Newnham, with court baron in Newnham, water mill and certain lands in Newnham and Badby, to John Thornton, esq. in fee[l].

From this period the manor of Badby has passed by the same title with FAWSLEY to sir Charles Knightley, bart. the present possessor; in whom also, by a recent purchase, the Holman estate is now vested[k].

The lord of the manor holds both court leet and court baron.

A considerable portion of this lordship is copyhold of inheritance, with fine certain, subject to customary heriots. In addition to the ordinary customs incident to such tenure are the following, which are perhaps entitled to distinct notice. The first wife only of a copyholder is entitled to a life estate in the lands of which her husband dies seised, paying a penny on admission: "a later wife" is not so entitled, nor the first wife, if the husband surrender. The eldest son of a copyholder inherits his father's estate, but if no son, then the eldest daughter; and if neither son, daughter, nor brother, then the eldest sister. A copyholder may fell timber, pull down or alter buildings, without forfeiture; but a widow endowed cannot commit waste to the prejudice of the reversioner. Any copyholder, except a married woman, may lease for a term not exceeding 21 years, without licence from the lord. The next of kin who cannot take by descent, is the guardian of an heir during minority.

The Manor House or Court House, formerly the grange of the abbey of Evesham, is now pulled down. It stood eastward of the village green, and was emcompassed by a moat on all sides but the west, where a brook ran which supplied the moat with water.

The Village is between two and three miles from Daventry, adjoining the turnpike road to Banbury in Oxfordshire. Descending the hill, it is seen spreading along a valley; and, combined with the wood and the downs rising immediately in the back ground, composes a rural landscape, in no common degree pleasing and attractive. Bridges states it to be 'a village of about eighty-six houses, exclusive of the innships, which are three, the Court-house, Roots-house, and Barehill-house[t].' By the census of 1801, it contained 109 houses and 462 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 98 houses and 447 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £92. 7s. 9d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £2958. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £439. 7s. at 6s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday following the nativity of the virgin Mary.

The Advowson was appendant to the manor, and passed with it to the crown at the dissolution. In 38 Hen. 8 (1546), the rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Badby were granted (int. al.) to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford [u], who demise the rectory on a beneficial lease of 21 years, renewable every seven years, but retain the advowson in their own hands.

The Rectory. It appears from an undated document in one of the Evesham cartularies, that the church or rectory of "Baddebi" had half a hide of land, for which it did service to the king, by ploughing, mowing, and other payments; and gave two marks (£1. 6s. 8d.) annually, to find a wax light to burn day and night in the abbey of Evesham. Six acres of demesne belonged to it, quit of all services. Abbot Robert, who presided from 1086 to 1096, granted to the church the tithes of four rustics, and the 30th acre of demesne; and abbot Maurice, his successor, added 12 acres of demesne, in lieu of tithes; but the church was then unjustly in possession of both the land and the tithes. The adjoining chapel of "Neuham" held 20 acres, being one acre out of every virgate of the rustics; and had also half an acre of demesne, and three acres and a half of the gift of Gorman, quit of all services [s]. According to an inspeximus of the customs of the abbey in the time of abbot Ralph, from 1213 to 1239, the sacrist received two marks yearly out of the church of "Baddebi [z]." In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3) [a], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1) [b], it is rated at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. The abbot and convent, in 1344 (18 Edw. 3), the year after the endowment of the vicarage, made the following disposition of the rents of this rectory, and of Ombersley in Worcestershire, amounting together to £54. 18s. per ann.; £24 to be divided between the prior and monks at the ascension, £24 at St. Peter ad vincula, and the remaining £6. 18s. to be distributed amongst the poor on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Sundays, at the door of the chapter house [c]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the farm of the rectory of "Badby Newnham" is valued at £21 per ann. The impropriate rectory now consists of 223 a. 29 p. awarded by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the great tithes of the open fields, and of all tithes of the old inclosures, "and the several ancient inclosed lands and "grounds lying in the several parishes of Badby and Newnham, or one of them, called by the name of the "Quarterns." The present lessee is William Watkins, esq. of Daventry.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry. The abbot and convent of Evesham obtained a licence from the king for appropriating this church in 14 Edw. 1 (1285) [d], which was ratified by an inspeximus, dated at Northampton 2 Aug. 5 Edw. 2 (1311) [e]. The vicarage was ordained by Thomas Beck, bishop of Lincoln, 'in the year 1343;' and the appropriation was further confirmed by the king in 37 Edw. 3 (1352-3) [f]. In the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the vicarage of "Badby Newnham" is rated at £14. 3s. per ann. deducting 3s. for procurations [g]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655, by an evidently erroneous transposition, gave the precedence to Newnham, which they certified to be a vicarage, with two churches belonging to it within the distance of a mile; that Newnham was worth £48 per ann. and Badby £30 per ann.; and that both were in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford; and that Mr. John Winston, the incumbent, served both churches [z]. Under the act 5 Anne (1707), the vicarage of "Badby cum Newnham" is returned to be of the clear yearly value of £39. 8s. 4d. only. It is consequently a discharged living, and in 1723 received an augmentation of £200 from the governors of queen Anne's bounty, to meet a benefaction of the same sum; which £400 has been since expended in the purchase of 15 acres of land at Prior's Marston in Warwickshire. The vicar is entitled also to 107 a. 17 p. in Badby, and 51 a. 2 r. 37 p. in Newnham, allotted by the commissioners of Badby and Newnham inclosures, in lieu of glebe lands and vicarial tithes.

The vicarage-house stands eastward from the church, and has been neatly rebuilt by the present incumbent.

On the sequestration of his living by the parliamentary committee, "one Daukes, "who had formerly been a Nail Maker at Birmingham," was his immediate successor[d]; but John Winston was the resident incumbent at the parliamentary survey in 1655. Haywood was reinstated in his benefice on the restoration; and in 1666 obtained, in addition, the rectory of Rushden. He died the 25th, was buried the 27th, of Aug. 1670[c], and

Thomas Green, A. M. was inst. 18 July 1816.

The Registers commence in 1559. In one of them the following melancholy occurrence is recorded: "Simon "Marriott, Robert Marriott his son, and Thomas Borros, killed altogether with thunder and lightning, 27th July, "and buried 28th July, 1691."

The Church, dedicated to the virgin Mary, stands on rising ground at the north-west end of the village, and consists of a tower, containing five bells, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The steeple fell down in 1705, and the present tower was begun to be re-built in 1707[c]. Some of the windows in the south aisle are square-headed, and all in the north aisle pointed. The clerestory is completely perforated by a series of 10 windows on each side, all uniform, square-headed, with a single mullion trefoiled. At the east end of the chancel is a beautiful pointed window of three lights, with mullions trefoiled, and trefoil compartments in the head: a bold circular moulding runs up the front of the mullions, and is continued along the leading ramifications of the tracery: the dripstone is small, and has neither corbel nor return. The interior has been recently paved, and a west gallery erected. The tower is 17 ft. long, by 13 ft. 5 in. wide; the nave and aisles 53 ft. long, the nave 18 ft., the north aisle 7 ft. 9 in., and the south aisle 12 ft. 1 in. wide; and the chancel 30 ft. long, by 15 ft. 6 in. wide. The nave is uniformly divided from each aisle by five pointed arches on octangular pillars, with capitals of plain mouldings. In one of the north clerestory windows are two shields: 1. France and England ancient, quarterly; 2. Az. a chevron between three qu. crowns O. In the north aisle is a trefoiled piscina cut out of the eastern pillar. The chancel is entered through an open pointed arch springing from the side walls. In the south wall are two seats under uniform arches, supported by short circular columns; and adjoining them on the east is a piscina under a cinquefoil-headed arch. Slight traces of painted glass remain in some of the windows.

There is not now a single Monumental Inscription in the church; but Bridges notices one in the north aisle for Elias Harris, who died 16 Oct. 1678[e].

Benefactions (vide p. 239). School. The bequest of the late sir John Knightley, bart. of Fawsley, towards the Sunday-school here, now produces £5. 15*s. per ann.* The village green is ornamented with a small gothic building, designed by Wyatt, and erected by the dowager lady Knightley, widow of sir John, for a School for 12 girls, who are clothed and educated solely at her expence.

Joseph Morris, a learned dissenting divine, was son of a baptist minister in this county, and born at Badby about the year 1685. His rapid progress in grammatical learning, and pious disposition, procured him an offer of completing his education at one of the universities, with a view to his introduction into the established church; but he declined the proposal from conscientious motives, and through the liberal patronage of the Wrights, of Daventry, was enabled to pursue his studies at Amsterdam, under the celebrated professors Le Clerc and Limborch. On his return to England he officiated in this county and neighbourhood for a short time; and removing to London, was in 1724 ordained co-pastor of the general baptist congregation in Glass-House Yard, Goswell-street, with the rev. Thomas Kirby; on whose decease, in 1728, he preached and published his funeral sermon. He lived to an advanced age, and died, in consequence of a neglected cold, June 22, 1755. His pulpit discourses were plain, practical, and candid. He had carefully studied the sacred scriptures in their original languages, and was deeply versed in both ancient and modern controversial divinity; but though a zealous advocate for his views of the truth, his favorite topics of inculcation were holiness of heart and life. In his private character he was reserved and diffident, except when promoting subscriptions for the relief, or pleading for the necessities of indigent ministers and their families; on which occasions his feelings sometimes betrayed him into an injudicious and offensive importunity. His works are, A funeral sermon for rev. Thomas Kirby, on Heb. xiii. 7. 8vo. 1728. Sixteen sermons on various subjects, 8vo. 1743. Twenty (posthumous) sermons on various subjects; with his life, by Joseph Burroughs, 8vo. 1757.

Arbury Hill, or Arbury Bank, on the western boundary of this lordship, so denominated from the british ard, signifying high, and the saxon bury, an earth-work, presents a double claim to attention—as an ancient military encampment, and a modern trigonometrical station.

The situation is lofty, commanding an extensive and—were it not for the crown of Gossage's hill in Catesby parish—a completely circular prospect. The site of the camp occupies the whole summit of the hill, forming a rectangular area of about 10 acres. The rampart is very high, and encompassed, except at the entrance on the east side, by a wide single trench, which has been described to be 20 feet deep; but the operations of husbandry have necessarily reduced the height of the vallum, though the ancient form and character are still preserved. The south-west angle protrudes like a modern bastion; and a similar conformation is slightly indicated at the other extremities. It has been generally attributed to the Romans; but a learned modern antiquary*, in a communication with which he has favored me, says, "it was possibly a frontier post of the British Iceni against their "western neighbours, the Dobuni and the Carnabii; and might have been occupied by the Romans as a summer "camp to their station at Burnt Walls or Benavenna, although I never saw any remains of that nation there. "The present works, I think, have been altered by the Saxons."

In 1799 captain Mudge, the conductor of the "Trigonometrical Survey of England and Wales," ordered by government, adopted the north-west corner of Arbury hill, near the brow, for one of his stations; "but the precise "spot cannot be easily found, from the want of proper objects to which measurements may be made." The altitude of the hill above the level of the sea was found to be 804 feet; and the distance from Newnham windmill 5845 ft.; Dunchurch windmill (Warwickshire) 44,249 ft.; Edge hill round-house (Warwickshire) 65,816 ft.; St. Michael's church, Coventry, 94,262 ft.; and Wendover station (Buckinghamshire) 210,628 ft. Contemporary and reciprocal observations were made from this station and the stations at Wendover and Brill in Buckinghamshire, with a view to ascertain their relative heights. Arbury was again occupied in September and October 1802, when observations were made with the zenith sector; and the latitude of this important station has for some time past engaged the attention of the first rate philosophers of Europe, on account of the anomaly produced in the curvature of the earth by the latitude found at this place.

NEWNHAM,

In early saxon records "Neuham," is a parochial chapelry to Badby, and its filiation is evidently implied in its etymology; the saxon nep being synonymous with the english word, and ham signifying home or habitation. The open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 4 Geo. 3 (1764), and the lordship contains about 1650 acres; of which about 560 acres belong to T. R. Thornton, of Brockhole, esq. lord of the manor and impropriator; about 50 acres to the vicar of Badby cum Newnham, in right of his church; about 280 acres to Mr. Henry Hickman; about 120 acres to Mr. John Perkins; and nearly 100 acres to Mr. Robert Marriott. It is bounded on the north by Daventry and Norton; east by Dodford; south by Everdon, from which it is partly divided by the western branch of the Nen; south-west by a small portion of Fawsley; and west by Badby.

The soil on the hills is sand, and in the other parts of the lordship, which are principally meadow and old pasture, it varies to rich loam or clay. No scarce plants have been observed here. Bridges says, 'It abounds with 'springs, both simple and mineral: of these last, one, that hath been repaired at the expence of the incumbent 'Mr. Cotton, bears his name, and is much esteemed[†].' None of the mineral springs can now be traced, owing partly to modern irrigation; and the one designated above is no longer remembered. There is a water-mill on the Nen, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Evesham, and still continues appendant to the manor.

The Manorial History has been anticipated under Badby down to the purchase of the manor in 1634-5, by John Thornton, esq. from whom it has lineally descended to Thomas Reeve Thornton, esq. of Brockhole, the present proprietor.

A court baron is held for the manor.

The principal part of the lordship is copyhold, subject to precisely the same customs as Badby.

The Manor House stood in the field contiguous to the south side of the church yard, and was taken down about 50 years since.

The Village is situated between two and three miles from Daventry, at the southern base of a long steep declivity. Its pleasing irregularity of surface, and the lofty elms with which the little home enclosures are studded, form several combinations of considerable pictorial effect. Bridges states the number of houses to be 'ninety-one, 'including four which are set apart for the use of the poor[g].' By the census of 1801 it contained 100 houses and 437 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 103 houses and 456 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £106. 1s. 4d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3185. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £759. 1s. 8d. at 10s. in the £. The wake is kept on the Sunday after St. Michael, though the church is said to be dedicated to the virgin Mary.

The Rectorial or Impropriate Tithes were (int. al.) granted, in 1610, to Francis Morrice and Francis Phelips[h], from whom they passed by mesne conveyances to the Thornton family; and 183 a. 3 r. 24 p. allotted in lieu of them by the commissioners of inclosure, are now included in the estate of T. R. Thornton, esq. the lord of the manor.

The Registers commence in 1552.

The Church or Parochial Chapel, dedicated to the virgin Mary, consists of an embattled tower containing five bells, surmounted by a low octagonal spire, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and chancel. The tower is of a reddish ashler stone, similar to St. Michael's church at Coventry, and originally stood on four open arches flanked by buttresses, which are now built up with rubble. The roof inside is groined, springing from a corbel head in each spandril. In the north aisle is a small doorway of the early English style; two small circular columns support a pointed arch enriched with a bold hatched moulding. The windows of both aisles are of a later date, and have rectilinear tracery in the heads, connecting trefoils and quatrefoils. The side windows of the chancel are of one mullion trefoiled with two trefoils and a quatrefoil in the head. Externally they have neither dripstone nor tablet, but in the interior there are dripstones, with horizontal returns continued as a tablet. The east window is of five days, with tracery forming rows of trefoils and quatrefoils, the mouldings of which die into the trefoil heads of the mullions. The tower is 19 ft. 10 in. long, by 14 ft. 6 in. wide; the nave and aisles 51 ft. 2 in. long; the north aisle 11 ft. 10 in., the nave 16 ft. 5 in., and the south aisle 12 ft. 5 in. wide; and the chancel 31 ft. 7 in. long, by 16 ft. 7 in. wide. It is only partially pewed, and some of the old parallel benches still remain. The nave is divided from the south aisle by four pointed arches, resting on three octagonal pillars with capitals of plain mouldings; and from the north aisle by the same number of arches, but the eastern pillar only resembles those in the south aisle, the two western ones being four-clustered. The east end of the eastern arch springs from a corbel angel holding a shield.

In the upper quatrefoil compartment of the east window of the north aisle are the arms of Newnham between the words "Thomas Newnham:" and in most of the windows throughout the church are small insulated fragments of painted glass. The chancel is entered from the nave through a gothic wooden screen, formerly painted. At the east end of the south wall are two stone seats and a piscina.

Monumental Inscriptions.

At the east end are 3 collateral slabs.

Nave. I. On a dark marble slab were two small brass figures of a man and woman; the latter only remaining. Within a circle over her head is a shield with Catesby, and on a label twined round it, "God sende and ende." The inscription was gone before the time of Bridges, but is given by him from Belchier's collections.

Thomas Randolph, one of the most promising poets and dramatists of the 17th century, was a native of this village, and baptized here June 15th, 1605. He was second son of William Randolph of Little Houghton, gent. steward to Edward lord Zouch, by his first wife Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Smith of Newnham, and was born at the house of his maternal grandfather, in whose descendants it continued till within these few years. Its present state is represented in the accompanying vignette. It stands on a bank at the end of the lane leading to Dodford, and is now occupied by three or four poor families. He entered Westminster school as a king's scholar, from whence he was elected, in 1623, to Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow, and was incorporated master of arts at Oxford in 1631. "He lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came," and composed a poem on the incarnation of our Saviour, before he was ten years old; but, unfortunately, as he advanced into life, he adopted no profession, and associating with wits and men of pleasure, was seduced into habits of dissipation, which too often gave a vitiated direction to his muse, involved him in personal difficulties, and prematurely terminated his existence, before he had completed his 30th year, whilst on a visit to his friend William Stafford, esq. of Blatherwick. He was buried there Mar. 17th, 1634-5, and a marble tablet erected to his memory by sir Christopher, afterward lord Hatton, of Kirby. His contemporaries held him in high estimation, and he was so great a favorite with Ben Jonson, that he used familiarly to call him his son. His miscellaneous poems were collected after his death, and published by his brother, Robert Randolph, a clergyman, in 1640; and, with his dramatic pieces, reached a fifth edition in 1668. Of his six dramas, "The Muses' Looking Glass," in which he has delineated the passions and vices with much truth and humour, was the most popular. It was revived at Covent Garden Theatre in 1748, and is printed in Dodsley's collection of old plays. Dodsley's amusing farce of "The Toy Shop," which had a considerable run, and first brought the author into public notice, was an acknowledged imitation of "The Conceited Pedlar" of Randolph. There is a small bust of the poet in the title to the editions of his works in 1640 and 1652; which, having become extremely scarce, a copy of the portrait has been recently published by Rodd.

BARBY,

In domesday "Berchebi," and in early records "Beruby, Berughby," &c. cannot be referred to any very satisfactory etymology. One of the principal hills in North Wales is called Berriw, and it is not impossible but the same british word, expressive of height, may have designated this lordship, which stretches along an elevated ridge commanding the extensive range of country alluded to under Ashby Ledgers, with an additional opening into Leicestershire and the borders of Derbyshire to the north-east. Or its derivation may perhaps be compounded of the saxon bepc, a birch tree, and bÿe, a place or habitation, denoting the prevalence of those trees at the original settlement of the village. The parish includes the hamlet of ONLEY, which contributes one-third to the poor's rates; and an insulated portion of about 190 acres, called NORTOFT, distant at least half a mile from the nearest point of the parish, and separated by the intervention of Kilsby, but rated with Barby, and inclosed by the same act of parliament 18 Geo. 3 (1778). The lordship, with the above members, contains about 3580 acres; of which G. H. Arnold, of Ashby Lodge, esq. lord of the manor, has about 650 acres; the rector, in right of his church, about 490 acres; William Butlin, of Rugby, in Warwickshire, esq. about 310 acres; Joseph Boultbee, of Springfield in Warwickshire, esq. about 300 acres; Mr. Richard Lord about 260 acres; Mrs. Edridge, of Chippenham in Wiltshire, about 180 acres; Mr. Nathaniel Wiggins about 170 acres; Mr. John Whitmell about 140 acres; and Mr. Thomas Pittom about 130 acres. It is bounded on the north by Hilmorton in Warwickshire, and east by Kilsby, from both of which it is divided by Range brook, till approaching the south, when there is only an artificial boundary between it and the latter lordship; south-east by a small part of Ashby Ledgers; south by Braunston; south-west by Willoughby in Warwickshire; and west by Dunchurch and a narrow portion of Bilton in the same county, from which it is separated by a small brook which rises near Rodwell in this parish, and, joining Rangebrook, runs towards Warwick. About two-thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The soil on the north, east, and west, is principally strong clay; and on the south gravelly, with a mixture of sand.

BARBY WOOD is mentioned in domesday. An extent of the manor was taken 1 Edw. 1 (1272-3), on the death of George de Cantilupe, when it was found that there were two woods, containing together 31 acres; 25 acres of which were worth for sale 20s. each acre, and the remaining 6 acres, 10s. each acre; total £28: and that each of the 31 acres was worth 5d. if asserted [k]. The principal wood has been lately grubbed up, and the "Little Wood" has long ceased to have any other existence than in the name of an old inclosure of about 30 acres. The following scarce plants have been found here. Sium latifolium, great Water Parsnep. Ranunculus hederaceus, ivy-leaved Crow-foot. Viola hirta, hairy Violet. Senecio tenuifolius, hoary Groundsell. Astroites or star stones, commonly called here Peter stones, are profusely found in a field near the wood. In the south-west part of the parish is a chalybeate spring called Rodwell. The Oxford canal passes through nearly two miles of this lordship.

MANORIAL HISTORY. PEVEREL FEE*. At the domesday survey, Pagan held of William Peverel two hides in "Berchebi." The arable land was five carucates; two of which were in demesne with one servant, and the remaining three in the occupation of ten villeins and eight bordars. There were six acres of meadow, and a wood six perches long, and four wide. The whole had been heretofore rated at 30s. (yearly), but was then doubled in value [l].

Pagan, the mesne lord, was succeeded by his son Robert Fitz Pagan [m], who was probably expelled when Peverel, his superior lord, incurred a forfeiture of his possessions in the time of Hen 2; for by the inquisition of knights' fees belonging to escheated honors in the hands of the crown 12 Joh. (1210),

Hugh de Lisle was found to hold two fees of the honor of Peverel [n]; and in another inquisition the year following, Thomas "Dispensator" was certified to hold, with the daughter and heiress of Hugh de Lisle, three fees of that honor; viz. 2 fees in Barby in Northamptonshire, three parts of a fee in Lubbesthorp in Leicestershire, and the fourth part in Thorp (in Bassford) Nottinghamshire [o]. In 14 Joh. (1212), the sheriffs of the counties of Northampton, Leicester, and Nottingham were commanded to deliver seisin to William (Longspé) earl of Salisbury †, the king's brother, of the lands which had descended to the daughter of Hugh de Lisle [p]. In 16 Joh. her wardship and marriage was granted to William de Cantilupe, as a reward for having given information to the king of certain Jews who possessed property to the amount of 200 marks [q] (£133. 6s. 8d.); and in 2 Hen. 3 (1217-18), he paid 200 marks to have the marriage of Milicent, widow of Almaric earl of Eureux, for his son William; and of Catherine, daughter of Hugh de Lisle, for one of his brothers [r]. That brother was

Eustace de Cantilupe [s], who appears to have died soon after; and in 19 Hen 3 (1234-5), William de Cantilupe, as guardian of the lands and heir of Catherine, daughter of Hugh de Lisle, was returned to hold two fees in "Bereweby" of the honor of Peverel [t]; and which fees were in a few years after in possession of Eustace de Cantilupe, son of Eustace and Catherine, then of full age. In 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), Walter de Grendale claimed against Eustace de Cantilupe 10 carucates of land in "Berueby [u]"—double the number recorded in domesday—with their pertinencies, and the advowson of the church, with its pertinencies, which had descended to him, as his right, from his ancestor Robert Fitz Pagan, who was seised of it in fee in the time of king Henry (2nd), grandfather of the present king, and received profits from it to the amount of 20s. From Robert the right descended to Azylle, as daughter and heiress; from Azylle to Richard, as son and heir; from Richard to Ralph, as son and heir; and from Ralph to the said Walter, the claimant, as brother and heir[x]. Walter claimed also against Eustace the manor of Lubbesthorp in Leicestershire, with three virgates of lands there; and Eustace came to defend his right, and made one answer to the whole of the above claims, contending that the plaintiff's petition ought to be dismissed, because he claimed seisin by descent from one Robert his ancestor, who, together with his lord, William Peverel, forfeited his lands to the king as a felon, and was outlawed in the king's court; by which judgment he lost his lands and inheritance, and whatever else he had in the kingdom: which allegations the plaintiff denied, asserting that his ancestor died seised of the said lands as a loyal subject. On these pleas issue was joined between the parties, and the defendant was called upon to prove the felony for which the lands of Robert were adjudged to be forfeited, and to declare in what county he wished the inquisition to be had, whether in Northamptonshire, Nottinghamshire, or Leicestershire, or in all of them. On the morrow Eustace came and defended his right as before; adding, that he ought not to be required to answer the plaintiff's suit, because he claimed 10 caracates of land, with pertinencies, in "Berweby," whereas the prior of Studley had one virgate thereof; but the plaintiff rejoined, that as the defendant had already entered an answer to the whole claim, and had not filed any exception for the purpose of invalidating the writ, he was not then entitled to avail himself of the plea; and a day was appointed for a hearing and judgment[y]. The decision, though not on record, must have been in favor of the defendant, for he occurs here in 31 Hen. 3[z] (1246-7); and the same year, in a plea between him and the rector of Aylston in Leicestershire, respecting a virgate of land in Lubbesthorp, the jury found that Aveline, widow of Hugh de Lisle, held the manor of Lubbesthorpe in dower of the inheritance of the said Eustace de Cantilupe[a].

EUSTACE DE CANTILUPE, dead s. p. 37 Hen. 3 (1252-3).

Eustace de Cantilupe died s. p. and in 37 Hen. 3 the manors of Barby in Northamptonshire, Lubbesthorp in Leicestershire, and Basford in Nottinghamshire, were granted or confirmed to William de Cantilupe[b], grandson of the first William.

The male line of this noble family terminated on the death of George de Cantilupe, in 1 Edw. 1 (1273), when his sister Milicent, wife of Eudo La Zouch (widow of John de Montalt), and John de Hastings, son of his sister Joan, and *Henry de Hastings, were found to be his heirs[c].

This manor was included in the purparty of Zouch, and in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented, that Eudo La Zouch had view of frank pledge and gallows, but they knew not by what warrant[d]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), his son, Willam lord Zouch, was required by a writ of quo warranto to shew why he exercised certain privileges in his manors of Harringworth, Bulwick, Barby, and others; when he substantiated his claim to view of frank pledge with appendages, infangtheof, gallows, wayf, correction of assize of bread and beer, tumbril, free warren in his demesne lands, and acquittance from suit at county and hundred courts in his manor of "Beroghby[e];" and in 48 Edw. 3 (1374), his grandson and heir, William 2nd lord Zouch, obtained a confirmation of free warren in all his lands throughout England which had formerly belonged to William de Cantilupe[f]. The history and pedigree of this family are reserved for HARRINGWORTH their principal seat, and the designation of their barony; and it is only necessary to observe further, with respect to this manor, that, after having lineally descended between three and four centuries, it was alienated by Edward the 11th and last lord Zouch, in the reign of James 1st, to

Gregory Isham, esq. nephew of John Isham, esq. the immediate ancestor of the baronets of LAMPORT. It will be seen by the subjoined pedigree that he left a numerous family; but by purchase or family arrangement this manor vested in his daughter Anne, successively wife of John Pay, gent., sir Sidney Montagu, and Anthony Luther, esq.; who, in her third widowhood, devised it by will to her sister

Elizabeth Burrard, in fee, by whose son and heir, John Burrard, esq. it was sold, in 1683, to Edmund Bromwich, of Daventry, gent.[g]

John Bromwich, of Husband's Bosworth in Leicestershire, gent. son and heir of the last purchaser, conveyed the manor of Barby, in 1705, to

Thomas 2nd lord Leigh, of Stoneley in Warwickshire, who, in 1708, settled it on the hon. Charles Leigh, of Leighton Buzzard in Bedfordshire, his second surviving son, by whom it was sold, in 1718, to George Arnold, esq. of Ashby Lodge, great-grandfather of George Henry Arnold, esq. the present possessor.

A court leet and court baron are sometimes held, but not regularly, for this manor.

The Manor House stood in Hall close, at the north end of the village. It is noticed in the extent taken 1 Edw. 1, but was probably deserted at an early period. Its moated site is still visible.

The Village is pleasantly situated about four miles from Rugby in Warwickshire, and six miles from Daventry. The Bridges states it to consist of 'eighty-six houses, whereof six are appropriated to the use of the poor[h].' By the census of 1801, it contained 123 houses and 597 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 124 houses and 595 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this lordship is £223. 4s. 6d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5032. The poor's rates for Barby and Nortoft for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £534 at 5s. in the £; to which is to be added the third of that sum (£178) for the proportion of Onley, making a total of £712. The wake follows the assumption of the blessed Virgin.

Advowson. Robert de Baud and Catherine (Lisle) his wife, having brought an assise of darrien presentment against Hugh the second (Hugh Wells) bishop of Lincoln, and John, prior of the church of the holy Trinity without Northampton (St. David's hospital at Kingsthorp), respecting the advowson of "Bergebi," it was mutually agreed, by fine levied 3 Hen. 3 (1218), that the advowson of "Kildesby," which the said Robert and Catherine claimed as a chapel to "Bergebi," should remain to the said bishop and his successors, but still be considered a member of the mother church, though discharged from all tributary aid or acknowledgment; and that the advowson of "Bergebi" should remain to the said Robert and Catherine, and the heirs of Catherine for ever[i]. The advowson continued appendant to the manor down to Gregory Isham, esq. who sold it in 1632 to the trustees of his son-in law, John Pay, gent. by whom it was devised, in 1642, to his wife, who, by the name of dame Ann Montagu, widow, alienated it, in 1671, to the rev. Jonathan Holled, of Cottingham, D. D. in whose descendants it continued till 1787, when it was sold to the father of the rev. Dr. Gillbee, the late patron and rector; of whose devisees it was purchased, in 1815, by Thomas Williams, of London, esq. who has settled it on his son the rev. Charles Williams, the present patron and rector.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Daventry. It was valued in the taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann. deducting an annual pension of half a mark to the master of St. David's without Northampton[k]; and was rated the same in the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), but without specifying to whom the pension was payable[l]. No pension is mentioned in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), when it was returned at £30. 13s. 4d. per ann. deducting 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations[m]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £162 per ann. in the gift of lady Montagu; and that Mr. Thorp was incumbent[n]. The rectory now consists of 490 a. 1 r. 1 p. allotted by the commissioners of inclosure in lieu of the glebe and tithes of the open fields; and the rectorial tithes of the homesteads and old inclosures of Barby, and of the whole of Onley. The parsonage-house is contiguous to the east end of the church-yard, and has been much improved by the present incumbent.

He was ejected in 1662 for refusing subscription to the act of uniformity; but continued to reside here, and was allowed to preach in his own house every Thursday. On the sabbath he regularly attended the ministry of his successor, with whom he maintained a friendly intercourse[r]. By his will he devised a "quartern of land" in Barby, for which the commissioners of inclosure have allotted 8 a. 2 r. 36 p. towards the support of a school at Aldwinckle for poor children. He bequeathed also 10*s. per ann.* to the poor of Barby, 'which,' Bridges says, 'is now by general 'consent diverted to another use[s].' He lived to the age of 70 years, and in the entry of his burial, 21 May 1671, is stiled "Mr. Richard Thorpe sometime Minister "of Barby[t]." On his deprivation,

Knightley Holled, of Bene't coll. Camb. A. M. son of the rev. Dr. Jonathan Holled, the patron, was presented by Edward lord Montagu, and inst. 23 Apr. 1677. He was buried here 20 Aug. 1700[o]; and

Nicholas Abbot was inst. 14 Oct. following, on the presentation of Knightley Holled, gent. He survived scarcely a year, and was buried at Galby in Leicestershire, 1 Sept. 1701[o]; when Anne Holled, widow of the former incumbent, presented her son, Knightley Holled, of Baliol coll. Oxf. A. M. 1702, who was inst. 27 Dec. 1701. He was buried here 5 Dec. 1755, aged 78[s]; and his son,

Knightley Holled, of Baliol coll. Oxf. A. M. B. D. and D. D. 1766, was inst. 30 Apr. 1756, on the presentation of John Clay and Charles Watkins, of Daventry, devisees and trustees of the rev. Knightley Holled, deceased. He had a dispensation in 1776 to hold the rectory of Husband's Bosworth in Leicestershire, with this benefice; but having been presented to that living on a disputed title, he resigned it in 1777[t]. He was buried here 27 Dec. 1794, aged 87[t]; he and his father having held this rectory between 90 and 100 years! His successor,

Earle Gilbee, of University coll. Oxf. A. M. 1797, B. D. and D. D. 1800, was inst. 13 Jan. 1795, on his own presentation. He was buried here 11 Oct. 1813[s]; and

Thomas Jones, many years curate of Creton, was presented by Anne Gilbee, widow, and Thomas Harris, of Barby, gent. and inst. 11 Apr. 1814; on whose resignation, Charles Williams, of University coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. 6 June 1815, on the presentation of the last patrons.

Registers. Bridges states the Register to be 'dated in 1558[u];" but all the early volumes have been lost or destroyed through subsequent negligence; and the present series does not commence till 1748. Copies of the entries relating to the incumbents, and the family of Isham, are preserved in Taylor's collections in the British Museum[x].

The Church, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, stands near the middle of the village, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, north and south aisles and porches, south chapel, and chancel. The cornice tablet of the tower terminates with a series of corbel heads. Most of the windows have been despoiled of their mullions and tracery. The interior has been recently paved with stone, and neatly pewed. The tower is 13 ft. 7 in. long, by 9 ft. wide; the nave and aisles 52 ft. 7 in. long; the north aisle 13 ft. 4 in., the nave 21 ft. 4 in., and the south aisle 14 ft. 2 in. wide; the chancel and south chapel 32 ft. 1 in. long; the chancel 14 ft. 9 in., and the south chapel 13 ft. 1 in. wide. The nave is divided from each aisle by four pointed arches on octangular pillars with capitals of plain mouldings, but charged on some of the faces with shields or grotesque heads. Ranging from east to west, on the north side of the nave, on the first capital are two shields, 1. Zouch, 2. a cross: on the second capital two shields, 1. a bend, 2. a saltire engrailed, and on two other faces a rude head, and a bird with wings extended devouring its prey; on the third capital, two shields, 1. three fishes naiant, 2. a cross engrailed. On the eastern capital on the south side, are three shields, 1. a cross flory, 2. and 3. blank. It is rather singular, that none of these coats are quartered by Zouch, nor does any of them appear to be connected by affinity, if the cross engrailed be excepted, which may possibly be intended for Green of Drayton. In the trefoil head of the window at the east end of the north aisle, are traces of painted glass. The chancel is entered from the nave under an open arch, and originally communicated with the south chapel through two open arches, but a space of 20 ft. 10 in. by 13 ft. 1 in. at the east end of the chapel, which includes the first arch, is enclosed and occupied as a parochial school.

Sacred
The Reverend EARLE GILLBEE D D
who was eighteen Years Rector of this Parish.
A true and sincere disciple of Jesus Christ
Well grounded in the christian faith,
Mighty in the Scriptures:
Possessing superior talents and extensive learning
With suavity of manners and genuine philanthropy:
In disposition, humble, compassionate, forgiving,
An Israelite indeed.
Having long experienc'd a Saviour's love,
He proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation
With zeal, affection, fidelity, and success:
To his Flock and Family, he was a nursing Father:
To his Clerical brethren, a Pattern;
To the English Church, an Ornament;
And for the King of Kings,
A faithful Ambassador.
Crucified to the world, he shun'd human applause
And walk'd by faith in the silent shade of retirement.
A pilgrim and a stranger on the earth,
Seeking a better country.
Devoted to his God, and glorying in the cross of Christ,
He fought the good fight of faith;
Enter'd the vale of death with the land of life in View,
And resting his hope of glory on the Rock of ages,
He triumph'd over the last enemy,
And slept in JESUS.
Born August 21st 1764; Died October 3rd 1813.

BENEFACTIONS (vide p. 239). The land consists of 8 a. 1 r. 14 p. and is now let for £26 per ann.

A considerable charity, called THE TOWN LAND, is omitted in the parliamentary return. It originally consisted of three quarterns of land, with a house and close, devised by two sisters—probably of the Isham family—for the repair of the church ways and other charitable purposes at the discretion of the trustees. Several cottages have been since purchased by the trustees, and the commissioners of inclosure allotted 32 a. 3 r. 39 p. in lieu of the open field land. The whole estate now lets for £94. 2s. per ann.; and a part of the surplus beyond the repair of the stone causeways which lead from all parts of the village to the church, and the footpath from Onley, is appropriated to a parochial school for 24 boys.

Morton gives the following remarkable case of longevity in this parish. "Rebeckah Hall, an inhabitant of "Barby, but born at Scaldwell in this County, who dy'd in the Year 1704, was then 106 Years old, and was "attended to her Grave by her Six Children, Two Sons and Four Daughters, the Youngest of them 60, the "Eldest 77; and all of them likely to live long, being hearty of their Age[y]."

ONLEY,

A manorial and parochial member of Barby, lies in the valley on the north-west side of the lordship, and contains about 950 acres of old inclosure. The name does not occur before the close of the 14th century[a]; but in later times the parish is frequently styled "Barby with Onley," both in civil and ecclesiastical records.

Bridges calls it 'a hamlet of seven shepherds' houses[b],' but most of the cottages have been since pulled down, and there are now three farm-houses dispersed in the fields.

There is a tradition of a CHAPEL having formerly stood in a field which still retains the name of Chapel close.

BRAUNSTON

Is written in domesday "Brandestone," and in early records "Braunceston" and "Branteston." The lordship contains about 3100 acres. The open fields were inclosed by act of parliament 15 Geo. 3 (1775), but there is a tract of about 790 acres of old inclosure called Bury fields, besides small detached pieces in other parts. The principal proprietors are, Frederick Webb, esq. lord of the manor, who has about 580 acres of the new, and about 530 of the old inclosure; the rector, in right of his church, about 390 acres; Mrs. Eleanor Jenkins, widow of the rev. Jenkin Jenkins, about 320 acres; W. Rose Rose of Chapel Brampton, esq. about 235 acres of the old inclosure; G. H. Arnold of Ashby Lodge, esq. about 150 acres; Richard Howson Lamb of Bragborough, esq. (a genteel modern residence in this parish), about 150 acres; and Mr. Edmund Edmonds, about 110 acres. It is bounded on the north by Barby; east by Ashby Ledgers and Welton; south-east by Drayton in Daventry parish; south by Staverton; and west by Wolfhamcote and Willoughby in Warwickshire, from which it is divided by a small brook. The soil of the permanent pastures, comprising about two-thirds of the lordship, is principally a moist grey loam or strong clay; and of the arable, a reddish loam on a stony bottom. The following scarce plants have been observed here. Epilobium tetragonum, square-stalked Willow herb. Rubus corylifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble. Hypericum hirsutum, hairy St. John's-wort. Anemone nemorosa (var. flor. purp.), wood Anemone. Genista anglica, Needle Furze. Pichris echioides, Ox-tongue. Clavaria Hypoxylon, horned Club-top.

There are no quarries; but good clay near the village; and good gravel in different parts of the lordship. The pit on the side of the old road to Daventry has recently attracted considerable attention from the number and variety of its productions; indeed, it would not be difficult from this diluvial debris to form almost a complete series of rocks; and though the geologist may not think them worth particularizing, nor feel the same interest in the enumeration of the organic remains as if they were found in their native beds, yet the local collector cannot resist giving the following list. Many of the boulder stones are of considerable size. Granite—many varieties—one very like the Norway and Finland rocks. Gneiss. Feldspar and Hornblend, like some of the Norway and Finland rocks. Greenstone and Sienite. Mica slate, containing Garnets. Mica and Quartz. Red Porphyry. Lydian stone, with and without calcareous veins. Chalcedony. Chalk flints. Red ribbon Jasper. Porphyritic marble. Brecciated marble. Serpulitic marble. Derbyshire encrinal marble. Kimmeridge clay. Fibrous gypsum. Calcareous spar. Iron pyrites. Many varieties of fossil wood, jasperized, pyriteous, calcareous, bituminous, and silicious. Bovey and Cannal coal and Jet.

MANORIAL HISTORY. DEINCOURT FEE. The principal part of "Brandestone" was in the saxon era the freehold of Tori, and rated at 20s. yearly. At the domesday survey Walter de Aincurt held it, and its annual value was increased to £4. 10s. It contained three hides and a half. The arable land was nine carucates; of which three were in demesne, and four in the hands of thirteen villeins and four bordars, leaving two carucates waste or unaccounted for. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly; eight acres of meadow; and one acre of wood[a].

Blankney in Lincolnshire was the reputed head of Walter D'Eincourt's barony, which comprised a liberal grant from the Conqueror in that county, and in Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and Yorkshire. Braunston was his only estate in this county; and either he or his immediate successor transferred it to Pagan Peverel, of whose fee William Trusbut is stated in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to hold three hides and six small virgates in "Braundeston[b]," but the paramouncy is more correctly given in the Testa de Nevill, about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1), where it is certified that the abbot of Lillishull, William de Ros, and the prior of Newstead, held half a fee each in "Brauncestone" of the fees of Oliver D'Eincourt[c]. The jurors of Fawsley hundred, in another division of that record, presented that "Brauncestone" owed suit at the hundred court of Fawsley, and paid 20s. yearly to the king; that there were three hides and a half there of the fee of John "de Eyngcurt" (son of Oliver); and that Robert de Ros was lord of the vill, but neither he nor the abbot of Lillishull made their appearance[d]. John last lord Deincourt, it has been seen, acquired the manor of Duston in marriage with the heiress of Grey of Rotherfield*; and a pedigree of the family will be introduced under the manor of DUDDINGTON, which was held by them and their representatives from the reign of John to Henry 7th.

MANOR. Pagan Peverel, the grantee from Deincourt, was half brother to William Peverel, and standard bearer to Robert Curthose duke of Normandy. He refounded the priory of Barnwell near Cambridge, begun by Picot, of whose barony of Brunne in that county he had obtained a grant from Hen. 1, on its forfeiture by Robert Picot[e]. William Peverel, his only surviving son, died s. p. and his inheritance being divided between his four sisters, Braunston appears to have been allotted to

Rose, or Roesia, wife of Rollo de Harecourt, youngest brother of William, ancestor of earl Harcourt, whose daughter and heiress

Albreda, married William Trusbut, son of Geoffrey Fitz Pagan, or Trusbut, founder of Wartre abbey in Yorkshire. On the death of their last surviving son Robert Trusbut, a partition of his fees was made between his three sisters and coheiresses, Roesia de Ros, Hillaria de Buillers, and Agatha Meinfelin[h]. In 6 Joh. (1204) the sheriff was directed to deliver to William de Albini, second husband of Agatha, the manor of "Brauncestone," late belonging to Albricia (Albreda) de Harcourt, to hold at fee farm[i]; and a similar writ was issued the following year to deliver to Robert de Ros his share of the inheritance of his grandmother, Albreda de Harcourt, in "Brauncestone," saving the cattle which William de Albini had there[k]. Hillaria de Trusbut rendered an account the same year of 10 marks for having her reasonable part of the land of "Branteston[l]." In these shares originated the three manors of Ros, Lillishull, and Newstead.

ROS OR ROOS MANOR. Robert de Ros or Roos, in 11 Joh. (1209-10), had a grant of acquittance from county and hundred courts for all his demesne lands. He joined the confederated barons against John, and was appointed one of the 25 conservators to enforce the king's adherence to Magna Charta. His possessions having been seized by the crown, the sheriff was directed, 18 Joh. (1216), to consign his lands in Braunston to Robert Barret[m]. Soon after the restitution of this estate, one of the Ros family, prior to the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. 1, seems to have enfeoffed Thomas de Boltesham, who, in 33 Edw. 1 (1304-5), died seised (int. al.), in "Brauncestone and Braunceston-bury," of a messuage, with pond, dove-house, and other profits, worth 20s. yearly, and certain lands, rents of free assize, natives, and cottagers, leaving Thomas de Boketon †, son of his daughter Alice, his next heir[n]; and in the inquisition after the death of William 3rd lord Ros of Hamlake, in 17 Edw. 3 (1342), it was found that he had (int. al.) the advowson of Braunston, half a fee there held by Thomas de Boketon, half a fee by the abbot of Lillishull, and half a fee by the prior of Newstead[o]. Thomas 5th lord Ros, jointly with Beatrice his wife, re-acquired the mesne manor by purchase from John de Nottingham and William de Danby[p], probably feoffees in trust for the Boketons; and it occurs in all the subsequent inquisitions of the family under the designation of Braunston Bury manor down to Thomas 10th lord Ros, who, being a zealous Lancastrian, was attainted of high treason in parliament 4 Nov. 1 Edw. 4 (1461), and died the same year at Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 6 Edw. 4 (1466), the manor and advowson of Braunston, late belonging to lord Ros, were granted to William Hugford, esq. to hold by the accustomed services[q]; but on the restoration of the Lancastrian line, Edmund 11th lord Ros petitioned parliament in Nov. 1 Hen. 7 (1485), and obtained a reversal of his father's attainder, and full restitution to his honours and estates[r]. He died unmarried in 1508, when his extensive patrimony, including the manors and advowsons of Braunston and Stoke Albany in this county, devolved to his two surviving sisters and coheiresses, Eleanor, wife of sir Robert Manners, and Isabel, wife of sir Thomas Lovell, K.G.; between whom the ancient barony of Ros, then generally denominated of Hamlake, Trusbut, and Belvoir, fell into abeyance. On the decease of Isabel without issue the abeyance determined, and the barony became vested in sir George Manners, son and heir of Eleanor; and on the termination of the life interest of sir Thomas Lovell, in 1524, Thomas Manners lord Ros, son of George, had a special livery of the entirety of the Ros estates. In the following year he was created earl of Rutland; and in 1541 obtained a grant (int. al.) of the two manors in Braunston, parcel of the dissolved monasteries of Lillishull and Newstead[s]. He was succeeded by his son Henry 2nd earl of Rutland, who in 1554 had licence to alienate the manors and advowsons of Stoke Albany and Braunston to Gregory Isham, esq. in fee[t].

FANE EARL OF WESTMORELAND, vide APETHORP.

Gregory Isham, esq. was an elder brother of the immediate ancestor of the baronets of LAMPORT, and uncle of Gregory Isham, esq. of BARBY. He purchased several manorial estates in this county, and died in 1558, seised (int. al.) of the manors of Ros, Lillishull, and Newstead, in Braunston, together with the advowson, leaving Euseby Isham his son and heir, aged 8 years[t], who was afterwards knighted; and on the decease of his uncles Giles and Robert succeeded to the paternal estate of PYTCHLEY. The descent of this branch of the Isham family to the extinction of the male line is given in the annexed pedigree.

ISHAM OF BRAUNSTON.

From the Baronetages, Parish Register of Braunston [u], and other authorities.

Arms. Gules, a fess, and in chief three piles wavy Argent, with due difference. Crest. On a wreath, a demi swan with wings displayed Proper.

By conveyances of which I am ignorant, the Isham estate at Braunston passed to the Webbs of Canford in Dorsetshire, of whom a pedigree will be introduced under WELFORD. Sir John Webb, the second baronet, held a court here as lord of the manor in 1687; and from him the manor lineally descended to the late sir John Webb, 5th bart. who by his will devised his estates in Glocestershire and Dorsetshire in trust for his granddaughter Barbara, only child of his daughter and heiress Barbara, wife of Anthony Ashley Cooper 5th earl of Shaftsbury; his estates in Yorkshire in trust for his natural son James Webb, esq.; his estates in Lincolnshire in trust for his natural son John Webb, esq.; and his estates in Northamptonshire, Durham, Wiltshire, and Middlesex, in trust for his natural son Frederick Webb, esq. [u], the present lord of the manor or manors of Braunston.

LILLISHULL MANOR. Hillaria, the second sister and coheiress of Trusbut, having no children, gave in her widowhood a considerable part of her property to the abbey of Lillishull in Shropshire. By a charter, which, from the attestation of Robert Walensis, sheriff of Yorkshire, is fixed between 1204 and 1210 (6 to 12 Joh.), she gave, by her paternal name of Hillaria de Trusbut, all her lands of Arkendene, with housebote and haybote in her woods of Dicton and Indegkemanthorp (Ingmanthorpe) in Yorkshire, for the health of her own soul, and of Robert Budlers, formerly her husband; and by another charter to the church of St. Mary of Lillishull and the canons serving God there, she appointed it for her place of sepulture, and for the support of a canon to perform service daily after her death for her own soul and the souls of her husband Robert Budlers, her father and mother, and her ancestors and successors, she granted all her land in "Brandeston," with its pertinencies and liberties within the vill and without, in wood and plain, in ways and paths and pastures, in water and mills, and all other easements, saving the third part of the advowson of the church to her and her heirs, and the services due to the chief lord[x]. In the ecclesiastical taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the temporalities of the abbey of Lillishull in "Braundeston" were rated at 53s. per ann.[y]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), at the same sum, arising from land, rents, mill, and profits of court[z]. It has been already stated, that this manor was granted after the dissolution to Thomas Manners 1st earl of Rutland; and consequently merged in the Ros manor by unity of ownership.

Newstead Manor. Agatha, the youngest coheiress of Trusbut, died also without issue; and as she was buried in the hospital or priory of Newstead, near Stamford in Lincolnshire, founded by William Albini her second husband[a], there can be little doubt but that monastic establishment was indebted to her for its possessions here, though the specific grant is not recorded. In the ecclesiastical taxation of 1254 (38 Hen. 3), the temporalities of Newstead priory in "Braundeston" were valued at £5. 13s. 4d. per ann.[b]; and in that of 1291 (20 Edw. 1), they were rated at the same sum, £4. 10s. arising from lands, rents, mill, and profits of court, and the remaining £1. 3s. 4d. from fruits of the earth and cattle[c]. After the dissolution, this manor merged in the Ros manor with that of Lillishull.

De la Pre Abbey, near Northampton, had four bovates or oxgangs of land here of the gift of the above Agatha; viz. two bovates in "Brundeston," formerly held of her by Hugh, son of William de Brandeston, and two bovates in "Faleclive," formerly held of her by John Fitz Albern[c]; which lands and rents were valued in the taxation of 1291, at £1. 2s. per ann.[z]

Nuneaton Priory in Warwickshire, had two virgates of land in Braunston, stated by Bridges, but without citing any authority, to have been given 'by Albredo, the wife of William Trusbut[d].' In the taxation of 1254, the temporalities of the priory, here and at Ashby Ledgers, were rated at £1. 6s. 8d. per ann.[e]; and in that of 1291 the same amount was returned under the head of rents only[z]. In 3 Edw. 3 (1329), the prioress was required by writ of quo warranto to shew why she claimed view of frank pledge, assize of bread and beer, tumbril, infangtheof, gallows, and wayf, of her tenants in "Brandeston" and "Assheby Legers;" to which she pleaded, that she was entitled by prescription to hold view of frank pledge twice a year at Michaelmas and Easter, with the other privileges, as belonging to her manor of Nuneaton, but withdrew her claim of infangtheof and gallows; and it appearing that she punished offenders by fine instead of pillory and tumbril, the view was seised into the king's hands, but restored again for a fine of 10s.; for payment of which Robert de Catesby stood pledge[f]. 'These lands 'in the third and fourth of Queen Mary, valued at 24s. yearly, with the possessions lately belonging to the nuns 'of De la Pré, valued at 22s. were sold to Gregory Isham, at twenty-two years purchase[d].'

Baieux Fee*. Sawin had a small estate in "Brandestone" in the time of Edward the Confessor, which, though consisting of only one virgate, was rated at 20s. yearly, the same as the three hides and a half of Tori: and it is further observable, that the valuation was not altered in the domesday survey, at which time it was in the soke or jurisdiction of Fawsley, and was held by William Peverel† under the bishop of Baieux. The arable land was one carucate, to which belonged two villeins and four bordars[g]. The bishop's possessions were confiscated by Will. 2; and in the hydarium of Hen. 2 four small virgates in "Braundeston" were certified to be of the fee of the earl of Leicester[h]. This estate, or at least a part of it, may with little hesitation be identified with Falclive, or Fawcliffe, a hamlet long since depopulated, bordering on Barby one of William Peverel's manors: and the supposition acquires additional force from an inquisition as late as 1615, in which lands in "Braunston and "Fawcliffe" were found to be held of the hundred of Fawsley[i]. The name of the vill is still recognised in a small field where the boundaries of the freehold and copyhold land are each marked by an ancient stone.

A court leet and court baron are held for the manor. Disputes having arisen between Euseby Isham, esq. lord of the manor, and the customary tenants or copyholders, their respective claims were referred to a commission of arbitration; and by deed 27 Sept. 27 Eliz. (1585), after reciting that the manor of Braunston was in former times accounted several manors, whereof one was called Roses manor or fee, or the earl of Rutland's manor, another called Abbot's manor, parcel of the dissolved abbey of Lillishull in Shropshire, and another called Priory's manor, parcel of the dissolved priory of Newstede in Lincolnshire; and that all the said manors or fees have been of long time reputed and used as one manor, and all the tenants and suitors to them or any of them have resorted and made suit to one court baron; the commissioners pointed out Bury fields and the other demesne lands, and excepted them from the operation of the customs of the said manor or manors, which they adjudged to be, and from time out of mind had been, the same customs as were then expressed, declared, and set forth by them. The tenure is copyhold of inheritance, heriotable, with fine certain. Some of the customs are sufficiently peculiar to justify insertion. A copyhold held by a husband in right of his wife, may, with their mutual consent, be surrendered to the use of any person in fee simple. If a copyholder die seised of a copyhold, his wife shall be admitted tenant for life without paying any other fine than 4s. and a purse to the lord at the court at which the death of her husband shall be found by the homage, or the next court after, yielding annually the ancient rent of the copyhold and the above payment of 4s. and a purse; and at the next court after her decease, or after waste committed by her, the homage shall present and admit the next heir of the husband for the customary fine of one year's rent. A copyhold is inheritable by the course of the common laws of the realm, except a copyholder leave daughters only, in which case it descends to the eldest as sole heir. The wardship of infant heirs does not belong to the lord, but to the next of kin to whom the copyhold cannot descend, and only until the age of 14 years of such infant. A copyholder may lease without licence of the lord for 21 years, if the lessor so long live. A copyholder may pull down buildings, fell timber, dig the soil, &c. A copyhold cannot be forfeited to the lord for any default or denial of payment of rent, fine or heriot, or for the breach of any custom whatsoever.

Manor Houses. Foundations of walls, frequently found on a spot in the Bury fields which was formerly moated round, furnish an indisputable clue to the site of the ancient mansion of the Ros manor. The present manor house is a respectable farm house at the west end of the village, but to which manor it was originally attached is not known.

The Village, three miles from Daventry, is skirted by the high road to Chester, Wales, and Ireland, which commands from the brow of a steep declivity an extensive opening into Warwickshire, and an interesting foreground to the landscape is formed by the manor house, the church, the parsonage, and a line of rural homes crowning the opposite summit, with slips of narrow inclosures gradually sloping to the Oxford and Grand Junction canals, which unite their streams in the valley below, between the two detached portions of the village called Great and Little Braunston. The Grand Junction Canal was projected in 1793, for the purpose of opening a communication between the metropolis and the navigation of the midland, northern, and north-western counties; but the origin and objects of this great national undertaking will be more fully detailed in the general introduction to the county. On its completion to Wedon, in June 1796, the committee, accompanied by a number of ladies and gentlemen, preceded by the chairman William Praed, esq. M. P. assembled here, and embarked on board two boats, with flags flying and music playing, amidst the acclamations of an immense concourse of people. Near the head of the canal is a reservoir, and at no great distance is a steam engine which answers the double purpose of supplying additional water when required, or returning the waste water into the reservoir. The level of the canal is elevated 37 feet by means of seven locks in the course of the first mile, and is then carried through a tunnel or excavation under a hill 2045 yards in length, and considered at the time the longest and best executed work of the kind in the kingdom. Extensive warehouses are now erected and wharfs established at Braunston; and the influence of the canals on its local consequence and population has been very considerable.

Bridges states, that 'towards the upper end of the town, on the south side, is a remarkable cross, about twenty-four 'feet in height. From the base it ascends by four steps, on the uppermost of which is fixed a shaft, of an octangular 'form, eleven foot four inches high, and consisting of one piece of stone. The capital, which is in the gothic 'manner, hath on four of its angles small bustos, supposed to be the head of the Virgin Mary[k].' Modern tourists, presuming on the preservation of so interesting a relic, have adopted or embellished the above description of an object which has been levelled to the ground between 40 and 50 years, and the materials applied to the repair of the highways.

In the time of Bridges, Braunston was 'a village of eighty-eight houses, including three which (were) appointed 'for the use of the poor[l].' By the census of 1801 it contained 179 houses and 909 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 164 houses and 963 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £241. 11s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £5624. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £1960. 15s. at 4s. 2d. in the £; to which is to be added, a stipulated payment of £100 per ann. by the Grand Junction Canal Company. The wake is kept on the Sunday following All Saints day.

The Advowson vested solely in the Ros family on the failure of issue in the other coheirs of Trusbut, and continued appendant to the Ros manor till 1727, when it was purchased of sir John Webb, of Canford in Dorsetshire, bart. by the principal, fellows, and scholars of Jesus college, Oxford, the present patrons.

The Rectory is in the deanry of Daventry. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[m], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[n], it is rated at 20 marks (£13. 6s. 8d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), it is valued at £32. 13s. 4d. per ann. deducting an annual pension of 20s. to the abbey of Elstow in Bedfordshire, and 10s. 7d. for synodals and procurations[o]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £78 per ann. in the patronage of Philip Holman, esq. (qu. in trust?); that Edward Reynolds, D. D. was incumbent, and the church two miles distant from any other in the hundred[p]. The rectory now consists of 384 a. 1 r. 6 p. awarded in lieu of the glebe, "the parson's piece or ten leys piece," and the tithes of the open fields by the commissioners of inclosure; and the tithes of all the old inclosures called Bury fields. The parsonage-house stands south of the church in a homestead of about six acres, modernized with much taste by the present incumbent.

M. was inst. 1 Mar. 1630-1, on the presentation of Isaac Johnson, esq. and re-inst. 11 Aug. following, on the presentation of John Reading, esq. executor of Isaac Johnson, esq. vice Robert Binckes, deceased. He was son of Augustine Reynolds, a merchant at Southampton, where he was born in November 1599. From the free grammar school of that town he was admitted of Merton college, Oxford, and having taken his master's degree, entered into holy orders. His first preferment was the vicarage of All Saints in Northampton, which he obtained in Jan. 1627-8, and resigned in Nov. 1629. In 1638 he published a sermon "touching the peace and edification of the church," delivered at an episcopal visitation at Daventry; and was about the same time appointed preacher to the society of Lincoln's Inn. When the political and religious contentions which divided the country approached a crisis, he joined the presbyterians, became a leading member of the assembly of divines convened by parliament at Westminster in 1643 for the government and reformation of the national religion, and subsequently took the solemn league and covenant against prelacy. His pulpit talents were frequently called into exercise on public occasions; and in 1648 he was declared D. D. in convocation, and superseded by parliamentary authority Dr. Samuel Fell in the deanry of Christ Church and vice chancellorship of Oxford, but refusing subscription to the engagement imposed by the independents when that party gained the ascendancy, he was himself ejected from the deanry in 1650, and for several succeeding years divided his residence between his livings of Braunston, and of St. Laurence Jewry in London. In October 1658 he was deputed by the London ministers to present their congratulatory address to Richard Cromwell on his accession to the protectorate; the tide of public affairs, however, soon setting in an opposite direction, he exerted his powerful influence with his brethren and the city to promote the measures adopted by general Monk for the restoration of monarchy. The king, on assuming the government, issued a declaration for liberty of conscience, and evinced a disposition to win over the presbyterians by appointing Dr. Reynolds and nine other of their leading divines chaplains in ordinary, and sanctioning the Savoy conferences for effecting their coalition with the church. Pending this negociation, which ultimately failed, offers of considerable preferment were made to them, but they all declined except Dr. Reynolds, who accepted the see of Norwich, and was consecrated bishop 6 Jan. 1660-1. He had been re-admitted to the deanry of Christ Church by the secluded members of the long parliament, but retained it only till the king's return, who substituted Dr. Morley, and as a temporary compensation gave him the wardenship of Merton college, which, with his two parochial benefices, he resigned on his elevation to the episcopal bench. He died 28 July 1676, in his 76th year, and was buried in the chapel adjoining the palace at Norwich. His character was elaborately though quaintly drawn in a funeral sermon preached and published by B. Rively, one of his chaplains. He ranked in the first class of his contemporaries as a preacher and divine. In private life, affability and charity in its extended sense distinguished him. "He was cloathed with humility, as the "apostle Peter exhorts; yea, 'twas his upper garment, "and cover'd all the rest of his accomplishments. He "was never heard to censure any body, though he him-"self has not been spared. In this virtue he was a true "Nazianzen, high in place and merit, but lowly in mind "and disposition." His religious treatises on "The "vanity of the creature," "the sinfulness of sin," "the "use of the law," "the life of Christ," and "the pas-"sions and faculties of the soul of man," "An expli-"cation of the 110th psalm," "meditations on the holy "sacrament of the Lord's last supper," and "explica-"tion of the 14th chap. of Hosea in seven humiliation "sermons," after having separately appeared in 4to, were collected in one vol. fol. 1658, under the title of "the Works of Dr. Edward Reynolds," with a portrait by Loggan prefixed. Thirty sermons on different occasions, from 1634 to his death, were added to the 2nd folio edition of his works in 1679. He wrote also "The assembly of divines," "annotations on the book "of Ecclesiastes," and "the epistolary preface to Wil-"liam Barlee's Correptory Correction, &c." already noticed under Brockhole. "The humble Proposals of "sundry learned pious Divines within this Kingdom, "concerning the Engagement intended to be imposed "on them for their Subscriptions," Lond. 1650, one sheet 4to, is also attributed to him; and amongst the king's pamphlets in the British Museum (single sheets vol. 6), is a small printed half sheet of "Questions ex-"tracted out of the Ordinance of Parliament to be pro-"pounded to Receivers of the Lord's Supper;" with Answers referring to the Scriptures, as Q. Who made or created you? A. Acts 17. 24. Gen. 1. 27. Q. What is God? A. Joh. 4. 24. Revel. 1. 8. &c. &c. Lond. printed 1648: a MS note adds "June 24th," and that it was "written by Dr. Edward Reynolds, and printed "onely for the use of his owne parish of Braunston in "Northamptonshire." The bishop's widow, Mary, daughter of John Harding, D. D. formerly master of Magdalen college, Oxford, survived till 27 Sept. 1683, and lies buried in St. Peter's church, Northampton, of which her only son, Dr. Edward Reynolds, was then rector. On the bishop's cession, Richard Burden was presented by Philip Holman, esq. and inst. 18 Sept. 1661. He was buried here 25 Mar. 1691[t]; and on the 28th,

Ambrose Nicholson, of Emanuel coll. Camb. A. M. was inst. on the presentation of Ambrose Holbech, gent. He resigned the rectory of Halton in Buckinghamshire for this benefice[u], and was buried here 10 Feb. 1695-6[t]; when another

James Brynker, B. D. was inst. 2 Feb. 1732-3. He was buried here 6 Oct. 1765[t]; and

John Edwards, B. D. was inst. 30 Jan. 1766. He died 14 July 1789, aged 81[x], was buried here on the 18th[t], and

John Williams, B. D. was inst. 4 Dec. 1789. He died 16 Aug. 1818, aged 78, was buried here on the 22nd[t], and Corbet Hue, D. D. was inst. 13 Feb. 1819.

The Registers are in a remarkably neat and perfect state from 1538—the year when they were first instituted by the vicar-general Cromwell—but the entries were "written on loose papers" prior to the incumbency of Robert Binckes, who "did as well as he could find the same, insert them unto the rest."

The Communion Plate consists of a chalice with the arms. Crest of Dunch, (S.) a chevron between three towers triple towered (Ar.); out of a ducal coronet (O.) an antelope's head (Az. crined, armed, and attired of the first), inscribed "To the faithfull of Braunston in Northton' the guift of Elizabeth Isham widdow about 40 yeares, "who died 6 August 1657. Have faith and repentance to God, each to other charity:" and a flagon, "the gift "of the Rev[d] John Williams, B. D. late Rector, to the parish of Braunston, Aug. 16, 1818."

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, forms a conspicuous object on the brow of the hill at the west entrance of the village, and consists of a tower (containing six bells), surmounted by a spire, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and south chapel. The tower, which is built of a reddish ashler stone, has crocketted pinnacles at the angles of the battlements, and terminates in a lofty crocketted octangular spire rising to the height of about 150 feet. The rest of the building is uninteresting. Most of the windows are square-headed. The interior has been recently paved and pewed with great neatness, but the old pulpit is still preserved, with the stand at the side on which the hour-glass was placed to regulate the length of the puritanical sermons. The nave and aisles are 57 ft. 7 in. long; the nave 18 ft. 5 in., the north aisle 11 ft. 10 in., and the south aisle 13 ft. 5 in. wide; and the chancel and south chapel 39 ft. 8 in. long; the chancel 15 ft. 1 in. and the chapel 14 ft. 1 in. wide. The nave is divided from the north aisle by four pointed arches on octangular pillars with plain capitals, and from the south aisle by three arches of the same character but wider span. At the east end of the north aisle was formerly a chapel or chantry, as is evident from an arch now closed, on each side of which is a bracket for an image. An open pointed arch leads from the nave into the chancel, which is separated from the south chapel by three others on octangular pillars with plain capitals. The eastern arch of the chapel is built up and the space enclosed for a vestry, in the south wall of which, at the east end, is a piscina under a plain trefoiled arch. The chapel communicates with the south aisle through a small arch.

South Chapel. At the west end of the south wall, on a slab elevated by temporary masonry, lies a cross-legged effigy in grey marble, which may with a confidence bordering on certainty be assigned to William 4th lord Ros, who died in Palestine in the reign of Edw. 3, as there is no other individual of the family to whom it can with any probability be referred, whose place of interment is not expressly recorded, and the costume and execution of the figure harmonizes with the period. He is in a complete hauberk of ring mail; the hood or chaperon de mailles conforms nearly to the shape of the head, and is bound round the brow with a studded fillet; the gauntlets have no divisions for the fingers. His surcoat descends in loose folds below his knees, and is open in front beneath the girdle. Round his waist is a broad belt for the sword, and from another round his neck is slung a long heater shield with chamfered edge. He is in the act of returning his sword into the scabbard; and his legs are crossed in an unusual manner to admit between them a large rose in allusion to his name. On each side the cushion on which his head reposes, is the mutilated remains of an angel with a censor. Above his head is a canopy, and at his feet are two lions.

On a slab bearing the impresses of two brass figures and four shields was the following imperfect inscription in the time of Bridges[y].

And of Alys that was his wyffe
Ihu bryngе their sowlis to everlasting lyffe.

'This church was[a] polluted by murder during the episcopate of Oliver Sutton, bishop of Lincoln, who in the 'year 1290 granted a licence of reconciliation to the rector; but for some reasons which we know not of, this 'ceremony appears to have been at that time omitted; for in 1299 the same bishop gave a new commission to the 'abbot of Croxton to perform it.'

Chantry. 'There was formerly a chauntry belonging to the Manor of Brandestonbery, founded in all pro- 'bability by some one of the family of Ros[a]. In the year 1386 it fell by lapse to John Buckingham bishop of 'Lincoln, who on the 16th of June collated to it John Botyngdon, vicar of Badby.' No other appointment occurs; nor is it noticed in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535, or the chantry roll prior to the dissolution.

The Particular or Calvinistic Baptists have a neat brick chapel, 39 ft. 4 in. by 32 ft. 2 in. erected in 1796, near the centre of the village. Adjoining to it is a house and garden appropriated to the officiating minister.

Ministers. The society was formed in 1788, and to Shipston in Worcestershire about Christmas 1809, and John Simmons was ordained pastor in 1790. He re- Samuel Norman was ordained in May 1810. He died moved to Accrington in Lancashire, and in Aug. 1818, and William Buck was ordained Oct. 1806. He removed Joseph Bate was ordained in April 1820.

The Wesleyan Methodists have also a brick chapel, 32 ft. 10 in. by 31 ft. on the same side of the village.

Benefactions (vide p. 239). The Town Land, as it is now commonly called, is an accumulation of early benefactions. None of the donors can be retrieved; Joan Greene, who is placed at the head of the parliamentary return, being merely the representative of a deceased trustee. In the church is a table, put up in 1810, recording that "by virtue of a decree made in his majesty's high court of chancery, 10 Ja^s 1 (1612), divers messuages and lands situated in the several parishes of Ashby Ledgers, Staverton, and Braunston, in the county of Northampton, were vested in certain trustees or feoffees, upon trust, from time to time, and at all times thereafter, to bestow and employ the yearly issues, rents, revenues, and profits thereof, to and for the amending and repairing the common ways and fords in the parish of Braunston aforesaid, and to and for the repairing of the church of Braunston, amending the highways and causeways, and relief of the poor there; and to and for other good and charitable uses for the benefit of the town of Braunston aforesaid." This estate now consists of two houses, a malt-kiln, a blacksmith's shop, two cottages, about two acres of old inclosure, and 34 a. 3 r. 19 p. of new inclosure in Braunston; about 28½ a. of land at Staverton; and about 11¼ a. of land at Ashby Ledgers; and produces a rental of £294. 12s. 6d. per ann.

School. Another memorandum in the church states, that "William Makepeace, son of Richard Makepeace of Braunston, gent. by his last will dated May 2, 1733, gave to seven trustees (nominated therein), and their heirs for ever, one quartern of a yard land lying in the said parish, the rents and profits thereof to be by them applied to the educating of poor children of the said parish at school, to instruct them in the vulgar tongue, church catechism, writing, &c.; and in default of any or a sufficient number of such children to be instructed, or for want of a fit and able person to instruct them either in Braunston or some near adjacent village, that then the said trustees (whereof the rector of Braunston, if resident, to be always one, and the male heir of the donor's nephew John Clarke, gent. to be always another) should dispose of the above charity, or such surplus thereof as to the majority of them shall seem meet, towards the relief of the most indigent persons of the parish of Braunston, not receiving, nor having received collection." The commissioners of inclosure allotted 14 a. 2 r. 32 p. in lieu of the land in the open field, which is now let for £29 per ann.; and on this foundation is engrafted a National School for 100 boys and 50 girls. A neat school room of brick, 63 ft. long by 21 ft. wide, has been erected on the green at the east end of the village, by subscription of the principal inhabitants, with the addition of £75 from the National School Society in London.

The commissioners of inclosure allotted 11 a. 3 r. 31 p. in trust for the poor, the rent of which amounts to £26. 6s. 4d. per ann. and is annually distributed in coals.

The commissioners awarded also 4 a. 1 r. 30 p. for the repair of the church; which land has never been separated or fenced from the poor's allotment, and with about an acre of old inclosure near the village appropriated to the same purpose, is let for £14. 10s. 3d. per ann.

[a] [b] Mr. Morton makes mention of an extraordinary instance of old age in William Bree, a native of this town, who 'appears by the register to have died within a few months of one hundred and twenty-nine years of age. There 'is an instance of another nature, altogether as extraordinary, in the same register, of Alice, the wife of one William 'Forster, who was brought to bed of four children at a birth, two of them sons and two daughters, which were all 'baptized on the 7th of November 1709.' Neither of these phenomena will bear the test of examination; for it appears by reference to the parish register, that the William Bree baptized 10 Sept. 1570, was son of Richard, and the William Bree buried 29 Apr. 1699, was son of William, consequently not the same individual. In the other case it is simply stated that Anne, William, Mary, and Robert, the sons and daughters of William Foster and Alice his wife, were baptized 7 Nov. 1709, and no allusion being made to their preternatural birth, it can only be regarded as an instance of parents having several children baptized together—a practice not unfrequent among the lower orders in the present day.

His wife lived with him above sixty years, but died without issue.'

CATESBY

Parish includes the hamlet of Newbold, which contributes its proportion to the poor, but not to the highways. In domesday it is written "Catesbi," and in a later record "Katebi," but neither of the first syllables affords a clue to a probable combination with the saxon bÿe, a habitation. The lordship is all old inclosure, and, exclusive of Newbold, contains about 1330 acres, of which J. G. Parkhurst, esq. lord of the manor and impropriator, has about 500 acres; Miss Downes, of Staverton, about 320 acres; Mr. Henry Hickman, of Newnham, about 220 acres, and Miss Hickman about 100 acres; and W. Rose Rose, of Chapel Brampton, esq. about 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by Staverton; north-east by Badby; east and south-east by Charwelton; south by Hellidon; and west by Shuckborough in Warwickshire. More than three-fourths of the lordship is meadow and pasture. The soil is in general a deep fertile loam; on the east side is some excellent red land. Morton was informed that "the ground (here) is so rich, that they seldom or never let it lie fallow; and tho' "tilled Year after Year without Intermission, yet produces an excellent Crop, and that with little or no Help from "Manure[a]." Pitt, in his agricultural survey of the county, states, that in 1806 about 50 acres of rich old pasture in Catesby was applied to the growth of woad (Isatis tinctoria) for dyeing, and minutely describes the system of cultivation[b]. There is now no water mill in the lordship.

Manorial History. Peverel Fee *. "Catesbi," in the saxon era, belonged to Gitda †, and was rated at 40s. yearly. At the domesday survey it was doubled in value, and was then held by Sasfrid under William Peverel, and consisted of four hides. The arable land was eight caracates; in demesne were two caracates with two servants and a maiden; and seventeen villeins with a priest and four bordars had the remaining six caracates. There were two mills worth 16d. yearly, and four acres of meadow. Of this land, a knight held one hide and had two caracates[c].

In the hydarium of Hen. 2, "Catesby" was certified to contain four hides of the fee of Peverel[d]. A similar return was made in the Testa de Nevill between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, when the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that "Catesby" and "Newbold" formerly did suit at the hundred court of Falewesle, and paid 23s. 8d. yearly to the king, but were then transferred to the honor of Peverel[e].

Esseby or Catesby Manor. Sasfrid was one of the principal feudatory tenants of William Peverel, from whom, besides Catesby, he held Great Ashby in Leicestershire, Empingham in Rutlandshire, and Baseford in Nottinghamshire[f], and to whose priory of Lenton near Nottingham, he contributed two parts of the tithe of his demesne in the two last-mentioned places[g]. His posterity adopted the local surname of Esseby or Ashby, but his immediate descendants seem to have varied their names with their residence, and were almost indifferently denominated de Esseby, de Basford, and de Catesby. Philip, son of Sasfrid, and Maud his wife, gave certain lands in Baseford to Lenton priory, which were confirmed by his son, under the appellation of Robert son of Philip de Baseford[h]. He is stiled simply Robert son of Philip in the grant (int. al.) of that church, in the foundation charter of Catesby priory[i]; and in another deed, he, by the name of Robert de Esseby, son of Philip de Esseby, with the consent of Matilda his wife, sister of Fulk Trussel, and William his son and heir, granted a caracate of his demesne of Esseby (Great Ashby) to the priory of Merevale in Warwickshire[k]. By the inquisition of knights' fees belonging to escheated honors in the hands of the crown, 13 Joh. (1210), William son of Robert de Hasseby was certified to hold one fee in Catesby, one in Basford, and one in Ashby, of the honor of Peverel[l]; and dying soon after, Mast. Ernulf de Avelent obtained the wardship of his lands and heir in 17 Joh. (1215)[m]. Ralph Fitz Nicholas paid 200 marks (£133. 6s. 8d.) in 15 Hen. 3 (1230-1), for the custody of the heir of Robert son of William de Esseby[n], and in 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5), as guardian of the lands (and heir) of Robert son of William de "Catesby" accounted for one fee in "Catesby" and "Newebold" of the honor of Peverel[o]. William de Esseby, having attained his full age, was returned to hold this fee in 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1)[p], and died in the 33rd year of that reign seised of the vills of Catesby and Newbold, where he had one caracate of land in demesne, worth 40s. yearly, 44s. 9d. in rents of assize, services of villeins worth 33s., and talliage 2 marks (26s. 8d.), together with lands in Lilbourn and Creek, leaving Robert his son and heir aged six years[q], whose wardship was granted for £100 to Ralph Fitz Nicholas[r], formerly his father's guardian. This Robert de Esseby dying in his minority, was succeeded by his brother William de Esseby, who being convicted before the justices itinerant at Northampton, in 50 Hen. 3 (1265-6), of feloniously killing one Hugh Russell at Creek, incurred a forfeiture of his whole estate, comprising Catesby, Great Ashby, and Basford, and his share of the Camville estates of Lilbourn and Creek, Pickwell in Leicestershire, and Shustock in Warwickshire[s]. Six virgates, probably all his demesne lands in Catesby, were granted by the crown the same year to Thomas de Tulus or Thoulouse, by whom, according to the presentment of the jurors of Fawsley hundred in 4 Edw. 1 (1275-6), they had been sold eight years before to the prioress of Catesby[t].

ESSEBY OR CATESBY.

CATESBY PRIORY

Was founded in the 12th century, and dedicated to the honor of the Virgin Mary and St. Edmund[a], for Benedictine nuns[b]; but to which class of that order it belonged is by no means certain, as according to some authorities "it consisted of a prioress and nine nuns of the [d] Cistertian order,' whilst others assign it to the order of the Gilbertines[e], instituted by Gilbert of Sempringham in Lincolnshire. The doubt which has been started respecting its founder admits of a much more easy solution. 'This nunnery,' says Bridges, 'was built by 'Philip de Esseby 'or Cateby, the younger son of sir William de Esseby of Ashby and Basford; or rather by [g] Robert the son of 'Philip de Esseby.' A reference to the pedigree subjoined to the preceding account of the family possessions, every step of which is authenticated, will best explain the relationship of the parties, only premising that I suspect this Philip to be a misnomer or a re-duplication of Philip son of Robert and brother of William. Admitting, however, either supposition, there is not a shadow of positive evidence to support his pretensions; and the circumstance of the lands and churches which constituted the original endowment never having been at the disposal of a "younger son," would alone negative his claim, even though the question were not still more effectually set at rest by the general confirmatory charter of Hen. 3rd in 1272[h], which places Robert son of Philip at the head of the benefactors to the priory, and in direct terms states him to be the donor of the church of the blessed Mary of "Kateby," with the chapel of "Helidene," and grounds in tillage, lands, tenements, mills, ponds, water ways, meadows, pastures, and all easements and pertinences—in other words, the site and demesnes of the priory; together with the church of Magna Esseby (Great Ashby in Leicestershire), and lands, farm houses, tofts, pastures, mill (with a road to it from the town, 12 ft. wide), pond, water ways, and other pertinences there; and the church of the blessed Leodegarius (St. Ledger) of Baseford (in Nottinghamshire), with lands and tenements, meadows, pastures, and all easements and pertinencies there. William son of the said Robert added to his father's bounty a certain meadow of his demesne in "Kateby," situated between the land in tillage called "Milnhill" and the rivulet which flowed through the valley of "Kirkehill." William son of the second Robert released his right of common which he had, or might have, in that croft belonging to the prioress and convent in Great Ashby, where they had their sheep-fold. Philip son of Robert de Esseby gave four virgates of land, with tofts and crofts, meadows and pastures, and all other pertinencies in Theingworth (Thedingworth in Leicestershire). William de Esseby gave a virgate of land of his demesne in "Kateby," and half a virgate of his land in villenage, which Robert de Brichewin held there with Felicia his daughter, and which the said Felicia afterwards quit-claimed. William de Magna Esseby gave a toft and croft with pertinencies in that vill. Besides these donations from the founder and his family, the prioress and convent had possessions in Byfield, Bodington, Hellidon, Staverton, Sulgrave, &c. which will be introduced under the respective parishes. A few grants in other counties remain to be noticed. Adam son of Ranulf de Parva Esseby gave them 6d. rent out of land which Adam le Cnute held in Little Asby[i] (in Leicestershire). Richard son of Robert de Daivill gave a virgate of land, with toft thereto belonging, at Sharnford (in Leicestershire). Alice daughter of Richard Clerk, of Dodeford, gave nine acres of land at Dodford (near Buckingham). Ralph Harang gave the assarts of his park of Westbury (in Buckinghamshire) between "Whittlewode" (Whittlebury) forest and the land of Jordan de St. Liz; and all the assarts of his wood of Westbury which is between the lands of the abbots of Osaney and Bittlesden[l]. In 17 Hen. 3 (1232-3), the king granted to the nuns of Catesby a cart or wain load of wood every day out of "Beisewood[k]," called by Bridges 'Besk-wood in the forest of Shirwood[l]' in Nottinghamshire, but he must surely be mistaken in the locality of the place: the distance would have rendered the privilege completely nugatory, and an insult rather than a boon. It might be, and probably was, a neighbouring wood, though the name is now unknown. That the exercise of the right was an accommodation to the nuns, is evident from their obtaining a confirmation of it nearly two centuries after from Henry 4th [n]. Roger de Quincy earl of Winchester and constable of Scotland, by deed s. d. in the reign of Hen. 3, gave to God, the blessed Mary and Edmund, and the nuns of "Catesby," an annual rent charge of half a mark out of land at Weston [o] (qu. in Cambridgeshire). In 7 Edw. I (1278-9), sir Henry de Erdington, of Erdington in Warwickshire, for the health of the souls of himself and Maud his wife, gave the advowson of Yardley in Worcestershire to this priory, and directed the profits, after its appropriation, to be applied to furnishing habits for the nuns, and relief to the poor; the prioress and convent covenanting in return, that one of their canons should celebrate divine service daily for the souls of him and his wife, his father Giles, and all his ancestors and successors, that they would solemnly keep the anniversary of him and the lady Roese his sister, and that his body should have burial in their chapel of St. Edmund before the altar [p]. This appropriation never took place, and the grant was soon after resumed by the heirs of the donor, or relinquished by the convent; for in the reign of Edw. 3, Thomas (Beauchamp) earl of Warwick gave, and Giles de Erdington released, the advowson of Yardley to Maxtoke priory [q] in Warwickshire.

'In this monastery there was,' says Bridges, 'an officer who had the inspection and management of the revenues 'belonging to it, under the name of warden, or master of the house. To this office he was nominated by the 'prioress and convent, and admitted by the bishop. Of these masters or wardens the following names are to be 'met with in the registers. In the year 1266 the prioress and convent, having first obtained licence from the 'bishop, elected to this office [r] Hugh, a canon of the house: his election being confirmed, he was admitted on the '10th of December. Upon his death, which happened in 1289, the prioress and nuns, with the bishop's consent, 'appointed [s] John his successor, who was admitted on the 10th of December in the same year. He held this station 'about five years, and was succeeded in 1293 by

'[t] Robert de Wardon or Wardington, a monk of Canons Ashby, who was chosen on the 19th of April. On the '17th of November following, he was admonished by letters from the bishop to discharge his duty to the convent 'by residing at Catesby. He resigned in 1294, about which time he appears to have been elected the prior of 'Canons Ashby, and in his place was admitted

'[u] William de Grutteworth on the 22d of September. He continued in this office till the year 1297, when on the '23d of October the bishop appointed

'[w] Roger de Daventre to succeed him. Whether he died in the mastership, or resigned it, does not appear, but 'on the 28th of April in 1319, 'Thomas de Spitteworth was deputed to discharge it. He received his commission 'from John de Harington, official to the bishops of Lincoln during a vacancy of the see; and was to continue in 'his office only during the pleasure of the said official. The next, and likewise the last, that occurs in this post is

'[x] William Houles, who, on the 9th of April in 1370 had the custody of the temporalities of the priory committed 'to him, as steward to the convent during the good pleasure of the bishop and the prioress.'

Amongst the miscellaneous rolls in the Augmentation Office, is an account of the receipts and expenditure of this priory for the year ending Mich. 3 Hen. 5 (1415)*, which presents such an interesting and minute detail of the internal arrangement and economy of one of the minor religious establishments, as renders any apology for its extreme length unnecessary.

Prioresses. The following list, where no other authority is cited, was compiled by Bridges[g] from the Lincoln registers. Margaret and Alice, natives of Abingdon in Berkshire, and sisters of St. Edmund archbishop of Canterbury, are said to have successively presided over this priory[h]. Pope Innocent 4th, in the third year of his pontificate (1246), issued his bull to the bishop of Lincoln to hear and decide upon the complaint of the prioress and convent of Catesby respecting wrongs done them by the clergy of Lincoln, Salisbury, and Ely, and to enforce his decision by ecclesiastical censures[i]. The prioress here alluded to was probably the above Margaret, who died in 1257, when, such was her reputation for sanctity, that miracles are reported to have been wrought through her merits[k]. Her sister Alice survived till 1270[l], and not improbably might be one of the nuns here, but the conjecture that she succeeded in the priorate must be erroneous, for in 43 Hen. 3 (1258-9), Felicia, prioress of Catesby, occurs in a fine or concord with John de Vallibus (Vaux), relating to lands in "Dodindon[1]" (Bodington); 'and dying in 1276,

'Amabilia, the sub-prioress, was chosen in her stead, 'and admitted by the bishop of Lincoln on the 13th of 'September. In 1285 she resigned her office, and was 'succeeded by

'Yolu or Isodu Hasteng, who was admitted 21 January, 'but resigning in 1291, the bishop on the 16*th of March* 'admitted in her stead,

'Biblisia: upon her entrance into this office the right 'of the convent to the park of Westbury (in Buckingham-'shire) was disputed, and the cause decided in favour of 'the nuns. She died in 1291, and

'Johanna de Northampton, cellarer of the house, was 'chosen by the convent. But this election being made 'without licence first obtained from the bishop of Lin-'coln, he declared it void, though afterwards, in consi-'deration of the merits of the person elected, he con-'firmed it. She died in 1310, and the nuns again pro-'ceeded to an election without licence from the bishop, 'pleaded prescription to justify their practice, and chose

'Johanna de Ludham or Loutham to be their prioress. 'But the bishop acted as before: first declared the 'election void, and then confirmed it in consideration of 'the merits of the person elected. Upon the resignation 'of this Joanna de Loutham, 1338,

'Alicia de Rolston was chosen, and admitted on the '23d of October. In 1344 she died, and on the 3rd of 'November,

'Katherine de Boydon was nominated her successor by 'the bishop of Lincoln, her former election being set 'aside by reason of its irregularity.' In 21 Edw. 3 (1347), she complained of being grievously distrained by the sheriff of the county for the Ninth, whereupon the rolls being searched, it was found on the great roll of Edw. 3, that £5. 19s. 10½d. was demanded of the then prioress of Catesby for the Ninth granted 14 Edw. 3, whereof 17s. 4d. was in Botyndon, £1. 9s. 10d. in Byfield, £1. 2s. 8½d. in Stav'ton, and 50s. in Catesby. It was found also in the rolls of taxation 20 Edw. 1; and on her declaration that the whole of these were spiritualities, and that neither she nor her predecessors had purchased or acquired any thing since 20 Edw. 1, an inquisition was summoned, which confirmed her statement, and thereupon she was relieved[m]. 'She died in 1349, and 'the nuns proceeding again to an irregular election, the 'bishop on the 23rd of June nominated and elected

'Orabilis de Raundes,' or Orabilla, as she is called in a lease of Cote croft in Staverton in 28 Edw. 3[n] (1354);

'who dying in 1361, and the new election made by the 'nuns being defective in form, the bishop made choice of 'Johanna Fabian of Bannebury, and admitted her on 'the 21st of August. Upon her death in 1370,

'Joanna de Ashby was chosen by the convent, and the 'election approved by the bishop. She was admitted 'on the 28th of June. Her successor was

'Elizabeth Swynford, who was chosen by the nuns, 'and admitted by the bishop on the 22nd of March '1484. She was succeeded by

'Agnes Terry, who dying in 1431, the bishop granted 'a licence for electing another prioress, but it does not 'appear who was chosen. Whoever she was, she seems 'to have misbehaved in her office, for in 1444 the prioress 'was suspended from the administration of all affairs re-'lating to the revenues of the house during the bishop's 'good pleasure, and a commission was granted to the 'abbot of St. James in Northampton to inspect their 'accounts. On the 8th of March in 1452,

'Agnes Alvesley was chosen by the bishop of Lincoln, 'with the consent and approbation of the convent.'

By the inquisition after the death of John Moore in 10 Hen. 7 (1494-5), he was found to hold the manor of Newbold of Joan, prioress of Catesby[o]. In 23 Hen. 7 (1508), Jees Queney, prioress of "Catysbye," granted a lease of messuages and croft at Staverton to Thomas Horwood[p].

Dame Joys Bekeley, prioress of Catesby, was admitted a member of Corpus Christi Guild at Coventry in 2 Hen. 8[q] (1510). How long she presided I know not, but am inclined to appropriate to her the warm tribute paid to the prioress by the royal commissioners in the following report of their visitation to the vicar-general Cromwell.

But neither the exemplary conduct of the prioress and her nuns, nor the mediation of the commissioners, averted the impending fate of the convent. It was suppressed, with the lesser religious houses, by the statute of 27 Hen. 8 (1535-6), though the surrender is not enrolled in the Augmentation Office.

The annexed conventual SEAL was kindly furnished by John Caley, esq. from a deed in the Augmentation Office, dated 10 June, 11 Hen. 4 (1410). The Virgin is seated under a canopy nursing the infant Jesus; and under a trefoiled arch beneath, is a half-length priest holding a book. Round the area is this legend—SIGILL. COR. SCE. MARIE DE CATESBY AD CAUSAS. There are numerous references to public records and other documents relating to this convent in Nasmith's edition of Tanner's Notitia; but no cartulary is extant.

In the early ages it was far from unusual for the bodies of persons of rank to be buried in one place, and their hearts and viscera in another. A case in point may be noticed here, which is the more singular, as the motive is inexplicable; none of the family having been benefactors to, or in any way connected with this monastic foundation. William Manduit earl of Warwick, died in 1267 (52 Hen. 3), when his body was interred in Westminster abbey, and his heart in Catesby priory[s].

MARKET AND FAIR. In 31 Hen. 3 (1246-7), the prioress and nuns obtained a grant of a weekly market every Monday at their manor of Catesby[t]; and two years after, the additional privilege of an annual fair there on the eve, the day, and the morrow of St. Edmund the confessor[u]. Both have been discontinued for centuries.

In 28 Hen. 8 (1536-7), the king, in consideration of £400 and a moiety of the manor of Ricards Castle in the counties of Hereford and Salop, granted to John Onley, esq. and Elizabeth his wife, and the heirs of the said John for ever, the house, site, precincts, and circuit of the late monastery or house of nuns of "Catesby alias Shopys," with two water-mills, the church, bell-tower, and cemetery of the said monastery, and the advowson of the parish church of Catesby; together with all the demesne lands in the occupation of the monastery when dissolved, comprising 788 acres of pasture, 83 acres of meadow, and 161 acres of arable land in "Catesby alias Shopys, Over "Cattesbye, and Halyden," of the clear yearly value of £70. 18s. 2d. to hold by the service of the 10th part of a knight's fee[1]. It is remarkable that the name of Shopys never occurs before nor since, but it will be recollected that the prioress, in 3 Hen. 5, accounted for the yearly rent of shops; and in the enumeration of the lands in the above grant, is a small close of two acres and a half, called "Le Shopys."

The rectory and tithes of Catesby, Hellidon, &c. were subsequently acquired by Edward Onley, esq. son and heir of John, whose eldest son sir Edward Onley dying without issue, the family estates descended to his nephew and heir-at-law Edward Onley, esq. by whom Catesby was sold to John Parkhurst, esq.

John Parkhurst, esq. was son of sir Robert Parkhurst of Pirford in Surrey, by his 2nd wife Silena, daughter of sir Thomas Crewe of STEANE, and, prior to his purchase of Catesby, was described of Hinton near Brackley, where he probably resided through the favor of his maternal grandfather, to whom it belonged. On his decease in 1730, "the manor or mansion house commonly called Catesby-house," about 450 acres of land with all tithes issuing therefrom, and the advowson of the vicarage, descended to his grandson and heir John Parkhurst, esq. who was succeeded in 1765 by his second but eldest surviving son,

The Rev. John Parkhurst, A. M. the celebrated lexicographer. This learned and pious divine was born here in June 1728, and received the rudiments of education at Rugby school, from whence he removed to Clare hall, Cambridge, of which he was a fellow several years. He entered early into holy orders, but never took any preferment: the pecuniary necessity for exercising his profession ceasing on the death of his elder brother, he preferred dedicating his life to the studies becoming the clerical character, rather than to the discharge of its more active and responsible duties; and when the vicarage of Epsom in Surrey, of which he was patron, became vacant in 1785, instead of nominating himself, he disinterestedly bestowed it on a clergyman to whom he was personally unknown. He however generally officiated during his residence at Catesby, and for a considerable period acted in the capacity of curate to a friend without any remuneration. He commenced his literary career in 1753 with "A Serious and Friendly Address to the Rev. John Wesley in relation to a principal Doctrine maintained by him and his Assistants." 8vo. In 1762 he published "An Hebrew and English Lexicon, without Points; to which is added a methodical Hebrew Grammar, without Points, adapted to the use of Learners." 4to. In 1763 "A Thanksgiving Sermon," preached at Epsom. In 1769 "A Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament; to which is prefixed a plain and easy Greek Grammar." 4to. In 1773 he edited the late Mr. Julius Bate's "New and Literal Translation of the Pentateuch of Moses, and of the Historical Books of the Old Testament to the end of the 2nd Book of Kings, with notes critical and explanatory." 4to. And in 1787 published "The Divinity and Pre-existence of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, demonstrated from Scripture; in Answer to the first Section of Dr. Priestley's Introduction to the History of early Opinions concerning Jesus Christ; together with Strictures on some other parts of the Work, and a Postscript relating to a late Publication of Mr. Gilbert Wakefield." 8vo. The merits of his philological labours were fully appreciated by the classical world; the Hebrew Lexicon reached a second 4to edition in 1778, and the Greek in 1794, when he determined to render them more generally accessible by publishing them in 8vo. He sedulously applied himself to their revision and improvement; but the first sheet only of the Greek Lexicon had passed the press before his progress was arrested by death. "Fortunately, the task of filial virtue devolved on his daughter Mrs. Thomas, whose extensively cultivated mind enabled her to undertake the charge of completing her father's purpose; and this work was published in 1798." To the later editions are prefixed a portrait, with a brief memoir of the author. He was a warm, though not implicit disciple of the Hutchinsonian or Mosaic theory of the earth, as opposed to the Newtonian philosophy, and his exposition of the phrascology of the New Testament is strongly tinctured with his favourite system. The integrity of his principles was unquestioned; and his writings and conduct were equally marked by sincerity and an undeviating regard to truth. In person he was erect and active, but beneath the middle size; and though naturally of a weak and delicate constitution, and of studious and sedentary habits, his days, by rigid adherence to a temperate regimen, were extended nearly to "three score years and ten." He was buried at Epsom in Surrey, where a neat tablet has been placed to his memory, on which is inscribed, from the pen of his friend the Rev. William Jones of Nayland in Suffolk,

GLORY TO GOD ALONE.
Sacred to the Memory
of the Rev. JOHN PARKHURST, A. M.
Of this Parish, and descended from the Parkhursts of Catesby, in Northamptonshire.
His Life was distinguished
Not by any Honours in the Church,
But by deep and laborious Researches
Into the Treasures of Divine Learning;
The Fruits of which are preserved in two invaluable Lexicons
Wherein the original Text of the Old and New Testament is interpreted With extraordinary Light and Truth.
Reader! if thou art thankful to God that such a Man lived,
Pray for the Christian World,
That neither the Pride of false Learning,
Nor the Growth of Unbelief,
May so far prevail
As to render his pious Labours in any degree ineffectual.
He lived in Christian Charity;

OTHER ISSUE.

Catesby House occupies the site, but retains little of the characteristic features, of the former Priory. It is surrounded by a small walled park in a low sequestered valley sheltered by rising grounds. The north front forms three sides of a quadrangle; on the east side is a small chapel which has long served as a substitute for the parish church. The only vestige of the conventual church is at the upper end of the present brewhouse, where are two trefoiled pedimental arches, which may be presumed to have been the seats for the officiating priests on the south side of the choir, as a piscina is still remaining to the east of them in the same wall, but intercepted by a modern stone partition. The south front is irregular; the west has been transformed into a plain centre with two slightly projecting wings. Part of the monastic offices have been converted into stables. The house contains some good family portraits, which have suffered much from damp and neglect since its desertion by the family. Amongst others in the hall and adjoining rooms are sir Robert Parkhurst, the lord mayor, in his official robes and collar of S. S. John Parkhurst, esq. Ricarda Dormer his wife. A most curious portrait of Jane Dormer, duchess of Feria, in her widowhood, habited in a white dress enveloping her head and hair, leaving only her face visible. Over all, and descending behind her, is thrown a long black hood with loose strings. Her features are small and regular, her eyes dark, her lips finely formed and florid, and the general expression of her countenance melancholy and interesting. In her right hand she holds a closed mass or prayer book with one finger between the leaves, and from her left hand depends a rosary of black beads. At the dexter corner of the picture is inscribed "D. Jana "Dormer Feriæ Ducossa Vidua D. Gomesii Suares defigueria y Cordova Feriæ Ducis Ætatis suæ 35. A. D. 1572." At the sinister corner is an inexplicably marshalled atchievement partially defaced.—1. O. five trefoils slipped, 2, 1, 2, Az. qu. Duke of Feria. II. O. three bars G. ..... III. quarterly, 1 and 4. defaced; 2 and 3. Ar. lion rampant S. langued G. .... IV. quarterly, 1 and 4. Az. ten billets, 4, 3, 2, and 1, O. on a chief of the second a demi lion rampant issuant S. Dormer; 2 and 3. G. chevron Ar. between three fishes naiant O. on a chief dancette of the second, three martlets of the field, qu. Dorre alias Chobbs. V. 1. O. qu. a sword in pale V. .... 2. Ar. two bars and in chief three mullets S. .... 3. Ar. three chevronels G. .... 4. Ar. on bend G. three lozenges O. .... 5. quarterly, O. and G. a lion rampant S. .... 6. Az. chevron between three mullets O. 7. defaced. 8. Ar. on fess G. a lion rampant O. .... The whole is surmounted by a coronet and charged on an eagle displayed S. armed membered and crowned O. This lady was daughter of sir William Dormer and half sister to Robert 1st lord Dormer of Wing in Buckinghamshire. She was maid of honor to queen Mary, and married the count of Feria, a spanish nobleman, who came over with king Philip, and was afterwards created duke of Feria. Archdeacon Churton, in his life of Nowell, mentions a MS memoir of her by H. Clifford, enriched with some fine drawings, particularly a copy of the above portrait. On the staircase are old portraits of "John Wickliff, 1384;" "Martin Bucer, 1551;" and others. Nearly all the bed-rooms are hung with tapestry; in one of them are fine portraits of judge Dormer and his lady, and Ricarda Saltonstall countess of Halifax. The lock on the door of the cedar room, called the nun's lock, is of wrought iron, the size of the annexed representation. The figure which conceals the keyhole is removed by a secret spring, and from the cup in his left hand with a cockatrice or adder issuing out of it, may be presumed to personate St. John the apostle. In the attic story is a long low arched room, which still retains the name of the Dormitory.

The Village of Upper Catesby is between three and four miles from Daventry to the left of the Warwick road. Nether Catesby, nearly a mile beyond, is now reduced to the seat of the Parkhursts. In the time of Bridges[1] there were eight houses with about five and twenty inhabitants in Upper Catesby. By the census of 1801,

[1] Br. 1. p. 32.

Catesby contained 16 houses and 95 inhabitants; and by that of 1811 (exclusive of Newbold) 20 houses and 92 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £136. 11s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3892. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £185. 9s. 6d. at 3s. in the £. No wake is observed.

The Advowson was confirmed to the priory here by Hugh bishop of Lincoln, and ratified by the bull of pope Gregory in the fifth year of his pontificate[u]. The Monasticon erroneously ascribes this act to Gregory the 8th, who filled the papal chair only a few months, instead of the 9th pope of that name, who presided from 1226 to 1241, and was cotemparary with bishop Hugh Wells. The grant of the site and demesnes of the priory to Onley after the dissolution by Hen. 8, comprised the advowson of the parish church of Catesby, but no mention was made of the impropriate rectory or tithes. In 3 Edw. 6 (1549), Richard Felde and Ralph Woodward obtained a grant in fee (int. al.) of the impropriate rectory of Over Catesby, and also of the advowson of the vicarage[x], which must therefore have been surrendered again to the crown by the first grantee, or its alienation have been overlooked. Peter Temple levied a fine of the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Over Catesby in 1 and 2 Phil. and Mary[y] (1554-5). In 24 Eliz. (1582), Edward Onley, esq. the lord of the manor, died seised of them[z]; and from him the advowson of the vicarage and the tithes of the manorial estate have attended the manor down to J. G. Parkhurst, esq.

The Rectory is valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[a], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[b], at 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting an annual pension of half a mark to the priory of "Bromesfeld" (Bromfield in Shropshire). How this pension originated, or when it ceased, is equally unknown; it is not noticed in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), when the profits of the rectory of Over Catesby were rated at only 26s. 8d. and the tithes of Newbold at £6[c], making a total of £7. 6s. 8d. per ann. In the minister's accounts at the dissolution, the rectory, with tithes in Helliden and Newbold, was returned at £17. 6s. 8d. per ann.

The impropriate tithes of Catesby and Newbold are now vested in the respective proprietors of the freeholds.

The Vicarage is in the deanry of Daventry, and was 'ordained in the time of Hugh Wells bishop of Lincoln, 'who was consecrated in 1209[d].' In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[e], and 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[b], it is valued at 7 marks (£4. 13s. 4d.) per ann.; and in the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (36 Hen. 8), at £10 per ann. in tithes and oblations, but by virtue of a composition with the prioress and convent, the vicar received only £8, as appears from the same survey under the head of the annual and perpetual pensions paid by the priory[e]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified "Catesby cum Nobold" to be a vicarage worth £16 per ann. in the patronage of ..... Onley, esq.; that Mr. Isaac Perkins was the incumbent; that it was a mile distant from the next church; and that they humbly conceived it convenient to have an augmentation[f].

The living is now a Donative, to which the patron appoints without episcopal institution. There is neither glebe nor residence, and no other income than an annual stipend of £20, paid out of the Parkhurst estate.

By his will dated 14 Jan. 1514-15, under the names of John Clerke alias John Prustelai or Bustelai, he directed his body to be buried in the chancel of the parish church of Catesby, and bequeathed £5 to a priest to celebrate masses for his soul for one year, sometimes in the parish church and sometimes in the priory of Catesby[g].

William Henne or Heine. By his will dated 19 Sept. 1519, he directed his body to be buried in the monastery of our blessed Lady of Catysby at the will of the prioress, and bequeathed his dun horse for his mortuary, to "moder chyrche xii d." and to the three orders of Freres, in Northampton, every one of them xl d. appointing the prioress of Catesby and her successors his "executress[g]."

Sir Thomas Ferneyghalph, chaplain, 22 Nov. 1519, probably the same person as Thomas Farnell, who was vicar at the ecclesiastical survey of 1535[c].

Sir John Henn, priest, presented by Henry Smyth, rector of Braunston, and William Smyth, rector of Eversdon (Everdon), by grant p. h. v. from the prioress and convent of Catesby, and instituted 2 Mar. 1538-9.

Two institutions only to this vicarage occur in the episcopal registers of Peterborough, and those after an hiatus of nearly a century

Isaac Perkins, A. B. instituted 30 Oct. 1624, on the presentation of sir Edward Onley; and another

Isaac Perkins, A. B. or perhaps the same, re-instituted, 16 Aug. 1629, on the presentation of the king by lapse. He continued vicar at the visitation of the parliamentary commissioners in 1655[h].

Uriel Harwood, A. M. of Priors Hardwick in Warwickshire, is the present curate or officiating minister.

The Register does not commence till 1705.

The Church was dedicated to the holy Virgin. 'Upon the destruction of the monastery the church was in 'part demolished, and with the parsonage house hath been rendered useless for nearly two hundred years. It was 'situate in Upper Catesby: some remains of the tower, with four buttresses and a small western window, and the

5. On a large grey marble slab are half-sized figures of sir Edmund Knightley and his wife Ursula Vere. The knight, though a member of the legal profession and a sergeant at law, is in conformity with the fashion of the times represented in a suit of plate armour. The collar and skirts are of mail. The pass guards and shoulder pieces are of a singular form, somewhat resembling an open tippet. The elbow gussets, genouailles, greaves, and all the seams of the armour, are ornamented. The sollarets are jointed and very broad at the toes. A dagger is at his right side, and a long sword at his left, but he has no gauntlets. His hair is flowing, and his crested helmet supports his head. The lady is in a gown with large falling capes and short pendant sleeves, to which are attached long ones, full, banded, and terminating in ruffles. The body is gathered up, and falls in graceful drapery. Her feet are folded up in her robe. Her hair is parted on the forehead and braided, and her head dress, which falls behind to the shoulders, adopts the contour of the head, and is edged in front with a scalloped border. At the transverse corners of the slab are Knightley and Vere, and Knightley impaling Vere.

On a fillet of brass round the slab:

NEWBOLD

Occupies the western side of Catesby parish, and is the entire property of George Lucy, esq. M. P. of Charlecote in Warwickshire. It contains about 680 acres of old inclosure nearly environed by a rivulet. The soil is a rich deep loam, and nearly the whole is meadow and pasture.

MANOR. The first specific notice of Newbold occurs in the reign of Henry 3rd [a], and has been anticipated in the manorial history of Catesby (p. 276). On the forfeiture incurred by William de Esseby, the intermediate seignory of this estate under the honor of Peverel, may be presumed to have passed by the grant of Thomas de Thoulouse to the prioress of Catesby, of whom, and her successors, this manor was found by various inquisitions to have been held in right of the priory [b]. In 9 Edw. 2 (1315-16), the then prioress was certified to be lady of "Newbold [c]," but this return could have reference only to the capital manor, the mesne manor having been long vested in the family of More.

In 48 Hen. 3 (1263-4), a writ of assize was issued to enquire if the prioress of Catesby had unjustly disseised Stephen de la More of his common of pasture in Catesby belonging to his free tenements of Newbold; but the plaintiff afterwards appeared in court and withdrew his plea [d]. "One of his successors, Thomas de la More, in the 'aid that was collected for making the King's eldest son a Knight, in the twentieth year of Edward III. accounted 'for half a Knight's fee in Catesby as held of the honour of Peverel' the paramount fee. Though his descendants continued in possession, no further record of them can be retrieved till the alienation of the property by John More, esq. who sold the manor of Newbold, held of Joan prioress of Catesby, to Edmund Newnham, gent. in fee, subject to an annual payment of £9. 16s. to his heirs and assigns, which by another deed in 20 Edw. 4 (1480), he settled on his son George More and his wife Margaret, daughter of George Newport, esq. whose son John, aged 10 years, was found cousin (grandson) and heir, on the inquisition after the death of the above John More in 10 Hen. 7 (1494-5) [e].

Sir Thomas Newnham, great grandson of Edmund, and Mary his wife, conveyed this manor and Weston sub Wetheley in Warwickshire, by indenture and fine in 1 and 2 Phil. and Mar. (1554), to the king and queen; by whom they were granted in moieties, three years afterwards, to sir Edward Saunders, lord chief justice of the king's bench, and Francis Morgan, esq. sergeant at law (afterwards one of the puisne justices of the same court), in fee [g].

Of the family of Morgan, one of the grantees, a pedigree has been already introduced under HEYFORD. Sir Edward Saunders was also previously connected with the county, being a junior branch of Saunders of HARRINGTON. The subjoined pedigree exhibits the point of connection, and shews the union of his heiress with Thomas Morgan, esq. son and heir of the co-grantee, by which means the entirety of Newbold vested in him, and descended by the same title as Heyford to the trustees under the will of William 3rd marquis of Powis.

On the sale of the Powis estate in 1758, the manor and estate of Newbold was purchased by Hitch Young, of Rochampton in Surrey, esq. M. P. for Steyning, who died the next year, leaving an only sister and heiress Mary, then widow of Bartholomew Clarke, of Hardingston, esq. whose only daughter and heiress Mary, was first wife of Jacob viscount Folkestone, by whom she had William first earl of Radnor, the late hon. Edward Bouverie, of Delapré, M. P. for Northampton, and several other children.

Jacob 2nd and present earl of Radnor, sold Newbold in 1801 to Mr. King, of Banbury; of whom it was purchased by Mr. Higgins, of Alveston in Warwickshire; who in 1812 conveyed it to the late reverend John Lucy, of Charlecote in the same county, father of George Lucy, esq. CHARWELTON.

In domesday "Cerweltone," and "Celvertone," obviously owes its name to the river Charwell, which rises within its precincts. The lordship is all old inclosure, and contains about 2260 acres, of which about 1320 acres belong to sir Charles Knightley, of Fawsley, bart. lord of the manor; about 240 acres to the children of the late Mr. John Clark, of Charwell-house; about 230 acres to Mr. George Hitchcock, sen. of Horley in Oxfordshire; about 160 acres (late the property of the rev. Thomas Knightley, deceased,) to Mr. Thomas Walton; and about 140 acres to the trustees under the celebrated will of the late Peter Thelluson, esq. It is bounded on the north by Catesby and a small part of Badby; north-east by Fawsley; east by Preston Capes; south by Woodford and Hinton; south-west by Byfield; west by Priors Marston in Warwickshire; and north-west by Hellidon.

The soil is in general a deep dark loam, with a few hundred acres of light red land on the hills, the only arable land in the lordship. Charwelton is noticed by Morton for its "excellent pasturage[h]," and by a more modern author for its "old pasture land, with anthills and wild thyme, stocked with sheep similar to the old Leicester, and fatting bullocks[i]." Considerable dairies are also kept here, and the inclosures are unusually large. The following scarce plants are found here. Scirpus Sylvaticus, wood Club-grass. Dipsacus pilosus, small Teasel or Shepherd's Rod. Campanula latifolia, broad-leaved Bell-flower. Nymphæa alba, white Water Lily. Senecio tenuifolius, Hoary Groundsell. Rubus corylifolius, Hazle-leaved Bramble. Equisetum fluviatile, river Horsetail. There are no quarries for building, but a fine bed of gravel near the village.

Leland says, "Cherwell river riseth out of a Well or a little Poole in Cherwelton village, about 7 miles above "Banbury, by North North East, and boyleth so fast out from the Head that straight it maketh a Streamlett[k]," and Morton, "the Cherwell Head is a little Spring in the Ground called Cherwell Field, lying North West at no "great distance from a Town, which from the Spring has the Name of Cherwelton. It has a small but constant "supply from Rydon Hill in Hellidon Lordship; and before it leaves this County becomes a goodly Rivulet[l]." Neither of them were aware of or have noticed the singular circumstance of its real source being a spring or well in the cellar of Charwell-house, a grange about a mile north-west of the village. It emerges from its subterranean bed at the corner of the farm-yard, where it forms a head, and from thence crosses the entrance to the village from the Daventry road, under an ancient stone horse bridge; and after intersecting this lordship, enters Woodford and passes on to Chacomb, from which place to Banbury, a distance of about three miles, it divides this county from Oxfordshire, and then pursues its course to the city of Oxford, where it unites with the Isis.

The first mill on this river is in this lordship, near Woodford parish.

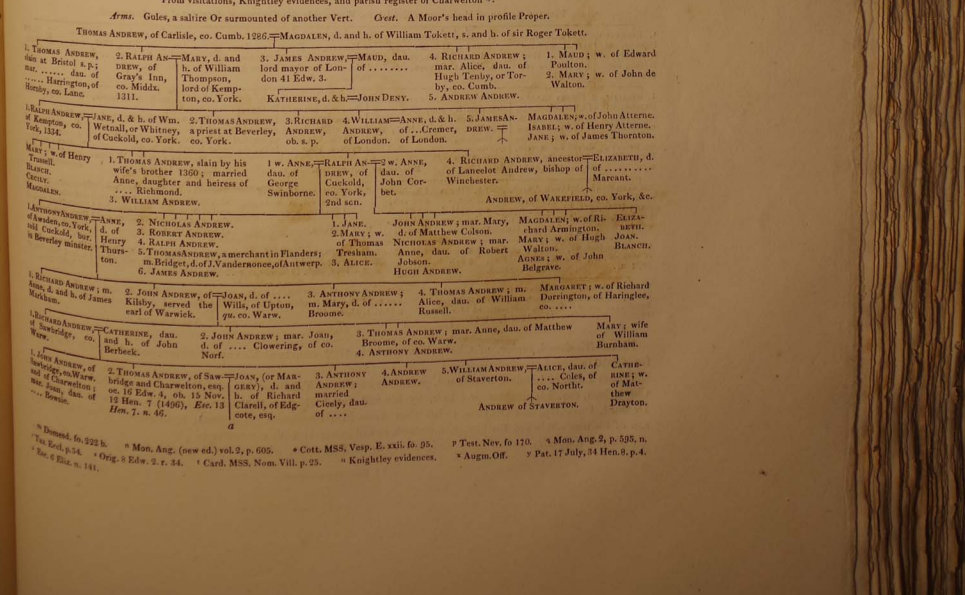
MANORIAL HISTORY. THORNEY MANOR. A portion of this lordship was given to the great saxon abbey of Thorney in Cambridgeshire subsequent to the charter of king Edgar in 973, and prior to the domesday survey, when Baldwin held of that monastery half a hide in "Cerweltone." The arable land was one carucate, half of which was in demesne, and a villein with a borderer had the other half. The whole had been heretofore rated at 12d. yearly, but was then quintupled in value[m]. The grant was recited in the bull of privilege from pope Alexander in 1162 (8 Hen. 2)[n]; and in the hydarium of the same reign the possessions of the abbey here were returned at four small virgates, formerly written half a hide[o]. In that part of the Testa de Nevill which may be dated between 31 and 40 Hen. 3, the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented, that the abbot of Thorney had four small virgates here, for which he owed suit to the hundred court, and paid 4s. yearly rent to the king[p]. Among the good works of abbot William de Jakel, or Yakesley, who presided from 1261 to 1293, it is recorded in the Thorney register that he built a hall, grange, and ox-houses at "Charwalton," and erected there a new chapel from the ground, of decent workmanship, dedicated to St. Botolph[q]. In the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) the temporalities of the abbey in "Charwelton" were rated at £2. 13s. per ann. arising from lands, rents, meadow, mill, and court, and 5s. from fruits of the earth, flocks, and cattle[r]. The abbot of Thorney, in 8 Edw. 2 (1314), recovered seisin in the king's court at Northampton against Thomas abbot of Bittlesden and others, of common of pasture in "Charwelton," which belonged to his free tenants in that vill[s]; and in the following year the abbot of Thorney was certified to be lord of Charwelton[t]. Abbot Robert [Blyth] and the convent of Thorney, by indenture dated 1 Feb. 28 Hen. 8 (1536-7), reciting a lease for 99 years from Richard (Holbech) the late abbot, to Thomas Andrew, esq. deceased, demised their manor of Charwelton to his son Thomas Andrew, esq. for a second term of 99 years, to commence on the determination of the first, at a yearly rent of 10 marks (£6. 13s. 4d.); the lessee to repair the manor (house), the great barn, and the chapel of St. Botolph, as they all then stood; and for that purpose to be allowed to fell timber; with a covenant for renewal to the heirs of the lessee for ever, on certain conditions and payment of a certain fine[u]. The farm of the manor was returned at the above sum in the minister's accompts on the dissolution 32 Hen. 8[x]; and within two years after the manor was (int. al.) granted in fee to

Richard Andrew[y], brother, I presume, to the lessee; or, according to a recital in a decree of chancery 19 Jac. 1 (1621), to sir Thomas Andrew[z], son and heir of the lessee. If Richard were the grantee, his nephew sir Thomas succeeded as heir male, and in Feb. 1563-4, died seised of Thorney manor in Charwelton, Bittlesden manor in Charwelton, lands in Charwelton of the honor of Berkhampsted, and the advowson of the rectory late belonging to the priory of St. Oswald; also of the manors of Guilsborough and Byfield, and impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Preston Capes, &c.[a]

The Charwelton estates descended unimpaired to his grandson sir Eusebius Andrew, who mortgaged and alienated various parcels. Edward Andrew, esq. his son and heir, in 1630 sold his reversionary interest in the manor house and lands of Thorney, containing about 400 acres, subject to a lease for 99 years from his father's trustees, to



Frances Andrew, one of his sisters, from whom, by mesne conveyances, the fee simple in 1648 became vested in

Henry Benson, esq. who was already in possession, as lessee under the will of his uncle George Benson, of London, esq.[b]

Moreton Fee *. Honor of Berkhampsted †. At the domesday survey Ralph held of the earl of Moreton two hides and four parts of half a hide in "Cerveltone." The arable land was six carucates; two of which were in demesne with one servant, and three in tenure of seven villeins, and the remaining one being unaccounted for was probably waste. There was a mill worth 2s. yearly. The whole had been rated at 6s. but was then raised to 60s. yearly [b].

In the hydarium of Hen. 2 this estate was returned at two hides and four small virgates of the fee of Berkhampsted [c]. The jurors of Fawsley hundred in the reign of Hen. 3 certified Richard earl (of Cornwall) to have 23 virgates here [d]; and in the inquisition on the death of his son Edmund earl of Cornwall in 28 Edw. 1 (1299), the lands here were included in the barony of Chenduit, parcel of the honor of Berkhampsted [e]. It is still subject to the leet of that honor.

Chenduit or Bittlesden Manor. Ralph, the domesday mesne lord, was not improbably ancestor of the family of Chenduit, whose name forms the common adjunct to Middleton, the head of the barony.

The abbey of Bittlesden in Buckinghamshire was founded by Ernald de Bosco in 1147 (12 Steph.); and prior to 1189 (1 Ric.), in which year the king confirmed the grant, William de Chenduit bestowed on the abbey all his demesne with the court, and three virgates and a half held by Hamond and others in Charwelton [f]. Lucia de Cokefield, with the consent of Adam, her son, gave to this abbey all the land of her fee and inheritance in Charwelton, as well that land which the monks before held, as that which she held of the fee of Ralph Chenduit, and which she recovered against him by duel in the king's court at Westminster, rendering to her and her heirs yearly 12 marks for all services except the relief due for half a fee of the small fees of Moreton [g]. A fine was levied in 3 Joh. (1202), between the abbot Adam and the convent of Bittlesden, and Ralph de Chenduit, who was called by Lucia and Adam de Cokefield to warrant lands in Charwelton; when the abbot released him from the warranty, and he in return granted to the abbey all his lands in Preston (Capes), on payment of 5 marks yearly and the service of half a fee of the small fees of Moreton [h]. Agnes, daughter of Remer in 16 Hen. 3 (1231-2), levied a fine of four acres of land and pasture for 100 sheep, a plough team of oxen, a palfrey, two pack-horses, four cows, a bull, twelve swine, and a boar, with pertinences in Charwelton, to the abbot of Bittlesden [i]. It was found by inquisition ad quod damnum in 52 Hen. 3 (1267-8), that no injury would arise to the king from these grants, as he had only a contingent interest on the deaths of the king of Almaine (earl of Cornwall), Stephen de Chenduit, or Adam de Cokefield [k]; and in the account of knights' fees belonging to the manor of Middleton, taken soon after, the abbot of Bittlesden was certified to hold one fee in Charwelton [l]. In 1270 (54 Hen. 3) Adam the Cokefield, in consideration of the abbot and convent releasing him from a yearly payment of £10 for the manor of Feltwell in Norfolk, released them from the reserved rent of 12 marks out of the manor of Charwelton [m]. The abbey lands in Charwelton were valued at £9 yearly, as appears from the hundred roll of 4 Edw. 1 (1275), under the head of the honor of Berkhampsted [n]; and the same year Edmund earl of Cornwall quit-claimed to the abbot and convent suit at his court of Berkhampsted for their lands and tenements of his fee in this village [m].

At the taxation of 1291 (20 Edw. 1) the abbey possessions here amounted to £6. 0s. 4d. per ann. in lands, rents, and mill, and £1. 5s. per ann. in fruits of the earth, flocks, and cattle [o]. Abbot William and the convent of

Bittlesden in 3 Edw. 4 (1483) demised their manor of Charwelton, with pertinencies in Great and Little Charwelton, at a yearly rent of £16, to

Thomas Andrew, junior, esq in fee tail[p], one of whose successors obtained a grant of it in fee after the dissolution; and of which family, subsequent to the death of sir Euseby, it was purchased by

William Adams, esq. of WELTON. His grandson William Adams, of Charwelton, esq. settled "the manor or reputed manor and lordship called Biddlesden manor alias Little Charwelton," with the mansion-house and lands, and the advowson of the rectory, on the marriage of his son the rev. William Adams in 1700[p]. The advowson was alienated within a few years, but the manorial estate was retained till the extinction of the direct male line by the death of the rev. Fitzherbert Adams in April 1805, when it was sold by his widow and the trustees under his will, in February following, to the present sir Charles Knightley, bart. then described Charles Knightley, of Preston Capes, esq.[p]

MORETON FEE*. BARONY OF KEYNES†. William (ancestor of Keynes) held of the earl of Moreton half a hide in "Celvertone," formerly the freehold of Uluric. Four villeins and two bordars had the arable land, which consisted of one carucate. It had been rated at 10s. yearly, but was then doubled in value[q]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 Hugh de Chak'm (Keynes) was returned to have half a hide in "Charwelton" of the fee of the earl of Leicester[r]. In the Testa de Nevill about 20 Hen. 3 (1235), the heirs of Richard de Brinton accounted for two parts of a fee in Brington, and the third part in "Charewelton" of the barony of Richard de Keynes of the small fees of Moreton[s]; and in another part of the same record the jurors of Fawsley hundred presented that there were five virgates in Charwelton of the fee of Richard de Kaynes[t].

GRENTEMAISNIL FEE‡. Walter held of Hugh Grentesmaisnil one virgate in "Cerveltone." The arable land was half a carucate. It had been the freehold of Alwin, and was then and still rated at 5s. yearly[u]. In the hydarium of Hen. 2 four small virgates were returned to be of the fee of the earl of Leicester[r]. To the two last domesday parcels may probably be referred the original estates of Knightley, Andrew, and Knight, which claimed no manorial privileges; though it must be confessed that the tenures under the honor of Berkhampsted, instead of the honor of Leicester, militate against the supposition, unless the paramouncy be presumed to have been transferred from the one honor to the other.

The Knightleys of FAWSLEY had an interest here as early as the beginning of Edw. 4[p]; and in 26 Hen. 8 (1534), sir Richard Knightley died seised of 300 acres of pasture in Charwelton, held of the king as of his principality* (of Wales, of which the honor of Berkhampsted is parcel).

Thomas Andrew, sen. esq. died in 12 Hen. 7 (1496) seised of 100 acres of land, 40 acres of meadow, 40 acres of pasture, and an acre of wood, in Great and Little Charwelton, held of Arthur prince of Wales as of his honor of Berkhampsted [y].

Richard Hely, of Byfield, in 20 Hen. 7 (1505), released and quit-claimed to Thomas Knightley, clerk, William Knyght, and Nicholas Knyght, three messuages, 200 acres of land, 100 acres of meadow, and 40 acres of pasture, in Great and Little Charwelton, which belonged to John Knight in right of Agnes his wife, mother of the said Richard [z]. Thomas Knight died 13 Oct. 8 Hen. 8 (1516), seised of three messuages, eight virgates of land, three acres of meadow, and 26 acres of pasture in this lordship, held of the king as of his principality, and John was brother and heir, aged 38 years [a]. The Knights came from Shropshire, and bore for their arms, Ar. three bendlets G. on a canton of the 2nd a spur leathered, the rowel downward O. Crest: a spur leathered, rowel upward O. between a pair of wings G. They entered their pedigree in the visitation of 1618, at which time they quartered five coats, of which the last was per pale bendy G. and Ar. counterchanged for Hely.

Sir Eusebius Andrew, by deed 13 Dec. 1616, for £3365, sold the capital messuage then or late in possession of John Knight, with lands and meadow in Charwelton, to John Ball, of HELLIDON, gent.[c]; on whose death in 1618 (16 Jac.) they were found to be held of Charles prince of Wales as of his honor of Berkhampsted [b]. The principal part of this estate, with a respectable residence, passed subsequently to the Knightleys of Byfield and Charwelton, who will be further noticed under the advowson, and of whom a pedigree is subjoined, partly as a branch of the FAWSLEY family, and partly from the singular circumstance of six generations having been uninterruptedly rectors of one or both of those parishes.

CREWE ESTATE OR MANOR. Sir Eusebius Andrew, by deed dated 24 July 1619, sold Charwell field and other lands, containing about 230 acres, in Charwelton, to Thomas Crewe, of STEANE, esq. (afterwards knighted), and John Crewe, esq. (afterwards lord Crewe), his son and heir apparent; and in 1695 Thomas second lord Crewe conveyed this estate to

John Parkhurst, of CATESBY, esq. who in 1699 settled it (int. al.), under the description of the manor of Charwelton, on his eldest son NATHANIEL PARKHURST, esq. in marriage with Althamia Smith; of whose son and heir John Parkhurst, jun, esq.—his grandfather being still alive—it was purchased in 1724 by

Theophilus Rogers, of Northampton, gent. By his will, dated in 1729, he devised all his estates in trust for his mother Elizabeth Rogers for life, remainder to his brother Robert Rogers, in tail male; and on the decease of Robert without issue in 1771, a suit in chancery was instituted against Thomas Coles, who claimed as devisee under his will. In March 1780 a decree was made in favor of Joseph Picknell Rogers, in whom the remainder under the will of Theophilus was then vested. Dying without issue male, his brother Robert Rogers succeeded him, by whose will the estates passed to the four children of his niece Mary Ann Carpenter, three of whom sold their shares to the late Mr. John Clarke, of Charwell house, and the fourth share has been since purchased by sir Charles Knightley, bart.[z]

THE THORNEY MANOR HOUSE stood at the north extremity of the village, and, though reduced to a farm-house, retains vestiges of its former consequence in the out-offices and well-stored fish-ponds.

THE BITTLESDEN MANOR HOUSE is west of the church, and was partly rebuilt by the Adams family. The old wainscoting, with grotesque figures in the panels, is preserved in the dining-room. Over the chimney is carved Andrew impaling Knightley, and on the frieze above, Andrew and three quarterings impaling Cotton and three quarterings.

THE VILLAGE was anciently divided into Great Charwelton or Town Charwelton, and Church Charwelton or Little Charwelton, but the latter is now reduced to the manor house. John Rous, in his "Historia Regum Anglice," written in the reign of Henry the seventh, laments the depopulation of Church Charwelton, which he says was once the resort of persons travelling from Warwick and other places towards London, who are obliged to go through Lower Charwelton, which is also in like danger of being destroyed by inclosure.

The present village, or Town Charwelton, is situated about four miles from Daventry on the turnpike road to Banbury. In the time of Bridges it consisted of 'thirty houses, including the innships, which are three; 'Mr. Adams's house by the church [Biddlesden manor house], the mill, and Rushall's house on the hill'[d]. By the census of 1801 it contained 35 houses and 185 inhabitants; and by that of 1811, 40 houses and 181 inhabitants. The annual quota of land-tax for this parish is £236. 11s. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property-tax of 10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £3575. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, raised £352. 5s. at 5s. in the £. The wake followed Trinity Sunday, but is not now observed.

The Northamptonshire and Warwickshire Association for the prosecution of felons, was instituted here in 1816.

The Advowson was given by Adeliza, wife (widow) of Ralph de Cheynduit, and Simon and Hugh her sons, to the priory of St. Oswald, of Nostell in Yorkshire, as recited in the confirmation charter of Henry 1st[e]. The Chenduits subsequently gave their lands here to the monks of Bittlesden, who in consequence set up a claim to the patronage of the church, but in 6 Hen. 3 (1221-2) Maurice abbot of Bittlesden quit-claimed by fine all right to the advowson, to John prior of St. Oswald for four marks of silver[f]; and in 19 Hen. 3 (1234-5) Ralph de Chenduit by fine released the advowsons of King's Langley in Hertfordshire, Chedington in Buckinghamshire, and Charwelton, to the said prior and his successors[f]. Thomas Andrew, esq. presented, in 1530, by demise from the prior and convent, and on the dissolution appears to have obtained a grant of the advowson from the crown, as it continued in his posterity till after the decease of sir Euseby Andrew[g], when it was sold, I apprehend, with the Bittlesden manor, to William Adams, esq. of Welton. In 1700 it is included in the marriage settlement of the rector, the rev. W. Adams, with Mary Smith; but in 1731 Giles Knightley, esq. (late of Hinton), presented, and by will dated 15 Jan. 1742-3[h], devised the advowson to Giles Knightley (afterwards rector), second son of his brother-in-law the rev. Richard Knightley, formerly of Offchurch in Warwickshire, and then rector of this parish. Of the devisees in trust under the will of the rev. Thomas Knightley, the late rector, it was purchased in 1806 by the present sir Charles Knightley, bart. by the description of Charles Knightley, of Preston Capes, esq.; who in 1808 conveyed it to the rector, the rev. John Lamb, D.D. and re-purchased it of him in 1821[h].

The Rectory is in the deanry of Daventry. In the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3[i]), and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1[k]), it was valued at 13 marks (£8. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting a pension of one mark (13s. 4d.) per ann. to the prior of St. Oswald; which pension, Thomas, parson of Charwelton, being impleaded in 19 Edw. 2 (1325-6), acknowledged to be payable out of his church[l]. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8) the farm of the rectory was returned at £21. 6s. 8d. per ann. including 53s. 4d. for glebe land and pasture, and deducting the pension of 13s. 4d. to the prior of St. Oswald, and 10s. 7d. for sinodals and procurations to the archdeacon of Northampton[m]. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a parsonage worth £120 per ann. in the gift of William Adams, esq. and that Mr. B[laze] Adams was incumbent[n]. The pension to the prior of St. Oswald continued in the crown till 1811, when the rev. Dr. Lamb purchased it for £13. 17s. 6d. The rectory now consists of 58 a. 3 r. 1 p. of glebe land, and the tithes of the whole parish. There is no parsonage house.

He was author of a sermon preached at St. Paul's cross, London, 21 June 1629, and dedicated to Richard Knightly, esq. by Richard Farmer, sometime of Pembroke hall, Camb. and now parson of Charwelton, 4to, 1629[p].

He was rector of Ashton le Walls from 1673 to 1688, when he resigned for the rectory of Byfield, which, with one of the prebends of Durham, he continued to hold with this benefice; and dying 17 Sept. 1695, aged 59, was buried at Byfield. His successor here was

Richard Adams, of Magdalen coll. Oxf. afterwards D.D.; presented by his elder brother William Adams, esq. On whose resignation the same patron presented his eldest son

William Adams, of Lincoln coll. Oxf. A. M. who was inst. 11 Aug. 1697, and retained it till his death in Sept. 1731, when

Richard Knightley, of Christ Ch. coll. Oxf. A. M. was inst. on the 21st of the same month, on the presentation of his brother-in-law Giles Knightley, esq. He obtained the rectory of Byfield in 1763, and resigned this benefice in favor of his son

Giles Knightley, A. B. who was inst. 30 June 1763, on his own presentation. He held also the vicarage of Exhall near Coventry, and dying at Offchurch in Warwickshire July 1804, aged 72 years, was succeeded by his son

Thomas Knightley, of Merton coll. Oxf. LL.B. vicar of Exhall and of Offchurch in Warwickshire, who presented himself, and was inst. 26 Sept. 1804. He survived only till May following, when the trustees of his will presented

John Lamb, of Queen's coll. Oxford, D. D. vicar of Banbury in Oxfordshire, who was inst. 15 Nov. 1805, and will be further noticed as rector of Chipping Warden.

The Registers do not now commence till 1697, but there are extracts out of the earlier ones, from 1563 to 1699, in Taylor's collections in the British Museum [s].

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands a short distance west of the Bittlesden manor house, nearly a mile south of the village, and consists of a tower containing four bells, nave, north aisle and chapel, south aisle and porch, and chancel. Though not of very high antiquity, it is far from being a substantial edifice, except the chancel, which is comparatively modern, and of better masonry. Most of the windows are square-headed, having dripstones with horizontal returns. The south porch has a plain groined roof, over which is a small room, now disused, the entrance to which is in the south aisle. The tower is 14 ft. 5 in. long, by 11 ft. 1 in. wide; the nave 41 ft. by 14 ft. 5 in.; the north aisle 37 ft. by 12 ft. 8 in.; the north chapel 14 ft. 6 in. by 12 ft.; the south aisle 41 ft. by 12 ft. 3 in.; and the chancel 24 ft. 3 in. by 15 ft. 6 in. The interior is indifferently paved, and some of the old horizontal seats are still retained. At the west end of the nave, between the north and south entrances, is an elegant font (of which an etching is given), elevated on two steps, with a kneeling-stone. The slender square shaft is richly foliated, and on the faces of the octagonal basin are the emblems of the trinity, a rose, and other ornaments. The nave is divided from the north aisle by three lofty pointed arches supported by fluted piers, the mouldings running from the apex to the basement; and from the south aisle by the same number of arches, but lower and narrower, springing from octangular pillars with plain capitals. The chancel is entered through an open arch.

North Aisle. I. On the west wall is a large lofty monument of Riegate stone, erected by Thomas Andrew, esq. in 1590, to the memory of his two wives, and originally placed in the north chapel. In the centre compartment he is represented in armour, with a ruff, kneeling before a covered altar, on which his helmit and gauntlets are placed: behind him are his two wives in the same posture, and their twelve children in varied attitudes; the whole group gradually receding in size. On a square tablet beneath is inscribed:

THO. ANDRUE ESQUIER. HIS TWOE WIVES

12 JANUARY 1567 & MARI DAUGTER OF GRE-

On each side of the tablet is the crest of Andrew in a circle, and on a shield below, 1. Andrew; 2. (Ar.) a chevron between three crosses (G.) Tokett; 3. (S.) a fret (Ar.) on a chief (O.) three escallop shells (of the field), Thompson; 4. (S.) on a chief (O.) three mascles (of the field), Berbeck; 5. The memory of the just shall be blessed but the name of the wicked shall rotte. Prov. 10. 7.

In the centre above is Andrew, with helmet, crest, and motto, "Le jour veindra;" on the dexter side Andrew, impaling (S.) a chevron between three griffins' heads erased (Ar.), Cotton; and on the sinister side, Andrew, impaling (G.) a fess, and in chief three piles wavy (Ar.), Isham.

At the east end of the aisle are three fine brasses for the Andrew family.

5. The first in chronological order commemorates a Thomas Andrew, and is dated 1400; but from the costume of the figures, the absence of any contemporary individual of that baptismal name, and the arms being differenced with the mark of cadency denoting a second son, there can exist little doubt of its having been prepared in the life-time of Thomas Andrew, who married the heiress of Clarell, and that the blank in the inscription after the century was left for the insertion of the year of his death, but through the neglect or forgetfulness of his successor was never filled up. The slab is of grey marble, about 9 ft. 6 in. long, by 3 ft. 9 in. wide. Round the verge is the following mutilated inscription, the sinister side being destroyed: at the corners were the emblems of the four evangelists, but three only are remaining:

Hic jacent Thomas Andrewe, Spectator..... anno d'ni mill'imo CCCC.... quor' a'i'abus Deus cui p'prius' est semper misereri parcere p'piciatur. Amen.

The figures are about 3½ ft. in height. He is habited in a close merchant's gown, with stand-up cape, bordered and faced with ermine; a purse or scrip, and rosary, are suspended from his girdle; at his feet are a dog and a lamb. His lady is in a low-trained gown, with ermine cape, tight mitten sleeves, and the drapery, which is bordered with ermine, drawn up under her left arm. Her head-dress consists of a round ermine crown behind, turned up in front, and falling lappets. Above their heads is a rich embattled canopy, with pediments and finials, supported by two ornamented columns; at the base of which is the following inscription, arranged in two lines, on a narrow canopy, under which their five sons with scrips, and three daughters, are placed; and Andrew, differenced by a crescent, in the centre:

En Thome oaan Andrewe hec co'inet eaaan de terra facta p'timus in terra' rebacta civib'a a'c'or' me iungat rex angelor' Margeria concoro eternitur sub isto coaao a'iam est linquens deo sibi trino ⁊ uno mi-gra'ea i' spe recum in ct'nu' gaudere.

6. The second is about 7 ft. long, by 3½ ft. wide, and appears to have been placed by Thomas Andrew, son of the above, in memory of his first wife Emma Knightley. At the dexter chief and sinister base of the border are Andrew differenced by a label over a crescent, and at the sinister chief and dexter base, the same impaling Knightley; and round it is inscribed:

Sub isto lapide marmoreo iacet Emma Andrewe uxor Thome Andrewe generosi una filiar' Ricardi Knyghtley armig'i que obiit undecimo die me'a Aprilis anno d'ni mill'mo CCCC nonagesimo cuj' a'i'e p'pi-cietur deus amen.

The size of the figures is about 3 ft. He is represented in a suit of tournament armour, with ornamented pouldrons, elbow gussets, and genouailles; at his right side is a dagger, and at his left a long sword; his head rests on his tilting helmet, and his feet are supported by two dogs. His lady is an exact counterpart of the one last described, both in dress and attitude. Beneath him are four sons; beneath her, seven daughters; and over the two groups a shallow canopy, on the top of which is inscribed in two lines:

Hanc homo et petram precib'o precor aspice oacris p' tate' meam penia redpamur ab atris principo celestio prece factus catholicor' tritis nos tcatis agnos coniunge polor' amen.

In the centre, over the heads of the two principal figures, Andrew differenced as before, is repeated with mantling, helmet, and crest.

7. The third is for Thomas Andrew, son of the last, and his wife Agnes Newport. It is considerably smaller than either of the former. The figures are not more than 2 ft. in height, and there are no subordinate decorations. He is in plate armour, with pass guards, and the lower part of the tassettes trefoil-shaped, mail apron, and cerveliere; no gauntlets; a dagger at his right side, and a long sword placed diagonally at his left. His lady has the pedimental head-dress. A tippet falls back at the neck, and is fastened by a rose broach; and out of short hanging sleeves issue long close embroidered sleeves finished with ruffles. On a plate beneath in three lines:

Sub isto marmore iacet Thomas Andrewco armig. et Agnes uxor eius qui quidem Thomas obiit secundo die mensis Julii anno d'ni millesi'mo quingentesimo quadragesimo primo quor' a'i'ab's p'piciet' De'.

North Chapel. There was formerly an arch between this chapel and the chancel, but being much out of repair, the arch has been built up, and a wall carried across from the capitals of the pillars.

II. Under this opening is a fine alabaster altar-tomb with the recumbent effigies of sir Thomas Andrew, between his two wives; and which may be presumed to have been erected by him after his second marriage, as it only records the death of his first wife. The knight is bare-headed, with short round hair, whiskers, mustachios, and long two-pointed or bifid beard. He is in a suit of plate armour; collar of SS round his neck, with rose pendant, and on a short surcoat, Andrew only. His helmet and crest are at his head, and his gauntlets and a lion at his feet. His wives are habited in a corresponding style: their head-dresses are close; the hair parted over the forehead, and a single curl at the sides; the necklaces, one suspending a cross, and the other a heart; the waists short, and confined by band and tassels hanging down; short gowns thrown open at the neck, sleeves very full, the under part drawn or gathered; mantles flowing to the feet and fastened across the breast by cord and tassel.

Each side of the tomb is divided into three compartments in panels. On the south side are three shields; in the centre, Andrew, with helmet, and for crest a moor's head, full face instead of profile as usually adopted by the family; on each side, within a circle, Andrew impaling Az. fretty Ar. on a fess O. a greyhound courant S. Cave of Winwick; impaling, quarterly, 1. DAVENTRY,

Usually pronounced Daintree, from whence it is commonly supposed to be of Danish derivation, is written in domesday "Daventrei;" but its etymology is included in, and therefore reserved for that of the British settlement of BENAVENTA on Borough hill. This parish includes the hamlet of Drayton; exclusive of which it contains about 1940 acres, and was inclosed by act of parliament 42 Geo. 3 (1802). The principal proprietors are John Plomer Clarke, esq. of Welton Place, lord of the manor, who has about 380 acres; William Rose Rose, esq. of Chapel Brampton, lessee of the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, about 590 acres, including about 60 acres of freehold; the Grand Junction Canal Company about 155 acres, including Drayton reservoir; Charles Rattray, M. D. about 100 acres; and William Watkins, esq. about 100 acres. It is bounded on the north by the Grand Junction canal, which separates it from Welton; north-east by Thorp grounds in the parish of Norton; east by Norton, from which it is divided by Borough hill, the boundary hedge following, with slight deviations, the line of entrenchment; south-east and south by Newnham; south-west by Badby; west by Staverton; and north-west by Braunston. There is a considerable diversity of soil, but the most prevailing is a strong brownish loam on a sub-stratum of rubble-stone or gravel. Borough hill and the east part of the field is a light sandy loam. The wood under Newnham hill, mentioned in the early grants to Daventry priory, has been recently stocked up. Mr. Robert Wildegose has kindly furnished the following list of scarce plants found here. Eriophorum polystachion, Cotton-grass; Drayton reservoir. Agrostis stolonifera, Fiorin Grass; on the common. Festuca Myurus, wall Fescue; on the common. Bromus erectus, upright Brome-Grass; Farmer's slade. Scabiosa succisa, Devil's-bit Scabious; Dunslade. Galium montanum, Goose-grass; the wood. Sanguisorba officinalis, Blood-wort Burnet; the meadow. Viola hirta, hairy Violet; Borough hill. Parnassia palustris, grass of Parnassus; Dunslade. Allium vineale, Crow Garlic. Saxifraga granulata, white Saxifrage; on the common. Arenaria verna, mountain Sandwort; Borough hill. Spergula subulata, Awl-shaped Spurrey; Borough hill. Rosa Spinosissima, Burnet Rose; Burntwalls. Rubus Idæus, wild Raspberry; Borough hill. Galeobdolon luteum, yellow Archangel; the wood side. Digitalis purpurea, common Foxglove; the wood. Leontodon hispidum, rough Dandelion; head of the reservoir. Carduus acanthoides, welted Thistle; Farmer's slade. Carduus tenuiflorus, slender-flowered Thistle; on the common.

The quarries in this lordship are principally inferior oolite, abounding with terebratulæ and remarkably fine pectenites.

In excavating the tunnel commonly called the Braunston tunnel, on the Grand Junction canal, many large ammonites were disclosed; some of them now in possession of G. H. Arnold, esq. of Ashby Lodge, are from 7 to 17 inches in diameter. The tunnel was completed in June 1796, and is 2042 yards in length; the whole of which is in Daventry or Drayton field, except 39 yards only in Braunston. From the surface of the ground to the deepest point of the base is about 60 feet: the passage is 19 ft. 6 in. high, 16 ft. 6 in. wide, and admits two boats to pass each other.

There are also two large reservoirs in this lordship; one in Daventry and the other in Drayton field. The former covers 117½ acres, of which 7½ acres are in Norton parish: when full, the water is 35 ft. deep, and is estimated to contain about 7300 locks of water of 9000 cubic feet each. The latter contains 32½ acres; the water stands 26 ft. when full, and will supply about 1300 locks.

Several birds of rare occurrence have frequented these reservoirs. Hæmatopus ostralegus (Lin.) Manorial History. Judith Fee. Honor of Huntingdon. At the domesday survey the Countess Judith was in possession of the whole of "Daventrei," consisting of eight hides. The arable land was 16 carucates, of which three were in demesne with three servants, and 20 villeins with a priest and 10 bordars had seven others; leaving six waste or unaccounted for. There were 12 acres of meadow. It had been valued heretofore at £3 yearly, but was then raised to £8 yearly[u].

An historical deduction of the property of the countess Judith will be much more appropriately placed under Yardley Hastings, the head of one of the divisions of the honor of Huntingdon in this county, than under this lordship, which left the direct line of descent in the person of her granddaughter

Matilda wife of Robert Fitz Richard, the daughter of Simon St. Liz earl of Northampton and Huntingdon, by her eldest daughter Matilda.

Over Manor. Duchy of Lancaster *. Walter Fitz Robert, son of the above Robert and Matilda, was certified in the hydarium of Hen. 2 to hold eight hides in "Daventre," the same quantity as in domesday, of the fee of the king of Scotland[x], in whom the honor of Huntingdon was then vested. His eldest surviving son Robert Fitz Walter was the renowned leader of the barons against king John, and the immediate ancestor of the Fitz Walters of Essex. He assigned Daventry to his younger brother Simon Fitz Walter, who also joined the confederated barons, and in 18 Joh. (1216), the sheriff of the county was directed to deliver the manor of Daventry, late in possession of Simon Fitz Walter, to Robert de Burgate[y]. It was however restored to him in 1 Hen 3 (1216-7), on returning to his fealty[z]; though not without a fine for the king's pardon of 100 marks (£66. 13s. 4d.), and a palfrey, which remained unliquidated six years afterwards[a]. The circumstances attendant on his marriage with Sarah widow of Thomas de Burgh, are strongly illustrative of the restrictions incident to the feudal system. In the great roll of the third of John (1201) she was charged with 50 marks (£33. 6s. 8d.) and a palfrey, besides £100 before promised and inrolled the preceding year, for licence to marry whom she pleased within the king's realm, except among the feudatories of the archbishop of Canterbury, or in Scotland, giving the king notice of her intended husband[b]. And in the pipe roll of this county the same year Simon Fitz Walter was returned to owe 200 marks (£133. 6s. 8d.), besides 30 marks (£20), before noted, for having married her with her consent[c]. Their son Walter Fitz Simon accounted for one knight's fee in "Davintr'" and "Drayton," of the fee of Walter Fitz Robert[d], of Essex, in that part of the Testa de Nevill which may be placed about 25 Hen. 3 (1240-1); and in a subsequent portion of the same record, about 40 Hen. 3 (1255-6), his son Robert Fitz Walter was presented by the jurors of Fawsley hundred to be lord of the town of Daventr', parcel of the honor of Huntingdon, and to hold it with the view of frank pledge and the ancient privileges and customs of Huntingdon, but that he had not the return of writs nor pleas of withernam; and of the other heads of inquiry they were ignorant[e]. In 56 Hen. 3 (1271-2) he obtained a grant of free warren in "Daventre" and "Drayton," Skirwith in Cumberland, Tingrith in Bedfordshire, and Bradenham in Buckinghamshire[f]. Either he or the contemporary Robert Fitz Walter of Essex was summoned as a baron to the two parliaments held at Westminster in 23 Edw. 1 (1295)[g], and to another at Bury St. Edmund's the year following[h]. In the latter year Robert Fitz Walter "de Daventree" was summoned to assist at the great council or parliament at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and to be prepared there with horse and arms to march against the Scots[i]; and his son "Galfr" [Walter] Fitz Robert, "Dominus de Daventre," was summoned also to appear with horse and arms, but not to attend the council[k]. The next year Robert Fitz Walter "de Daventre" was summoned as a baron to the parliament at Salisbury[l]. The period of his death is not known, but he must have been then advanced in years, and cannot therefore be safely identified with the Robert Fitz Walter summoned to parliament from this time to 19 Edw. 2 (1325); who, though only in 29 Edw. 1 designated "de Wodeham," and in every other instance without any local addition to his name, may confidently be referred to the baronial house of Essex.

Walter Fitz Robert, son of the above, died in 2 Edw. 3 (1328), seised of the manor of Davintre, held of the heir of Robert Fitz Walter of Essex, a minor, by service of one fee, leaving Robert Fitz Walter his son and heir aged 30 years[l]. A writ of quo warranto was issued against him the year following, to shew his right to certain privileges in his manor of Daventry, but not appearing, the plea was adjourned; and afterwards Oliver de Ingham came by his attorney, and said that since the summons for the iter he had purchased the said manor, and prayed therefore that he might be heard instead of Robert; which being allowed, he pleaded that Robert had enfeoffed him for life in the manor of "Daventre," as of the honor of Huntingdon, with all liberties and customs belonging to that honor, view of frank pledge, wayf, gallows, tumbril, pillory, infangtheof, outfangtheof, correction of assize of bread and beer, and freedom from toll. He claimed also free warren in all his demesne lands in Daventry and Drayton, a weekly market at Daventry every Wednesday, and an annual fair there on the vigil and day of St. Augustine in May; and the jury deciding in his favor, the several privileges were admitted and confirmed[m].

Robert Fitz Walter died prior to 19 Edw. 3 (1345), in which year Isabella, his widow, occurs as wife of Bryan Cornwall[n] of Norton. She had this manor in dower, and assigned her interest in it to Henry duke of Lancaster, who in 35 Edw. 3 (1361) conveyed the manor to Richard earl of Arundel, the bishop of London, and others, for term of her life, with remainder to Thomas de Daventre, the right heir of the said manor[o]. In the inquisition after the death of the duke, taken the same year, this manor is returned amongst his possessions[p], which is deserving of remark, as it proves that life or other temporary estates were sometimes included.

Thomas de Daventre was grandson of Isabella, and usually styled Thomas Fitz Walter lord of Daventry in the cartulary of Daventry priory and register of the duchy of Lancaster. He attested a grant to St. Andrew's priory by that designation in 4 Ric. 2 (1380-1)[q], and died either in that year or the following; for in 5 Ric. 2 a warrant was directed to the bailiff of the manor of Daventry, to deliver the goods and chattels of Mons. Thomas Daventry to his executors[r]. He left two sisters and coheiresses, Joan and Matilda.

Joan, in 22 Ric 2 (1398-9), joined her husband Thomas Beaumont in levying a fine of a moiety of the manor of Daventry to

Henry duke of Hereford and earl of Derby (afterwards king Henry 4), in fee[s], who appears also, though the conveyance has not been traced, to have obtained the other moiety from her sister Matilda, and was already in possession of the Nether Manor by inheritance from his father John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster.

By virtue of the successive purchases of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster and his son Henry, the two manors of Daventry became parcel of the duchy of Lancaster; and the "Dragge," or field book, made in 14 Eliz. (1572), under the authority of the duchy seal, furnishes the clue to the right appropriation of them; the site of the Over Manor being described as in the High Street, with the great close called the "Inlands;" and the site of the other, as the close called "the Nether Manor, alias the Rumbellowes." In 2 Hen. 4 (1401) a warrant was issued to the receiver-general to pay to John Wilughby, farmer of the manor of Daventry, certain sums expended for the carriage of armour to that place from Kenilworth[t]. Thomas Huntyngton and John Wilughby had a grant in 10 Hen. 4 of the [Over] manor of Daventry, and all rents and services, for 9 years, at a yearly rent of £76[u]. In the reign of Henry 7, William Staverton, gent.[a] and Thomas Andrew, esq.[y]; in the reign of Henry VIII. Thomas Barker, gent.[z] Thomas Baxter[a], Robert Skipton, gent.[b], sir William Spencer[c], sir Richard Knightley[d], and William Symes, or Symmes[e]; and in the reign of Elizabeth, Henry Thornton, gent.[f]; severally died seised of estates in Daventry held of the duchy of Lancaster. Various leases of the Over and Nether Manors of Daventry are recorded in the duchy archives during the reign of Henry 8, Elizabeth, and James, but the fee remained unalienated till the first of Charles (1625), when Robert Dixon and William Walley, gents. at the nomination of and in trust for

William Cavendish viscount Mansfield (afterwards created duke of Newcastle-on-Tyne), in consideration of £12,500, had a grant in fee farm for ever of the manor of St. John of Jerusalem, called Clerkenwell manor, in Middlesex; various manors in the counties of York, Huntingdon, Essex, Stafford, Suffolk, Lancaster, and Derby; and all those the manors of Daventry, one whereof is called Over Manor and another called Nether Manor, with all lands and pertinencies in Daventry and Drayton; and also all mills, common bakehouses, stalls, shops, and shambles, as well within the Drapery as elsewhere in the markets and fairs within the said manors, or either of them; and all and singular the profits and tolls of them, and every of them; and all courts leet and views of frank pledge, &c. &c. to hold in fee farm for ever of the manor of Enfield in Middlesex, in free and common socage, rendering £60 rent per ann.[g] The viscount however never came into possession of Daventry, for the reversion only passed by the above conveyance, subject to a lease granted in 22 Jac. (1624) to

Sir Henry Finch[h], recorder of London, and prior to the determination of the term the inheritance in fee was acquired by his family. His mother, who had been recently created countess of Winchilsea, may be presumed to have been the purchaser, from the circumstance of her joining him in a lease of the Moot Hall, &c. to the corporation, in Jan. 5 Car. (1629-30)[i]; and she may be further presumed to have settled it on her grandson

Heneage Finch, esq. as he executed another lease of the same premises to the corporation in Dec. 1649[i]. Following the profession of his father, he reached the summit of legal honor, and supported the dignity of lord chancellor of England with distinguished reputation and unsullied integrity. On his first elevation to the peerage he adopted this town for the designation of his barony, but afterwards took the title of earl from Nottingham, a place with which he is not known to have had any connection. His son Daniel, 2nd earl of Nottingham, became 6th earl of Winchilsea on the extinction of the male line in the elder branch of the family in 1729, as exhibited in the annexed pedigree, which brings down the descent to George the present earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, who disposed of the whole of his property here by public auction in 1786 for £21,673.

FINCH-HATTON, of KIRBY.

On the sale of the earl of Winchilsea's estate in 1786, the manors of Daventry and Drayton, with their rights and privileges, and about 380 acres in Daventry, were purchased by John Clarke, esq. of WELTON PLACE, whose son John Plomer Clarke, esq. is the present possessor.

MILLS were anciently manorial appendages; and if the tenants neglected or refused to grind at the lord's mill, he might amerce them in his court, or sue them at common law. Daventry is one of the few places where this feudal badge of subjection still continues, but not without repeated ineffectual attempts at resistance. The right was confirmed to the lord by decree of the court of exchequer in May 1696, and of the duchy court of Lancaster in 1785. On the sale of the earl of Winchilsea's property here in 1786, Mr. William Mumford purchased the messuage in the High Street, " with the ancient horse-mill, malt-mill, and bake-house and ovens, and the " several usages and customs for and from the several tenants, resiants, and inhabitants, of and within the manor " and manors, town and parish, of Daventry aforesaid, to grind all their malt which they and every of them shall " respectively spend or use ground in their respective houses or holdings within the said manor and manors, town " and parish, of Daventry aforesaid, at the same horse-mill or malt-mill, and to bake all their household bread " which they and every of them shall respectively use or spend in their respective houses or holdings within the " said manor and manors, town and parish, of Daventry aforesaid, at the said bake-house and ovens; and the " tolls or mulcturres for grinding at the said horse-mill or malt-mill, and for baking at the said bake-house and "ovens, according to the customs and rates now and theretofore from time out of mind[f] used and accustomed, and "by the several decrees and decretal orders concerning the same made, set forth, established, and confirmed." The fee of this relic of feudalism is now vested in Mr. John Hall, by purchase from Mumford's assignees.

NETHER MANOR. DUCHY OF LANCASTER. The lands which formed the basis of this manor were acquired from the capital lord within a century of the norman conquest by a family who assumed the local surname.

Sir Philip de Daventre was one of the earliest benefactors to the priory[k], and a witness to the confirmation charter of Walter Fitz Robert and other donations[l]. In 5 Joh. (1203), William de Daventre claimed against (his uncle) Simon de Daventre 14 virgates, with pertinencies, in 'Daventr,' which (the above) Philip, his grandfather, demised in the court of Walter Fitz Robert, and gave to John, his son, who held them for life in the time of king Henry (2nd) father of the king, and endowed his wife Herneward with them; to which Simon pleaded, that John, father of William, the claimant, died before Philip his father[m], and consequently that he, the defendant, ought to inherit in preference to the plaintiff—a point of law frequently contested in the early ages, when the right of representation in succession was imperfectly understood, and far from being firmly established.

In 18 Hen. 3 (1233-4) a fine was levied between this William de Daventre, querent, and Walter Fitz Simon, deforciant, of common pasture for 12 oxen in Daventre as the right of the said Walter, who gave the said William a messuage, a certain meadow, and an acre of pasture, with pertinencies, in Daventry, and confirmed to him all the lands and tenements which he previously held there[n].

In 23 Edw. 1 (1295) John, son of Philip de Daventre (and grandson of William), having been apprehended and imprisoned at Northampton for a certain rescue made by him, prayed the king to relieve him; whereupon the king, at the instance of sir Malcolm de Harlegh, escheator on this side Trent, granted of his special favor that the said John should give good and sufficient bail to appear at the next parliament, then and there to abide his royal pleasure; and the said sir Malcolm de Harlegh, William de Mortimer, Gilbert de Roubyn, and Nicholas de Warwyk, became his manucaptors, and a writ went to the sheriff for his release[o].

In 9 Edw. 3 (1335) sir Robert de Daventre had a grant of free warren in (Cold) Higham, Potcote, Grimscote, Farthingston, and Daventry[p]. He died in 16 Edw. 3 (1342), and by the inquisition after his death, which was not taken till 50 Edw. 3, his grandson Simon de Daventre, son of John, was found to be heir, and aged 30 years[q]; but this manor had been previously alienated to

John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster, who in 46 Edw. 3 leased it to Roger Newnham, for 10 years, at a yearly rent of £27[r]; and in the following year a warrant was issued to the said Roger, farmer of the manor of Daventry, to pay certain rent due to the executors of Stephen Rumbelow[s].

Its subsequent descent is incorporated with the Over Manor.

THE PRIORY

Was established for monks of the Cluniac order—a scion of the Benedictines, and dedicated to St. Mary de Caritate and St. Augustin the apostle of England. The cluniac establishments in this kingdom were not generally released from their subjection to the abbey of Clugny, or Cluni, in Normandy, till the reign of Hen. 6; but, according to Steevens, Lenton near Nottingham, and Daventry, took out new foundation charters, and united themselves to the chapter and congregation of black monks as early as Hen. 5; though the priors subscribed by the title of the cluniac order to the deeds of surrender at the dissolution. The priory originated in an anterior foundation at Preston Capes, where Hugh de Leycestre placed four monks; but the double inconvenience of want of water, and proximity to his castle, induced him within a few years to translate them here, and erect a monastery near the parish church with the consent of the lord, Simon St. Liz the elder, earl of Northampton[1]. Hugh de Leycestre is frequently styled "Hugh Vicecomes[2]," from which it has been too hastily inferred that he was sheriff of the county; for the term vicecomes, during the norman era, will equally bear to be rendered vice count, or deputy of the earl, in which relation he may have stood to earl Simon, as he certainly was seneschall or chief steward to Matilda St. Liz, the earl's daughter. He survived till the reign of Hen. 1, as is proved by his attesting the confirmation charter of that king to St. Andrew's priory[3], and a grant from Geoffrey de Clinton to Kenilworth priory in Warwickshire[4]. In what year he founded this priory is not known, but it has been conjecturally assigned to 1090[5] (3 Will. 2). He endowed it with the churches of Preston Capes[6], Eltington, and Suthrop[7] (Thorpe Mundevill), the lands of Edric, and the profits of a mill called "Molendinum Vicecomitis" at Everdon[8], together with three virgates of land in Fawsley, in consideration of the injury the monks sustained from their removal[9], to which endowment his grandson Hugh Poer added the churches of West Haddon and Cold Ashby[10]. The site of the conventual buildings must have been the gift of earl Simon; and it is no reflection on his liberality that it extended no further, as it would naturally be directed in favor of the priory he had recently founded at Northampton; but his descendants contributed most essentially to the parochial influence of the monks of Daventry, by surrendering into their hands the patronage of the benefice; and to their accommodation and comfort, by providing them with an extensive demesne within the lordship. Saher de Quinci and Matilda de Senliz (or St. Liz), his wife, granted to the prior and convent the land of Widecroft, two acres in burgage, four acres in Langdun, and eight acres of their demesne lying next the lands given to the priory by queen Matilda[1]. This grant is embodied in a subsequent one by Matilda during her widowhood, whereby for her own (spiritual) health, and the souls of her father and mother, her lord Robert Fitz Richard (her first husband), her children and friends, she gave 40s. rent to purchase frocks and hoods for the monks, viz. for 20s. of the above rent she gave three mills in Daventre, so undisturbed and free, that none of her heirs and successors, nor any other person, should make a mill in Daventre or Drayton except for the benefit of the monks; and for the remaining 20s. of rent she gave a virgate of land in Daventre which John the chaplain held, and a virgate in Drayton which Gocelin held, with the homage of Gocelin and his children, and eight acres of the land called Reveland, and 15 acres of her meadow, and an acre of land near the fish pond for a curtilage; and directed that wine for the celebration of mass should be purchased out of her former donation (jointly with her husband Quinci) of the land in Widecroft, two acres in burgage near the house of Ralph the Saracen, four acres in Langdun near the land of the monks, and eight acres of demesne near the land which queen Matilda her mother gave them. Besides which, she granted the homage of Odulf and his children, and confirmed the donation which her man ("homo") Tebold had made of an acre of land in burgage with Hugh Plumston and his sons[2]. By another charter, Matilda granted to the prior and convent the church of Daventre, with its appurtenances, and the wood which extended under Newnham hill towards the west, for the repair of their ploughs[3]; and she is said also—though the deed is not extant—to have given them five carucates of land[4]. Walter Fitz Robert, for the souls of Robert Fitz Richard his father, and Matilda de Senliz his mother, and all his ancestors, and for the souls of himself and his wife Matilda de Loci, and his sons and daughters, granted to God and St. Mary de Karitate, and the church of St. Augustin de Daventre, and the monks serving God there, three mills in Daventre, prohibiting and interdicting his heirs or successors, or any person whatsoever, from making any other mill, either in the fields of Daventry or Drayton; 20 acres of land in Daventre to the south of the cemetery, 4 acres in burgage, 8 acres of Reveland, 15 acres of meadow, 1 acre for a curtilage near the fish-pond, Widecroft against Drayton, 4 acres in Langdun, the land of Gara, 1 a. 1 r. in Widecroft between the two fish-ponds and the house of Ailward and his mother, and 4 acres (two in one part of the field and two in another) to the hospital, a ridge near the fish-pond, 4 acres of land and Warwichemed, 2 fish-ponds, and the privilege of fishing one day in his own fish-pond yearly before the feast of St. Augustine, 1000 herrings, 5 acres of ox pasture ("bevarii") upon Burc (qu. Borough hill?), 10 cart or waggon loads ("quadrigatas") of wood, and 24 burdens of fire-wood for the use of the sacrist in preparing the host; in Drayton a virgate of land, and another virgate which he exchanged there for that virgate which John the priest held at his death in Daventre of St. Augustin; and in men (for the persons of the natives or villeins, with their families, were at that period as completely at the disposal of the feudal lord as the soil on which they lived), Vitalem son of Odialf, Hugh Plumstan, John the miller, Ivo, Turb, and Walter, with their brothers and sisters, Hugh, Marin with his brother Odulf and his sisters, Grugan with his brothers, Godwin, Blund, and Matilda wife of Gamel de Heddon—"all these with their sons and daughters[5]."

So valuable and important was the above grant deemed by the prior and convent, that they obtained from Walter a second confirmation of it[l]; and still further to strengthen their title, he, by a third deed released and quit-claimed to them all right in himself or his heirs to the said mills, &c. For the health of his own soul and of his two wives, Matilda de Luci and Matilda de Bown (Bohun), he gave all the oblations due from the whole of his family, to the support of the lamps kept in the church of "Daventre" for the purposes of divine worship, on condition that his chaplains, singing masses in his private chapel, might retain to their own uses the tenths of the profits arising from the masses sung there, rendering an account of the surplus, or nine-tenths, to the sacrist of the convent. To this deed Matilda de Boun his wife, and Richard his brother, were witnesses[m]. Robert Fitz Walter confirmed all reasonable grants and concessions made by Walter Fitz Robert his father[l]. The original deed, interesting from its antiquity, and still more so from the celebrity of the granter, is in possession of G.W. Fiuch Hatton, esq. of Kirby. The appendant seal is of white wax with a yellowish brown varnish, circular, and about three inches in diameter. The obverse has the usual device of a knight on horseback, bearing his arms on his shield and the trappings of the horse, and circumscribed "Sig.....ii Walteri." In the centre of the reverse is a circular counter-seal, an inch and a half in diameter, within which is a shield with a fess between two chevrons, and round it "Secretum Roberti Filii Walteri." He afterwards resigned his interest in Daventry to his brother Simon Fitz Walter, who recited and amply confirmed all the grants made to this convent by any or all of his ancestors[l]. In 21 Hen. 3 (1237) an agreement was entered into in the church of St. Andrew at Harleston, between Walter Fitz Simon, lord of "Daventre," and sir Nicholas the prior, and the convent of Daventre, settling their respective rights and properties; and the same year Walter confirmed all the donations of his predecessors[n]. He also gave a rood of land in Daventry for providing an additional light at the altar of the Virgin Mary during the time of mass[o]; bound himself and his heirs to maintain a lamp before the great altar of the conventual church, to be kept burning every night throughout the year, and every day during the time of mass[o]; and remitted a mark of silver payable to him annually for the rent of a farm in Daventry, on condition of the convent celebrating the anniversary of himself and his wife Isabella de Pinkeny[p]. Robert Fitz Walter confirmed all the grants of his predecessors[q]. A writ of summons was issued against him in 38 Hen. 3 (1253) to appear at Westminster to answer a plea of (Nicholas) prior of Daventry respecting five caruecates of land in "Daventre." Judgement was recorded the year following[r], and a fine levied by him of the land to the use of the prior[s].

In 1284 (12 Edw. 1), it was agreed between William (de Lemington) prior of Daventre, and the above Robert Fitz Walter lord of Daventre, and Petronilla de Grey his wife, that the said sir Robert and Petronilla, or either of them, whenever they should be resident in the mansion house taken by the said Robert out of his park at "Daventre," might have mass and all other religious offices celebrated in a chapel within the said mansion house during their respective lives, for themselves, their children, family, and visitors; so that the chapel had no bell-tower, and the chaplain was maintained at their own expence. Provided nevertheless, that all oblations offered in the chapel should be paid over to the sacrist of "Daventre," and that no espousals nor purifications should be performed there, nor any confessions heard except in the article of death ("in mortis articulo"), nor any high mass celebrated there on Christmas day, or Candlemas day, or Easter day, or any mass whatever on the feast of Pentecost, St. John Baptist, or the dedication of the church of "Daventre," unless the said Robert or Petronilla should be afflicted with sickness on those days. And the said Robert and Petronilla faithfully promised not to act contrary to this agreement, nor to place any chaplain in the said chapel, unless he should bind himself by an oath to act faithfully in these presents towards the prior and convent and church of "Daventre." And it was further agreed, that after the death of Robert and Petronilla, none of their heirs or successors or assigns should, by virtue of these presents, be entitled to any chapel or chantry there. In confirmation whereof, the deed of agreement was executed in duplicates, and cut into two parts, and sealed with the seals of the respective parties, and interchangeably delivered by them[t].

His son Walter Fitz Robert confirmed the grants of his ancestors[u], renounced his claim to some land within the inclosure of the convent, and gave two feet of ground beyond their present wall to enable them to rebuild it more commodiously[x].

In 16 Edw. 2 (1322), he levied a fine to assure to the convent the perpetuity of Tunslade, which was confirmed by his son Robert Fitz Walter, who released to them a yearly rent of 6s. formerly paid out of it[y]. His widow Isabella, on whom he had settled the manor of Daventry in dower, instituted a suit in 16 Edw. 3 (1342), against the convent for 10 acres of pasture called Tunslade, which she alleged to have been held by Peter de Canons Ashby, then prior, under Walter Fitz Robert, as parcel of the said manor, by fealty and 6s. rent. The proceedings continued three years, when judgement was given in favor of the convent, and Peter (de Horpol), the prior, acknowledged the receipt of £30 from Bryan de Cornwall and Isabella his wife, formerly wife of Robert Fitz Walter, which he had recovered against them in the king's court at Westminster[z]. Isabella, daughter of Walter Fitz Robert, in 15 Edw. 3 (1341), gave 8s. yearly rent, arising out of lands in Drayton[a], which was confirmed to the convent in 22 Edw. 3 (1348), by her nephew Thomas Fitz Robert Fitz Walter[b]. This transaction verifies a link of the pedigree, and corrects the error of substituting him for his son Thomas Fitz Thomas (or Fitz Walter as he was usually styled), who released the said rent to the convent in 42 Edw. 3[b] (1368). In the same year this Thomas Fitz Walter granted to the convent lands and rents in "Daventre" and "Drayton" to the value of 40 marks (£26. 13s. 4d.) yearly[c]. By another deed he gave them a general confirmation[d]; and the following year his two sisters Joan and Matilda, the presumptive heirs of the family, by their respective charters, bearing date the same day, confirmed to the convent all the grants and releases of their ancestors[e].

In 1 Ric. 2 (1377), "Thomas de Daventre," before called Fitz Walter, and the prior of Daventry, appointed arbitrators for settling all manner of debates between them from the beginning of the world. Thomas alleged against the prior—1. That he had a writ of entry sur disseisin against him, concerning four acres of land in Daventry.—Awarded, to be dropped with consent of both parties. 2. That he had a writ of trespass against certain monks of Daventry for taking away a horse belonging to John Osborne, which had been attached by his bailiff, by virtue of a plea held in his court.—The prior and monks defended themselves, and proceedings were awarded to be discontinued. 3. That he had a writ against the prior and monks for trespassing in his warren.—Awarded, to be dropped. 4. That the prior and his servants had taken out of his possession, in a violent manner, a ring and certain other jewels, and also a signet belonging to him.—All proceedings awarded to be annulled. The prior alleged—1. That Thomas had turned a water-course called Southbrook.—Awarded, to be amended in the best manner, saving Thomas's fish-pond, unless some other course be devised by the parties themselves. 2. That Thomas had disseised the prior of 13s. 4d. annual rent, and of twelve fees or burdens of leet one day for his lord, and another in the name of the prior for his tenants, when all amerciaments belonged to the prior, but this had been interrupted.—Awarded, to be remedied, and held in future, as they had formerly been, for the benefit of both parties. 4. That he was entitled to the tithes of Thomas's horse-mill, of his oven, and of timber felled in his woods.—Awarded, that Thomas shall do that which is right for the salvation of his soul. 5. That Thomas is bound to keep a lamp burning in the choir of the church: Thomas knew nothing about it.—Awarded, that inquiry should be made, and settled accordingly. 6. That his close, hedges, &c. were broken or injured.—Awarded, that Thomas should aid in redressing this grievance, and in punishing trespassers. 7. That Thomas had a horse-mill to the detriment of his frank tenement.—Awarded, to be inquired into. And 8. That Thomas's servants had taken the prior's horses out of his carts, &c.—Awarded, to be redressed and buried in oblivion [f].

"Henry de Lancastre" earl of Derby (afterwards king Henry 4th), by a deed in norman french, dated at "Kenelleworth" 8 Nov. 2 Ric. 2 (1387), after reciting that he had seen and beheld certain charters by which Mons. Thomas Fitz Wauter de Daventre had granted and released to "our very dear chaplains in God" the prior and convent of our house of Daventre and their successors, certain lands, tenements, rents, services, fines, amerciaments, liberties, and customs in "Daventre" and "Drayton," the bounds of which are more fully contained in the said charters; in honor of God, reverence of the holy church, in the heart of charity, and of good affection to the said chaplains, by these "our letters patent," ratifies and confirms the said lands, &c. to the prior and convent and their successors, in free and perpetual alms. The appendant seal is of red wax, two inches in diameter, bearing France and England quarterly, with a label of five points, and circumscribed "Sigillum Henrici Lancastrie Comitis Derbie [g]."

A controversy having arisen between the prior and convent of Daventre, "parsons of the parishe church sette "withinne the same priorie, and between the good folkes of the same towne, parishioners of the said parish "churche;" the former alleging that the latter rung the church bells so early afore the hour of rising, so often and in such manner, that they, the said prior and convent, were disseised and disturbed of their rest, and the less disposed to do divine service the day following, considering their rising to midnight matins; and the latter, complaining that the prior and convent made chase and re-chase with their carts and carriages through the church-yard, claiming to have a way for their ease, which thing suffered "bysemed" to the said parishioners to be "dishonest and grevaunce, bycause" their ancestors and friends had been there buried; it was decided in the presence of the right mighty prince John duke of Guyenne and of Lancaster, that the said parishioners shall ring in the morning "one cövenabull peele & ryngyng wth on belle, and at ye levacon of ye saĉmēt of ye same masse thre "knyllyngs oonly afore ye rysynge of ye sayde p'o^r^ and covent aforesaide;" and that the said prior and convent shall have a way as of ancient time, as often as their business shall require, through the church-yard, without disturbing divine service; and there shall be a gate "upon" the church-yard, to be shut, and with "tweyn "lockes and keyes locked," of which keys one shall rest in the ward and keeping of the prior and convent, and the other of the parishioners. In witness of which the said duke put his seal to the indentures of agreement, at "Kenyllworth," 18 Mar. 14 Ric. 2 [h] (1390-1).

The priory had extensive possessions in other places within the county, which will be respectively noticed as they arise in the progress of the work. They had also all the churches belonging to the barony of Foxton in Leicestershire, viz. Foxton, Gumley, Scaldford, and Lubenham in that county; Bissbrook in Rutlandshire; and Braybrook in this county, where the numerous grants and confirmations of this donation will be particularized.

The Advowson of the priory seems to have been relinquished by the founder to Matilda de St. Liz; for in the list of donors of spiritualities, in recording her gift of Daventre church in her free widowhood, she is called sister of Simon de St. Liz, junior, earl of Northampton, as well as our patroness and lady ("patrona et domina")[t]. In an agreement between the prior and convent, and Walter Fitz Simon, in the reign of Hen. 3, they style him our patron[s]. His great grandson Robert Fitz Walter, in 3 Edw. 3 (1329), released to the priory his right to the profit of the convent during the vacancy of a prior, and granted them the full and free right of electing their own prior on any future vacancy[t].

Priors. Osbert occurs in 1135[u]; and in 1144 he, with certain of his monks, went to Leicester to meet Alexander bishop of Lincoln, for the purpose of viewing with him the churches which Robert Fitz Viol had given the convent, and afterwards unjustly disseised, but which, in 1147 (9 Steph.), moved by penitence, he came to Daventry and restored[x]. Osbert, however, was not then prior, for Herbert attested a deed in 1146[y]. Lawrence prior of Coventry in 1150 confirmed the churches of West Haddon and Cold Ashby to this convent, and soon after, an agreement was made between the priories of Coventry and Daventry, "that if any Monk of Co-"ventre should be, by the consent of his Prior and Con-"vent, sent to Daventre, out of their great affection to "that House, he ought to be freely received, and reside "there in that regular Way, as if he were one of the "same Covent, untill he should be recalled by the Pr. "of Cov. and in Case he did depart this Life during "such his Abode there, all Solemnities to be perform'd "for him as for a Monk of Dav. And the like were "they of Cov. to perform to those of Dav. touching such "as should be sent thither from Dav. And that if any "of either Covent did happen to dy elswhere, one Priest "of each Monastery (his Death being known) should "celebrate 3 Masses for him, his Service with Placebo "and Dirige to be also perform'd in the Covent, with "the Corrody belonging to a Monk for that Day, and "his Name registred in the Martyrologe. And when "any of the Priors of either Monastery should dy, a "Trentall to be sung in the other Covent over and above "the Services before recited. And moreover every Year "a Mass of the Holy Ghost to be celebrated, as well for the "Living in each Monastery as for the Dead. And lastly, "that in all Things, both Spirtual and Temporal, where "each might assist other, they should effectually afford "their Aid[z]."

Reyner, James, Ralph, Richard, and Sampson, governed the priory during the next fifty years, but as their names are found only in undated deeds, the order of succession is not known.

Joybert, a Norman, eminent for secular prudence, was prior of Daventry, Wenlock, and Bermondsey; and in 1198, on the restoration of the monks of Coventry after their expulsion by bishop Novant, was appointed to that priory also by Hubert archbishop of Canterbury[a].

Benedict succeeded him here in 1204[b].

Alelm was prior in 1208[c], and

William de Bonay, or Bonar, in 1217[d]. 'e In his time 'the bishop of Lincoln was appointed superintendant of 'the affairs of the convent, by authority of the pope's 'delegates.' His successor

Walter de Salebrugge, or Sawbridge, was elected in 1225[f], and succeeded in 1231 by

Nicholas de Ely[f], who presided thirty-three years, and conducted the secular affairs of the convent with singular spirit and activity. The matrix of his seal, of which, by favor of the dean of Christ Church, a representation is annexed, was found on the north side of the church-yard, to the east of the conventual buildings, in making a grave for the family of Mr. Adams in 1816. On an altar is placed a chalice with a napkin over it, and circumscribed "S' Nicolai Prioris de Davintre." He died in 1264, and

Robert de Helydene, cellarer of the convent, was admitted prior[f] 5 Jan. 1264-5, on the presentation of sir Robert Fitz Walter[g]. His death in 1269 introduced

John de Staverton[f], alias Scampton, who was admitted the 16th of June[g], and resigned in 1281, when the election of the monks under the sanction of their patron sir Robert Fitz Walter was annulled by the bishop[f]. The object of their choice may be presumed to have been Thomas de Brochole, whom Br. Willis places in 1281, and by transposition makes successor[h] instead of predecessor of

William de Lemyngton[f], who was elected on the Friday before the feast of the Holy Trinity 1281[g]. On his resignation, 10s. yearly, issuing out of a virgate of land held of the convent by Walter vicar of West Haddon, and £4. 10s. paid yearly by the monks of Pipwell out of Cold Ashby, were settled on him for life[f]; and

Peter de Esseby[f] (or Canons Ashby) was admitted 2d June 1288[g]. In 2 Edw. 2 (1308) John de Cranford, of Drayton, and Isabella his wife, recovered seisin in the king's court at York against this prior, of the third part of the custody of the gate ("porte") of the priory of Daventry, with pertinencies[i]. He retained his office thirty-nine years, when the vacancy was supplied by

Peter de Horpol, who dying in 1352[f],

John de Falwesle was presented by Henry duke of Lancaster (afterwards king Henry 4th), and elected on the 20th of September[g]. He died in 1360[g], and

Thomas Stockinford was elected on the 30th of March[g], but could only have presided a few months, as

Thomas Price occurs within the same year[k], whose government was equally brief, for

William de Grendon[f] was elected on the 30th of August 1361[g]. 'i His death happened in 1381, when in 'his stead succeeded

'William Rothwell;' but, according to Br. Willis, Grendon "died at Daventry 20 Aug. 1396," and Rothwell was "confirmed in this priorship the Monday after "the Nativity of the Virgin Mary 1396[m]." The vicinity of the parochial church to the convent having proved a source of dissention between the monks and the inhabitants, who annoyed the former by ringing the bells at unseasonable hours, and disputing their right of road through the church-yard, it was agreed in 13 Ric. 2 (1389-90), through the mediation and in the presence of the duke of Lancaster, that the bells should be rung only at such times and in such manner as would least disturb the monks, and that they should peaceably enjoy a carriage way through the church-yard[n]. The next prior,

John Ashby, was appointed in 1408[o], and dying in 1415 the vacancy was filled with

Robert Man[o], to whom succeeded in 1444

Thomas Knyght. 'He was advanced to the see of 'St. Asaph in 1450[p]; and allowed to hold the priory of 'Daventre in commendam with his bishoprick;' but resigned in 1460, when it was obtained by

William Bromley[q], on whose decease in 1475

William Lane was elected. Br. Willis says he occurs prior in 1483, and again in 1490[q]; but according to another authority he was succeeded in 1482 by Thomas Ylson, Ibston[o], or Ilson, who died in 1515; and his successor,

Alexander Colyns, continued till the suppression of the priory.

A small fragment only of the COMMON SEAL of this priory remains appendant to the deed of surrender in the Augmentation Office. The subjoined representation is from the seal attached to an agreement between the abbot of Bittlesden and (Peter de Esseby) prior of Daventry in 1295. It exhibits a full-length figure (probably St. Augustin) in the act of benediction, potifically habited, excepting that the head is covered with a close cap, from which depend long labels. The circumscription is mutilated. On the counterseal are two figures in full pontificals under a double canopy. Beneath is a priest in the attitude of prayer; behind his head is a star, emblematic of the epiphany; before him, a crescent denoting the increase of the gospel; and above him, FR. PETRUS. Round the whole is inscribed, S' FRIS PETR' PRIORIS DE DAV'NTR'.

TWO CARTULARIES of this monastery are, or at least have been, known. Copious excerpts from the first are preserved in Dugdale's Monasticon (vol. i. pp. 672-679), where it is quoted as in possession of John Rushworth, esq. of Lincoln's Inn, 1651; but I have not been able to trace its present owner. The second formerly belonged to sir John Legard, of Ganton in Yorkshire, and is now the Cottonian MS. Claudius, D. xii. in that invaluable national depository, the British Museum.

Tanner, in his Notitia, besides various references to public documents and printed works, mentions "Librum "monasterii de Davintre in officio Ducatus Lancastr. apud hosp. Greyense Londini." Cardinal Wolsey having projected a splendid collegiate establishment at Oxford, procured a bull from pope Clement 7, in September 1524 (16 Hen. 8)[r], and ratified by the king in January following[s], authorizing the dissolution of St. Frideswide's priory there, and other of the lesser monasteries, not exceeding the yearly value of 3000 ducats of gold (about £2000), in aid of his design. "In the executing of this businesse, five persons "were his chiefe instruments, who on a time made a demaunde to the prior and covent of the monasterie of "Daintrie for occupieng of certayne of theyr groundes, but the monkes refusing to satisfie their requestes, "streightway they picked a quarrell against the house, and gave information to the Cardinal against them, who, "taking a small occasion, commanded the house to be dissolved, and to be converted to his newe Colledge." So says Stowe[t], and indignantly traces the subsequent misfortunes of the parties to the punishment of God for "this irreligious robberie;" but his statement is unsupported by authority, and no motive or circumstances could be required in this particular instance to justify a measure that had received both papal and regal sanction, which would not equally apply to the analogous cases of the other nineteen religious houses annihilated for the same purpose. The royal licence for the erection and endowment of "Cardinal College[u]," having been obtained, a grant of Daventry priory (int. al.) was made on the 20th of January 1525-6 (17 Hen. 8)[w], and Wolsey commenced his great work with spirit; but long before its completion, his memorable fall and death in 1530 arrested its progress, and the revenues appropriated to its support were seized by the crown. To the ensuing interval of two years before the re-grant in 1532, must be referred the following extract from a "Book of Surveys of Monasteries" in the Chapter House, Westminster, temp. When the cardinal's unfinished undertaking was re-founded by the king in 1532 (24 Hen. 8), under the altered designation of "King Henry the Eighth's College in Oxford[x]," the site, circuit, and precincts of the late monastery or priory of St. Mary de Charitate and St. Augustin of Daventre, with all its possessions, as surveyed in the Cardinal's bundle, was included in the endowment[y], and continued annexed to it till the dean and canons surrendered their charter to the king in May 1545, preparatory to the college being converted into the seat of a bishopric. The episcopal see, into which the neighbouring abbey of Oseney had been transformed in 1542, was removed to St. Frideswide's, and the college revived for the third time on the 4th of November 1546 (38 Hen. 8), with the title of "The Cathedral Church of Christ in Oxford[z]." The dotation charter of the dean and chapter is dated 11 December following, and though it comprises several impropriations, &c. in this county, yet, for reasons now inexplicable, the king withheld all the possessions of the late priory of Daventry which had been granted to the two anterior foundations, except the site and demesne lands, under the description of the lordship and manor of Daventre, and rectory and vicarage of Daventre and Drayton, with their members and pertinencies, and all tithes of the demesne lands of the manor of Daventre, lately belonging to the late king Henry the eighth's college, and certain lands and closes in "Thropp*."

The dean and chapter of Christ Church demise the college, manor, and estate, consisting of about 740a. in Daventry and Drayton, the site of the monastery, 14 messuages and 66 cottages in Daventry (except the advowson and the land assigned to the perpetual curate), on a beneficial lease renewable every seven years.

The family of Farmer, of Kingsthorp and Daventre, were lessees for about a century, and had possession in the time of Bridges. From them or their assigns the lease passed to

Daniel earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, under whose will it vested in his brother the honorable Edward Finch Hatton, whose son, the late George Finch Hatton, esq. of Eastwell in Kent, and of KIRBY, alienated it in 1788 to the rev. William Lucas Rose, of Whilton, father of William Rose Rose, esq. the present lessee.

The Priory stood contiguous to the west end of the church, stretching northwards. The conventual buildings soon after the dissolution are described in the survey given above; and an etching is subjoined of the present vestiges, the upper floor of which, approached by a flight of steps, is supposed to have been the refectory, and is now in part appropriated to a national school *. Beneath are the remains of a crypt supported by arches of the early pointed style, with simple groinings. The cottages in the inner yard are the relics of the manor place, or mansion of the lessees, which was erected out of the ruins of the monastery. About the reign of Elizabeth it was inhabited by a Mr. Roper[b], and at a subsequent period by Henry Berkeley, gent. a younger brother of the judge Berkeley, who was fined £20,000 and imprisoned by the parliament for favoring king Charles's project of ship money.

St. Andrew's Priory, Northampton. The third part of the annual produce of his land ("anonæ") of "Daventria," and all the tithes of his horses there, were included in the original endowment of St. Andrew's priory in Northampton by Earl Simon St. Liz the elder[c]; but appear to have been resumed or relinquished when Daventry priory was founded.

Municipal Government. Tradition attributes the incorporation of this borough to king John; but though its earliest extant charter was not granted till the 18th of queen Elizabeth, yet the prior existence of a merchant guild here, the frequent precursor of a municipal borough, is indisputable, and may with confidence bordering on certainty be identified with the ancient guild or fraternity in the chapel of the Holy Trinity, whose late incumbent John Chamberleyne had an annual pension of £6 in 1553[d]. But admitting this to refer to a religious fraternity only, the proof of a civil or commercial one will be found among the corporation archives in a MS volume containing its internal economy and finances from the 16th of Elizabeth; by which it appears that each trade or company had two wardens, who paid into the chamber the fines received from foreigners (strangers) for admission to freedom, or the right of exercising their trades in the town; and two bailiffs were annually chosen to superintend and govern the whole community. Consecutive accounts of the "quarterages" of the different wardens are given, and a distinct entry is made at detached pages of the names of the companies of the "Mersers, Wollendrap's, Taylers, Inkepers, and "Fullers, with their wardens;" the "Shomakers, Tanners, Whittawaes, Glovers, and Smithes, with their wardens;" and the "Husbandmen, Butchers, Victelers [traders in the necessaries of life, as bakers, &c.], Dyers, and Weavers, "with their wardens." The bailiff's account for 1574 is headed thus: "William Salter and Henry Roper were "chosen Bayleves of Daventre 29 Sept. 1574, (16 Eliz.) who took the office upon them at the feaste of All Saints "(1 Nov.) then next followinge for one whole yeare." The said bailiffs made their account upon the feast of the purification of the Virgin Mary, (2 Feb.) "before the Burgesses and Wardens of everie companie of all the "Recepts since they came into their office xxix^{li} ix^{s} vi^{d}, whereof they have paid for the town in repairing of the "Hall shoppes and other things for the said Town xxxi^{li} xvi^{s} vi^{d}, so that the town doth owe the sayd Bayleves "xlvij^{s} whereof Robert Parker must have of the same xxvij^{s}." All the parochial disbursements seem to have passed through their hands, as may be inferred from various items similar to the following: "the said bayleves "have paid for the town for moletaking, dressing of the halle, the clerk and sexton's wages," &c. &c.

To this antecedent constitution of things the charter granted by queen Elizabeth bears a strong analogy; the two chief officers were reduced to one, but the name of bailiff and the day of election were retained, and the accounts of the wardens continued to be entered in the same volume without any variation of form.

The queen's charter is dated at Gorhambury, the 26th of March, in the eighteenth year of her reign (1576); and after reciting that Daventree is an ancient town or borough, part and parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, and that the inhabitants had from time beyond memory enjoyed within the said borough, and elsewhere within the kingdom, divers franchises, liberties, free customs, jurisdictions, privileges, exonerations, and acquittances, as well by charters to the dukes of Lancaster, as also to the said inhabitants anciently made, but which uses, customs, and prescriptions had for many years past been little used by the bailiffs and burgesses, whereby the borough had been nearly ruined, and the good government and "regimen" thereof nearly extinguished; and the inhabitants having humbly supplicated that for the restoration of the pristine good state of the borough, and for the good and civil government of the same, for the support and alleviation of the great burdens and costs which they sustained and were more and more likely to sustain, her majesty would be pleased to restore and erect the said inhabitants into a body politic and corporate, renew the old and ancient customs, franchises, and privileges, and grant two fairs or markets within the borough yearly; it ordains that the town or borough of Daventry in the county of Northampton may and shall be a free borough of one bailiff, fourteen burgesses, and twenty of the commonalty, by the name of THE BAILIFF, BURGESSES, AND COMMONALTY OF THE BOROUGH OF DAVENTRY, and that they, for the time being, and their successors, shall be for ever one body incorporate and one society in truth, deed, and name, and in all future times may have and continue in succession for ever. That the limits and jurisdiction of the borough shall extend as far as the same have extended time out of mind, and they may perambulate the boundaries when and as often as they please. They may sue, prosecute, &c. in any court within the queen's dominions, and have a common seal, break it, and make a new one at their pleasure. The common council of the borough shall consist of fourteen discreet honest men of the borough assisting to the bailiff, to be called the principal burgesses. The commonalty of the borough shall be twenty other discreet honest men out of the residue of the inhabitants, and whenever any die or are removed for reasonable cause, the bailiff and recorder shall elect out of the inhabitants to fill up the number. There shall be a recorder, who, together with the bailiff and a majority of the common council, may constitute, ordain, change, and make reasonable laws, statutes, and orders, for ruling and governing of the workmen, and other inhabitants and residue of the borough. The bailiff shall choose two sergeants of mace, who shall take the oath before him for the due execution of their office, carry two silver maces with the royal arms, and execute all things belonging to the office in the same manner as the sergeants of mace in London. The bailiff shall be clerk of the market, and John Savage, an inhabitant of the borough, shall be the first bailiff till the ensuing feast of St. Michael the archangel, and from then till another person shall be elected and sworn; Lawrence Exton, Thomas Andrew, John Symms, William Salter, Henry Roper, William Symonds, John Savage, Richard Allen, Nicholas Smith, William Hollowell, William Farmer, Richard Farmer, John Jesson, and John Godby, shall be the fourteen principal burgesses; and John Dafforne, gent. recorder of the borough for life, by himself or deputy. The bailiff and recorder shall be justices of the peace for the borough, and the bailiff the next year after his office shall be coroner within the borough. The inhabitants having time out of mind held a market within the borough every Wednesday, and a fair yearly on St. Augustin's day, the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty shall for ever hold two other fairs in the borough yearly, viz. one, on the Tuesday after Easter, to continue two days; and the other on St. Matthew the apostle, to continue two days. The Moot Hall within the borough shall be the common place for holding their courts, where, or at some convenient place in the borough, the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty shall meet every year on the day of St. Michael, between the hours of nine and twelve before noon, and the majority nominate two of the principal burgesses there present, to the intent that the majority of the other men and inhabitants of the borough there present shall choose one of them bailiff for the year ensuing; and if the person so elected refuse to take the office, the bailiff and burgesses may either commit him to prison, or lay a fine upon him and imprison him till paid. The bailiff elect shall take his oath of office before the late bailiff if present, but if not, before the recorder and principal burgesses present; and if he die, or be removed from his office, the burgesses shall meet within eight days of such death or removal, and another bailiff shall be elected in manner and form as aforesaid, to serve till the feast of St. Michael following. When any burgess shall die, or dwell out of the borough, or be removed from office, the burgesses shall meet within eight days, and the majority elect an inhabitant of the borough to be burgess for life, or otherwise, if it shall seem expedient. When the recorder shall die, or be removed from office, the bailiff and burgesses shall meet within eight days, and the majority elect another recorder for life, or otherwise. The bailiff and recorder, or either of them, shall and may hold a court of record within the borough on Thursday in every second week throughout the year (except Easter, Pentecost, and Christmas weeks); and the bailiff, with the recorder or deputy recorder, shall have full authority to try all or any actions arising within the borough, not exceeding the value of £50, and to bring the persons of the defendants to answer according to the customs used in the city of London; and in default of the defendants having chattels and lands within the borough by which they may be summoned or distrayned, the court may proceed by taking the bodies, and hearing and determining such actions in the same manner as is used in the city of London. Any inhabitant of the borough who shall be rebellious and disobedient to the laws and orders made by the common consent of the body corporate, may be punished presently by the bailiff nigh to the quantity and quality of his fault, and according to the laws of the kingdom. No inhabitant of the borough shall be empannelled on the jury at any assizes, or for trying any issue whatsoever happening out of the borough. No foreigner, non-resident person, nor stranger, shall be empannelled on any jury with the inhabitants of the borough for trying any issue arising within the borough. The bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty are capable by law of purchasing without the royal licence any lands or other possessions, in fee or otherwise, of the yearly value of £40, not held of the crown by knight's service, nor in capite; and they may continue to enjoy all the ancient liberties and customs lawfully used by the inhabitants within the borough, paying yearly to the queen and her successors on the feast of St. Michael 6s. 8d. for the fairs granted by these presents.

King James the 1st, by his letters patent dated at Westminster the 12th of February in the fourth year of his reign (1606-7), recited verbatim and confirmed the above charter.

The third and present charter was granted by king Charles the 2nd, and is dated at Westminster the 2nd of February in the twenty-seventh year of his reign (1674-5). It introduces some important alterations in the constitution of the borough, and confers various additional privileges.

It commences by reducing the number of principal burgesses; and ordains that after the death or removal of any two of the then fourteen burgesses, there shall be only twelve burgesses; and the borough shall from henceforth be a free borough of one bailiff, twelve burgesses, and twenty of the commonalty, by the name of THE BAILIFF, BURGESSES, AND COMMONALTY OF THE BOROUGH OF DAVENTRY, who shall have succession for ever, and be persons capable by law (notwithstanding the statute of mortmain) to purchase lands, hereditaments, and other real estates, in fee or otherwise, not exceeding the yearly value of £100, and goods and chattels and other things of what nature or kind soever; may plead and be impleaded in the same manner as any other body corporate and politic within the kingdom; and have a common seal, which they may break or change, or make a new one. It confirms all liberties and franchises (other than what are changed or annihilated by these letters patent) enjoyed by them or their predecessors within the borough by charter or prescription, and protects the whole corporate body from prosecution by writ of quo warranto, or being troubled or molested for any prior abuse of their jurisdiction. It then ordains that after the first Thursday in October following there shall be a chamberlain of the borough, who shall cause all laws and orders of the borough to be put in execution, receive the money collected by the wardens, pay it to the bailiff, and give a full and just accompt thereof to the bailiff and burgesses on quitting office; and there shall be two wardens of the borough, who shall collect all fines, amerciaments, and sums of money payable to the use of the body corporate, and pay them when and in what manner required to the chamberlain.

After reciting the mode of electing the bailiff prescribed by the former charter, it grants that the bailiff and burgesses from henceforth for ever shall meet at the Moot Hall, or any other convenient place in the borough, and nominate two burgesses, to the intent that the majority of the commonalty present shall elect one of them to be bailiff for the year following; and if they refuse to act, then the bailiff and the majority of the burgesses present shall choose one of them; and if the bailiff die, or be removed from his office, the burgesses shall meet within eight days, and another bailiff shall be elected for the residue of the year, in the manner aforesaid, and shall take his oath for the due execution of office before the recorder or his deputy. When any of the twelve burgesses shall die, or reside out of the borough, or for any cause be removed from office, the bailiff and burgesses shall meet within eight days and choose another for life, or otherwise if it seem expedient, who shall take his oath before the bailiff, or recorder, or his deputy. The commonalty shall be liable to be removed by the bailiff and majority of the burgesses for misbehaviour in office, or non-residence; and in case of the death or removal of any of them, the bailiff and burgesses shall meet within twenty days, and choose one or more of the better and honester inhabitants of the borough to fill up the number of twenty, who shall take their oaths before the bailiff, and recorder, or his deputy, and continue in office during good behaviour. The bailiff and burgesses shall meet on the first Thursday in October yearly for ever, and the majority nominate two freemen exercising some art, mystery, or trade within the borough; and also three other freemen of the same description; one of the two freemen to be chosen by the majority of the commonalty chamberlain for the year following, and two of the other three freemen wardens for the year following; and if the commonalty refuse to act, then the majority of the bailiff and burgesses shall elect them; and the persons so elected chamberlain and wardens shall take their oaths before the bailiff, or recorder, or his deputy; and if any of them should die, or be removed by the majority of the bailiff and burgesses for non-residence or misbehaviour in office, other freemen shall be chosen in their places, within eight days, in the manner aforesaid. If the coroner die or be removed, the bailiff and burgesses shall meet within eight days, and nominate and choose one of the burgesses to be coroner till the day of St. Michael following, or until the then bailiff shall go out of office, who shall be coroner according to the charter of queen Elizabeth, and shall take his oath before the bailiff; and the majority of the bailiff and burgesses shall and may, on every person who, being duly elected and having notice given him, refuses to take office, impose the following fines, viz. for refusing the office of bailiff, £10; burgess, £5; coroner, £5; commonalty, 40s.; chamberlain, £5; warden, £3: which fines may be recovered by distress of the goods and chattels of the person so refusing, or by action, to the use of the body corporate, notwithstanding such person was non-resident at the time of election, so that he be or have been burgess or freeman of the borough. In confirmation of prescriptive liberties and customs in the borough, it is commanded that they be held inviolable, and that no foreigner or stranger not being a freeman, or who hath not or shall not be an apprentice within the borough, shall hereafter exercise any art, mystery, or trade, or use any house, shop, warehouse, stall, or standing place, for the sale of any wares or merchandize within the borough (except at times of fairs, and stalls on market days) under the penalties to be imposed by the orders, laws, and statutes which shall be made by the bailiff, recorder, and common council, and levied on the goods and chattels of the person so offending, or by action, to the use of the body corporate; and the bailiff, burgesses, chamberlain, and wardens, shall meet from time to time, as shall seem expedient, and the majority make any men whatsoever (requiring the same) freemen of the borough, to exercise any art, mystery, or trade within the borough, in the manner, and according to the laws, statutes, and orders, established from time to time by the majority of the bailiff, recorder, and burgesses; and every apprentice or freeman, before he exercises any art, mystery, or trade, shall take the oath appointed for freemen before the bailiff, recorder, or his deputy, and the majority of the burgesses present, and obtain his letters of freedom under the common seal of the borough. If either the bailiff, chamberlain, or wardens, do not, within fourteen days after going out of office, give a reasonable accompt of the monies received for them for the use of the body corporate, and pay the same to the bailiff or person appointed by him and the majority of the burgesses, the bailiff and majority of the burgesses may impose a fine in the court of record of the borough, or otherwise, as to the majority shall seem reasonable, and levy the fine by distress of the goods and chattels of the person so offending, or by action, to the use of the body corporate. The bailiff and recorder, with the last bailiff, for the succeeding year after he goes out of office, shall be justices of the peace for the borough, and have full authority to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and misdemeanors, without any commission or other precept, and to exercise all things belonging to a justice of the peace within the borough, in as ample manner as the justices of the peace for the county of Northampton out of the borough. The bailiff, prior to being admitted to the office, shall take his oath for its due execution, as well as the oath appointed by the laws of the realm for justices of the peace, before the last bailiff, or recorder, or his deputy, or two of the burgesses; and the recorder also shall qualify in the same manner before the bailiff. The justices, or two of them, the bailiff or recorder being one, shall and may hold a general sessions of the peace for the borough in as ample manner as the county justices of the peace can for the county, and may, by their warrant in writing signed by them, commit any person arrested within the borough for or on suspicion of felony or any other crime whatsoever to the common gaol for the county, and no county justices of the peace, nor any other officer, by their precept or otherwise, shall intermeddle or execute his office of any matter done within the borough. The bailiff and burgesses may erect a house of correction, to which all offenders within the borough may be committed and punished according to law, by warrant of the bailiff, recorder, and burgesses, or any two of them, the bailiff or recorder being one; and the majority of the bailiff and burgesses shall appoint the governor of the said house. There shall be a deputy recorder of the borough, who shall also be the clerk of the peace of the borough. The bailiff and recorder, or either of them, or either of their deputies, are empowered to hold a court of record within the borough on Thursday in every week (except Easter, Pentecost, and Christmas weeks, and the feast of the ascension of our Lord), to try debts, and all other actions arising within the borough, not exceeding the value of £100. 1s. with full power to bring the defendants to answer, by summons directed to either of the sergeants of mace; and in default of chattels of the defendants within the borough by which they may be distrained, then to take their bodies, according to the custom of the borough, and by virtue of these letters patent, and to hear and determine such actions by the process and judgments used in the borough, and the body corporate to have to their use all the fines and other profits in and of the said court. The body corporate shall have the return and execution of all crown writs and precepts within the borough, nor shall any sheriff or crown officer presume to enter there to serve any writ, or to execute any office. They shall have also all manner of fines, forfeitures, &c. imposed on resident or non-resident burgesses by the borough justices, or the bailiff as clerk of the market, and all forfeitures and profits of recognizances for keeping the peace, or for personal appearance, or for any cause whatsoever taken before the borough justices; and it shall be lawful for them to levy to their own use, by their proper officers, all the fines and forfeitures so granted, without any warrant from the court of exchequer, or any other court at Westminster; and for the better collecting of such fines and forfeitures, they are empowered in their own names, or otherwise in the name of the king, to prosecute and recover against any persons in any court of record, or in the court of record of the borough; and the officers of the exchequer are commanded to direct whatever writs shall be requisite against the persons so charged, and to pay the said fines and forfeitures to the said body corporate. No inhabitant of the borough shall be empannelled on any jury of assize, or on writs of Nisi Prius, to be held in the county of Northampton, or before any justices of the peace, or other justices in the county, or any other judges or justices at Westminster, or on any jury of assize, or inquisition, or escheator, or coroner, in the county of Northampton out of the borough. The jurisdiction and incorporation of the borough shall extend into and through the whole parish of Daventry: and the "town of "DRAYTON" within the said parish, and all villages, hamlets, and tithings within the said parish, shall from henceforth be united and incorporated with the said borough, and shall be accepted and reputed to all intents as part and parcel of the said corporation. William Buckby, esq. now recorder, shall be continued in the said office for life. Edmund Bromwich, now deputy recorder, shall be and remain clerk of the peace and deputy recorder for life; and he, so nominated, and all clerks of the peace, and deputy recorders hereafter, prior to being admitted into those offices, shall take the oath for their due execution before the bailiff and recorder, or either of them. No recorder to be chosen or constituted shall enter into office until approved by the king. And these letters patent, or the inrollment thereof, and all clauses and grants in the same, shall be firm, valid, and effectual, in all things, and shall be construed and adjudged in all courts of judicature favorably to the said body corporate against the king, notwithstanding any uncertainty or imperfection contained therein.

On the 26th of September in the 28th year of this reign (1676) the bailiff, recorder, and burgesses, in pursuance of the power vested in them by these charters, established a body of orders, laws, and statutes, commonly called the "Constitutions," which were subsequently ratified and approved by the judges of assize, and are still the standing by-laws of the corporation.

RECORDERS. JOHN DAFFORN, gent. was appointed recorder for life by the charter in 1576.

Thomas Thornton, esq. of NEWNHAM, occurs in 1595 and 1601. He survived till 1632, but

Richard Raynsford, esq. of DALLINGTON, occurs in 1630. He officiated as recorder in 1667, when baron of the exchequer. Whether he retained the office after his elevation to the chief justiceship of the king's bench does not appear. His son-in-law,

William Buckby, esq. sergeant at law, who resided here, occurs in 1683. He died 30 Nov. 1685, and

Robert Skinner, esq. was appointed in 1686. He died 20 Mar. 1697-8; and on the 24th

Robert Breton, esq. of TETON, was elected. On his death in Jan. 1714-5,

Toby Chauncey, esq. of EDGCOTE, was appointed. He died 27 Mar. 1733, and

Edward Cuthbert, esq. was elected the next day. He died 8 June 1741, and was succeeded by William Yorke, esq. who resigned in Feb. 1742-3, on being appointed a justice of the common pleas in Ireland; and

Thomas Caldecot, junior, esq. was elected on the 21st of the same month. He died 3 Sept. 1774; and on the 7th,

Simon Adams, esq. then of EAST HADDON, and afterwards of Anstey near Coventry, was elected. He died 10 Mar. 1801, when

James Raymond, esq. was appointed; on whose resignation,

Henry Barne Sawbridge, esq. of EAST HADDON, was elected 4 July 1803. He resigned 13 Jan. 1821; and on the 16th,

John Adams, esq. son of the above Simon Adams, was elected.

The present deputy recorder and town clerk is Edmund Singer Burton, gent.

THE SEAL of the borough, instead of arms, has a man with an axe on his right shoulder standing against a tree; being evidently a rebus on the traditional etymology and common pronunciation of the name of Dane-tree. It is dated 1595, and circumscribed SIGILLUM COMUNE BURGI DE DANETRE. N. S.

THE MOOT HALL formerly stood in the area of the High-street adjoining the Market-hill, into which it admitted only a narrow and inconvenient entrance. According to the laws of Edward the confessor, the mot-bel, or bell of meeting, was to be rung in cases of danger to convene the people; and hence in later times the place where the view of frank pledge or court leet was held has not been unfrequently called the mot or moot-hall. The manor of Daventry belonged to the crown when the first charter was obtained from queen Elizabeth, and she ordains that "the Moot Hall within the borough shall be the common place" for holding the corporation courts; but prior to the present charter from king Charles the 2nd, the manor had been granted out, and the Moot Hall being consequently no longer at the disposal of the crown, the corporation are simply directed to "meet at the Moot Hall or any other convenient place." The market, and St. Augustine's fair, were also appendant to the manor, and from the period of alienation by the crown were held, with the moot hall, by the corporation, from the lord, on successive leases varying in rent (two of which have been incidentally noticed in a preceding page), till 1806, when, under the authority of a provision in the act for paving and lighting the town, the moot hall was purchased of John Plomer Clarke, esq. for £900, with a reservation of right to him and every future lord to hold the court leet any where within the manor, except or instead of the moot hall, "notwithstanding any custom or usage to the contrary." The moot hall was taken down, but the corporation very judiciously abandoned their original intention of re-building, and purchased a respectable house on the north side of the market hill, which has been neatly fitted up for holding the borough sessions and other corporate meetings.

ANNALS. Daventry may probably date its origin from the decline of a neighbouring british, or roman station, or both, which in a future page will be conjecturally placed at BOROUGH HILL. It had risen to a considerable degree of local importance in the fourteenth century; for in 20 Edw. 3 (1346), when only seven places in this county were of consequence sufficient to be required to contribute recruits for the king's expedition against France after the dispersion of his navy by a tempest, "Daventre" furnished three armed men for its quota[e].

Henry Spencer, the warlike bishop of Norwich, having been appointed by pope Urban the 6th to the command of a crusade against the antipope Clement the 7th, landed in Flanders in 7 Ric. 2 (1383), and overrun the country; till, being opposed by the whole force of the king of France, he retreated to Gravelines, concluded a truce for a month, and dispatched a letter to the king, representing his perilous situation, and urging instant succour. Never were Richard's characteristic hastiness, irresolution, and procrastination, more strikingly displayed. The messenger found him at supper at Daventry, probably in the priory, as he was then making a progress to various religious houses. He spurned the table from him in a rage, started up, and, breathing vengeance against the French king, called for his horse, and rode furiously towards London. It was midnight when he reached St. Alban's, and finding no change of horse there, he borrowed a palfrey of the abbot to relieve his jaded steed. Fatigued with his journey, he retired to rest on his arrival in town; but when he rose, his ardour had cooled, he hesitated, and eventually shrunk from the exertion or danger of a personal enterprize. The duke of Lancaster was then delegated to the service, but so tardy were the preparations, that the truce had expired before he set sail, and the bishop was compelled to submit to the terms of the enemy, and embark for England with the wreck of his army[f].

In the memorable assessment for ship money in the reign of Charles the 1st (1636), the borough of Daventry was charged at £50 for its share of the £6000 levied on this county[g]. During the civil commotions which succeeded, and were partly attributable to that unpopular measure, this town became the frequent scene of military operations.

[e] Rymer's Fœdera, 5. p. 493. [f] Walsing. Hist. Angl. (edit. 1574), p. 329. [g] Duke of Buckingham's MSS. at Stowe.

On the 26th of February 1644-5, sir William and sir Charles Compton, brothers of the earl of Northampton, with 300 horse, routed 400 of the parliamentary horse from Northampton near Daventry, killed 13 men, wounded several, took 36 prisoners and 50 horses, with a considerable store of arms[h].

The king having taken Leicester by storm (31 May 1645), marched towards Oxford, which was then closely besieged, and on the 7th of June arrived at Daventry, where he fixed his head quarters[i], and slept at the Wheatsheaf six nights[k]. The infantry were stationed in the field; and the horse-guards at Staverton and the adjacent villages. His army consisted of about 10,000 men, in nearly equal proportion of cavalry and infantry[l], with 14 pieces of ordnance and about 200 carriages[m]. A convoy of 1200 horse was immediately dispatched to guard the cattle collected out of Leicestershire and Northamptonshire by the foraging parties for the relief of Oxford[n]; but on the 9th, probably before the seasonable supply reached its destination, Fairfax had, in pursuance of express orders from the parliament, raised the siege. In the confident anticipation, if not after the actual receipt, of this welcome intelligence, the king addressed the following letter to his secretary of state, sir Edward Nicholas.

Daintry, 9 June 1645.

"I have receaved so many letters from you that I believe none of them ar miscaried, & this morning one from you of the 7; & wth it one of the same date from all my commissioners except Southampton, & Dorset, by wch I perceave they were not so much stressed by the Seige as the rest: but the cheefe end of this is, by you to send this inclosed to his 454: tell 394: that I have receaved 165 of the $\frac{14}{20}$ of May, but would not stay this Messenger untill it was desyfered: I will say no more now, but if we Peripatetiques get no more mischances then you Oxfordians ar lyke to have this Somer, we may all expect probably a merry Winter. So I rest

"Your most assecured frend CHARLES R.[o]"

The editor of Evelyn's memoirs, in a note subjoined to the above letter, observes, that "a letter written by his Majesty, on this day, to the Queen, was intercepted by the emissaries of the Parliament. In it, he assured her that the Rebels had been forced to raise the siege of Oxford, in consequence of his march after the taking of Leicester; and that quarrels were then very frequent between Fairfax's and Cromwell's soldiers. He also observed that his affairs were never in so hopeful and so fair away; adding, in the tenderest manner, that all he wished for, in case of eventual success, was the undisturbed enjoyment of her society!" On the 10th Fairfax had advanced with his army to Newport Pagnell in Buckinghamshire, from whence he sent a trumpeter to the royal camp for an exchange of prisoners. The king's guards were the same day removed to Willoughby in Warwickshire, about four miles distant[p]. In reply to a communication from his council of state, the king wrote again to sir Edward Nicholas from

Daintry, 11 June 1645.

"NICHOLAS, at the letter & message w^ch^

The next day (the 12th), a skirmishing party of Fairfax's horse took some prisoners, and an alarm being given to the king, who was hunting a buck within two miles of Daventry, the whole army was encamped on Becon hill [Borough hill], and stood under arms all night. Early in the morning (the 13th), the convoy to Oxford, for the return of which the king lingered here so long, having arrived, the king commenced his march northwards, and rested that night at Lubbenham near Market Harborough[r]. In the meantime Fairfax was no stranger to his movements. He rode out from his head-quarters about midnight to reconnoitre, and between three and four o'clock in the morning, when within a mile and a half of Flore, where the king kept a guard of horse, he discerned the royalists marching rapidly from Borough hill, and perceived that they had fired their huts—a proof of their having finally left them. He reached the camp again about five o'clock, and the news he brought was speedily confirmed by general Watson, the scout-master, and four or five spies, who added that the king's carriages were gone in the direction of Harborough. At this critical moment Cromwell made his appearance with a reinforcement of 600 horse, and it was immediately determined that the main body should endeavour to flank the enemy, whilst major Harrison, with one detachment of horse, went towards Daventry to obtain more accurate information of their motions; and colonel Ireton, with another strong party, was employed to seek out and fall upon their rear[s]. Ireton surprised some of the royal troops just as they had entered their quarters for the night, and having taken several prisoners, those who fled conveyed the tidings to the king, who hurried from Lubbenham to Harborough, where the van of his army was stationed, summoned a council of war at 2 o'clock in the morning (the 14th), and, sacrificing the cooler judgment of his more experienced officers to the rash impetuosity of prince Rupert, adopted the fatal resolution which within a few hours issued in his irreparable defeat at Naseby.

The influence of superstition, and its application to political events, is strikingly exemplified in an anecdote recorded of the king, during his stay at Daventry, by a Mr. Savage, in his MS. entitled "Coritani Lacrymantes," and which I shall introduce in the narrator's own words, after premising that the time of its occurrence must have been antedated a few days, for the circumstance of the king halting at Daventry, and victualling Oxford from thence, sufficiently proves that the intention of engaging the enemy could not have been entertained before the abandonment of Oxford by Fairfax, and his subsequent approach to the royal army; and admitting the veracity of the extraordinary narrative, the supernatural agency may not improbably be referred, either to mental delusion occasioned by a dream, or to some adventurous and loyal individual assuming the voice and disguise of lord Strafford, in order the more powerfully to work on the king's feelings, and divert him from his purpose. "The "armie, consisting of less than 5000 foot and about as many horse, were ordered to Daintree, whither the king "went with a thorough resolution of fighting. The next day, however, to the surprise of prince Rupert and all the "rest of the armie, this design was given up, and the former one of going to the North resumed. The occasion of "this alteration was said to be presages of ill fortune which the king received, and which were related to me by a "person of Newark, att that time in his majestie's horse. About two hours after the king had retired to rest, "some of his attendants, hearing an uncommon noise in his chamber, went into it; where they found his majestie "setting up in his bed, and much agitated; but nothing which could have produced the noise they fancied they "heard. The king, in a trembling, enquired after the cause of their alarm, and told them how much he had been "agitated in a dream, by thinking he saw the apparition of lord Strafford; who, after upbraiding him with "unkindness, told him that he was come to return him good for evil; and that he advised him by no means to "fight the Parliament armie that was at that time quartered at Northampton, for in it was one whom the king "should never conquer by arms. Prince Rupert, in whom courage was the predominant qualitie, rated the king "out of his approbation the next day, and a resolution was again taken to meet the enemie. The next night, "however, the apparition appeared to him a second time, but with looks of anger assured him that would be the "last advice he should be permitted to give him; but that, if he kept his resolution of fighting, he was undone.

"If his majestie had taken the advice of the friendly ghost, and marched Northward the next day, where the "Parliament had few English forces, and where the Scots were becoming very discontented, his affairs might "probably still have had a prosperous issue; or if he had marched immediately into the West to join the lord "Goringe, who had there a good bodie of horse, he might afterwards have fought on more equal terms. But the "king, fluctuating between the apprehensions of his imagination and the reproaches of his courage, remained "another whole day at Daintree in a state of inactivitie. At length, the former got the better, and on the 13th "[12th] of June he determined to march northward the next day. Att night word was brought that the enemie "were within eight miles. Still, however, keeping his resolution, they marched the next morning, but had not got "far before the armie under Fairfax were upon their rear. There was now no alternative. The king made a "judicious disposition of his little force; but was beat by the intemperate pursuit of a part of the enemy's left "wing by prince Rupert. This was called the battle of Naseby, fought on the 14th of June 1645, which put the "finishing stroke to the king's affairs. After this he never could get together an armie fit to look the enemie in the "face. He was often heard to say that he wished he had taken the warning, and not fought at Naseby; the "meaning of which nobody knew but those to whom he told this appearance at Daintree; and they were all of them "afterwards charged to conceal it."

In the interval between the death of Cromwell and the restoration, general Lambert was one of the leading members of the military council, called the Wallingford cabal. He opposed the entrance of general Monk with the Scotch army into England; but, his troops deserting him, he failed in the attempt, and was committed to the Tower. The long Parliament, under the influence of Monk, dissolved themselves in March 1660; a council of state was appointed, and writs were issued for a free parliament; but before it assembled Lambert effected his escape[t] (April 11th); and had he prudently remained in concealment till he had matured his plans, and perfected his communications with the officers in his interest, a totally different turn might have been given to the national affairs. His confederates, after arranging with him two places of rendezvous, the first at Daventry and the second in Oxfordshire, dispersed themselves into different counties to collect and organise the scattered regiments[u]. What was his ultimate object, or whether he had any settled one, is very problematical: when general Ludlow made the inquiry of major Whitby, who was deputed to solicit his co-operation, the wary reply was, "it is not a "time now to declare what we will be for, but what we will be against—the torrent of popery and tyranny ready to "break in upon us[u]." Impatient of delay, and calculating on a speedy accession of strength when his standard was raised, Lambert prematurely emerged from his retreat, and made his appearance at Daventry with six troops of horse, accompanied by colonels Okey, Axtell, and Cobbett, lieutenant colonel Young, major Creed (of Oundle), and captains Clare, Gregory, and Spinage[t]. Meanwhile, Monk and the council, aware of the disaffected spirit which had been infused into the army by the republicans, who, suspecting the intended recall of Charles the 2nd, dreaded the royal resentment, were thrown into the utmost consternation on learning that Lambert had regained his liberty. They were however speedily apprised of his intended movements by a gentleman of Buckinghamshire, to whom he imparted them, and who betrayed his confidence[u]. Colonel Ingoldsby, who, though one of the regicides, was now devoted to and trusted by Monk, had orders from him to use all possible speed in marching his regiment of horse to Northampton, where he arrived on Easter eve (Apr. 21)[x] and found there colonel Streater with several companies of foot, and the earl of Exeter with about one hundred horse, principally gentlemen of the county. The trained bands of the town were also in arms to defend it; colonel Streater purposing to beat up Lambert's quarters that night, and if necessary to mount 400 of his infantry on the horses brought to the town in readiness for the fair on Monday[x]. An advanced guard under captain Elsmore accidentally encountered captain Haslerigge, son of sir Arthur, and carried him before Ingoldsby, to whom he pleaded that being dissatisfied with Lambert's designs, he had already quitted him; but Ingoldsby refused to release him on any other condition than his endeavouring to bring over his troop, which he promised to do, and was permitted to retire on his parole[x]. The next morning, Easter Sunday, colonels Ingoldsby and Streater proceeded to Daventry. Lambert, though unsuspicious of pursuit, had left before they entered; but tracing his course they came up with him in an open field where a small brook flowed between them. At, or just before this time, Haslerigge's cornet and quartermaster, with his troop, as stipulated by their captain, deserted from Lambert, who, disheartened by this defection and the numerical superiority of his opponents, desired an armistice, and proposed to Ingoldsby to reinstate Richard Cromwell in the protectorship, offering to unite all his credit to the support of that interest. The overture was rejected, and the two hostile bodies prepared for action. Ingoldsby was going to charge, when Streater ordered six files of musqueteers to advance: one file gave fire, and wounded one or two horses; but the drums beat, and Streater, placing himself at their head, strictly commanded them not to fire again till they were within a pike's length of their enemy. Lambert's men, instead of commencing the attack, pointed the muzzles of their pistols to the ground; and Nelthorp, with his troop, following Haslerigge's example, and passing over to the other party. Ingoldsby ventured to ride up to Lambert and proclaim him his prisoner. Creed and several other officers offered to yield themselves unconditionally to Ingoldsby, if he would suffer their leader to escape; but he was inexorable. Lambert then finding his only chance of safety was in flight, turned round and galloped off at speed; but Ingoldsby, who had kept his eyes steadily fixed on him, and was equally well mounted, instantly pursued, and threatened to shoot him if he did not surrender. In vain he made the appeal to his antagonist, "What good will my life or imprisonment do you?" His importunity was unavailing, and he reluctantly submitted, as did all his officers, except Okey, Axtel, and Clare, who escaped. Ingoldsby returned to London in triumph with his prisoners, and Lambert was committed a second time to the Tower, where he remained till June 1662, when he was brought to trial and condemned, but reprieved for perpetual banishment to the isle of Guernsey. The roads were full of troops flocking to join Lambert at the time of his defeat, but not a blow was struck afterwards. Monk, whose conduct till then had been veiled in the most impenetrable mystery, openly declared for the king; and being warmly seconded by the new parliament, his majesty on his birth-day (May 29th) made his public entry into London[x]. It is not a little remarkable, or at least deserves notice from the local historian, that the battle which decided the fate of the first Charles, and the last struggle of the interregnum, which terminated in the restoration of the second Charles, both took place in this county, and within a few miles of Daventry.

The Town of Daventry is 12 miles west of Northampton, 20 miles from Warwick, or Coventry, and is the intermediate stage between Towcester, in this county, and Dunchurch in Warwickshire, on the great road from London to Chester. It is a neat well-built town, approached by an ascent from every entrance, though nearly encompassed at no great distance by hills of greater elevation. The two principal streets are High-street and Sheaf-street. The latter is traversed by the Chester road, and the lower part is called the Brook end, by which name it occurs at an early but undated period, when there was also a cross in the middle of the town[y], long since destroyed, and the site forgotten. Near the centre of Sheaf-street branches off High-street, which is broad and well paved, and has several respectable houses. The eastern extremity was formerly almost blocked up by the old Moot hall, but its removal in 1806 has opened an unobstructed communication into the Market-place, a small irregular square, from which diverges two or three inferior streets. An act of parliament passed 46 Geo. 3 (1806), for paving, cleansing, lighting, and watching the town of Daventry; for regulating the market there; and for enabling the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough to purchase the Moot hall, and re-build the same. So far as relates to paving and lighting, it has been only partially carried into execution. The town is supplied with water from a spring on the south-west side of Borough hill, where a conduit was begun in 1690 and completed in 1706, from which time the works have been held on lease under the lord of the manor.

The Market has been immemorially appendant to the manor. The jurors of Fawsley hundred, about 40 Hen. 3 (1255-6), presented that the lord of Daventry had a market at "Davintr'," and that the merchants or traders there, who lived by their merchandize, were quit of the hundred, and of the toll of "Tonnuebrei" (Tunbridge)—the head of the honor of Gloucester[z]. In an inquisition of the privileges of Northampton, 3 Edw. 1 (1275), the jurors certified, that notwithstanding it was ordained that no market should be established within ten miles, yet (int. al.) Robert Fitz Walter held one at "Davintr'" to the detriment of the king and the whole commonalty of Northampton; but the amount of damage, or from what time, or by what authority it was supported, they knew not[a]. It first appears from the quo warranto, 3 Edw. 3 (1329), already referred to in the manorial history, that the market was held weekly on Wednesday, on which day it still continues.

Fairs. Nine annual fairs are held here, viz. first Monday in January; last Monday in February; Easter Tuesday; June 6th and 7th; August 3; first Monday in September; October 2nd and 3rd; October 27th; and last Wednesday in November. Augustine's fair, now held by the alteration of style on the 6th and 7th of June, is probably coeval with the market, and with it belongs to the lord of the manor, as do all the others, except the February, Easter, September, and first October fairs. The February and Easter fairs (the latter partly for cheese) were granted to the corporation, for two days each, by queen Elizabeth's charter. The October fair having increased to such a degree as to occasion considerable inconvenience, has been recently extended to two days, the first for cheese, onions, &c. and the second for live stock. The Easter, June, and October fairs are also frequented for pleasure; and those which have not been particularly noticed above are exclusively for the sale of cattle and horses. There is no statute kept for hiring of servants, but two mops, as they are termed, are held for that purpose on the two Wednesdays following old Michaelmas day.

Bridges says, 'Daventre is a town incorporate, having in it 292 houses, and is so well peopled, that some of 'them are inhabited by two or three families[b].' By the census of 1801 it contained (including the hamlet of Drayton, which in the time of Bridges consisted of twenty-nine houses) 503 houses, occupied by 526 families and 2582 inhabitants; by that of 1811, 534 houses, occupied by 628 families and 2758 inhabitants; and by that of 1821, 639 houses, occupied by 650 families and 3326 inhabitants. The annual quota of land tax for this parish is £474. 0s. 8d. at 4s. in the £. The estimated value of real property, as assessed to the property tax of £10 per cent. for the year ending April 1815, amounted to £10,287. The poor's rates for the year ending Easter 1820, including Drayton, raised £2054, at 6s. 6d. in the £. The wake follows the Holy Cross, but has not been observed of late years.

Deanry. Daventry is the head of a deanry co-extensive with the hundred of Fawsley; but it may be remarked, that Hellidon is omitted in all the ecclesiastical surveys.

The Advowson has been anticipated in the account of the priory.

The Rectory was valued in the taxations of 1254 (38 Hen. 3)[c], and of 1291 (20 Edw. 1)[d], at 28 marks (£18. 13s. 4d.) per ann. deducting an annual pension of one mark (13s. 4d.) to the prior of Ware out of the chapel of Welton. At the ecclesiastical survey of 1535 (26 Hen. 8), the rectory and vicarage of Daventry, both of which were impropriate, belonged to St. Frideswide's college (king Henry the eighth's) in Oxford, and were let to farm at £40 per ann.[e] The impropriate rectory is included in the general estate allotted to the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, by the commissioners under the two respective acts for the inclosure of Daventry and Drayton; of which upwards of 100 acres have been sold to the Grand Junction Canal company; and the remainder is vested in the lessee of the dean and chapter.

The Vicarage or Perpetual Curacy is in the deanry of Daventry. This church was early appropriated to the prior and convent, 'and the vicarage ordained in the time of Hugh Wells[f],' bishop of Lincoln from 1209 to 1234. Dominus Johannes (Newbaut) Vicar of "Davintr," attested the agreement between the prior and Robert Fitz Walter in 1284[g]; and on his decease probably the benefice was disappropriated, and converted again into a rectory, for no vicarage is recorded in the taxation of 1291. Bishop John (Dalderby), in the ordination of the second vicarage, dated at "Keldesby" (Kilsby) in 1301, decrees that the vicar shall have, in the name of his vicarage, necessary food in the priory for himself and his boy-servant, with due lodging, and a mark (13s. 4d.) annually for his stipend, and mortuaries not exceeding sixpence, but those beyond that sum shall be equally divided between the monks and the vicar: he shall have also all his demands or dues ("petitiones"), and the missal pence (or offerings at mass) for all the parish of Daventre, except in Welton, with a competent manse (or vicarage house) outside the priory gate: the monks shall provide a deacon (or person in half orders) to assist the vicar, and shall sustain all the burdens (synodals, &c.) of the church. But the vicar shall have a chaplain associated with him to minister daily in the chapel of Welton, which chaplain shall have land to the value of three marks (£2) assigned to him in a certain place, and his demands or dues and missal pence and mortuaries not exceeding six pence; and those beyond that sum shall be divided between the monks and the chaplain, and the chaplain shall have the confessions in the said vill[h]. A third endowment, in Nov. 1321, by bishop Henry (Burghersh), states, that two chaplains are necessary for the vicarage of Daventry with the chapel of Welton, and recites verbatim and confirms the last endowment, except in the separate provision for the chaplain of Welton, which is wholly omitted and of course annulled[i]. 'The bishops of Lincoln instituted to the vicarage the clerks, 'whom the prior and convent presented[k]; but in the year 1432 a new ordination was made by William Gray, bishop 'of Lincoln, and the church thenceforward supplied by vicars from the convent, without either institution or 'induction.' Two institutions to the "vicarage of Daventry" are found in the registers of the bishopric of Peterborough; one in 1623 and the other in 1631. The parliamentary commissioners in 1655 certified it to be a vicarage worth £40 per ann. in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Christ Church college in Oxford; that Samuel Craftes was incumbent; that the church was near two miles distant from any other; and they humbly conceived it "convenyent" to have an augmentation granted to the minister, it being a great market town[l]. Richard Farmer, of Daventry, gent. by will, in 1662, settled an annual rent-charge of £30 out of the college estate of which he was lessee, to the bailiff and three senior burgesses, in trust, to pay two parts thereof to the vicar of Daventry and his successors, and distribute the other third part among the poor of the parish at their discretion. In the act for inclosing Drayton in 1752, the lessee of the rectory of the parish of Daventry with Drayton, under the dean and chapter of Christ Church, was stated to be entitled to the tithes of corn and grain, and the rev. James Affleck, "minister, vicar, or curate," of the said parish, to all other tithes and ecclesiastical dues within the hamlet of Drayton; and accordingly the allotment (already mentioned) was made to the former in satisfaction of his right, and an allotment of 50 a. 3 r. 15 p. to the latter, in lieu of all tithes due to him, except those arising out of gardens or orchards made, or hereafter to be made, in the ancient homesteads or homecloses: but in the act for inclosing Daventry in 1802, the dean and chapter are said to be seised of the rectory and vicarage impropriate of the parish, and in right thereof to all tithes both great and small within the parish and liberties, except in Drayton (exonerated by the preceding act) and a piece of ground called Common Leys: the allotment (already mentioned) was therefore made for their lessee of the impropriate rectory, and an allotment of 127 a. 0 r. 7 p. for the impropriate vicarage, under the title of tithes not in lease was awarded to themselves, and is assigned by them to the use of the perpetual curate.

The curate had no house for his residence, but a payment of £8 per ann. from the lessee till the year 1788, when the dean and chapter assigned a cottage with a garden and close for his use, and expended about £400 in improving the premises, so as to secure a permanent and convenient habitation for him. Upon the inclosure in 1802 a better situation presented itself, and by means of an exchange under the act of parliament, the curate's habitation was removed to its present place on the south side of the church-yard, which is in every respect commodious and agreeable, and has been very much improved by the present incumbent. It is not however so annexed to the curacy as to have become, in the modern phrase, the glebe house. It does really belong to the dean and chapter, and is specially excepted for the use of the curate in the lease which they grant of their estate in the parish.

INCUMBENTS. When Hugh de Leycestre removed his priory here from Preston, soon after the norman conquest, this church was supplied by four secular canons, each of whom had his separate prebend or allowance out of its revenues. Two of them were induced to take the monastic habit and enter the convent, but the other two refused, and with the permission of the patron retained their secular prebends for life[a]. How long this peculiar constitution of the benefice continued cannot be traced, but

Henry de Navesby, the first incumbent who has been retrieved, was instituted by Hugh Wells, bishop of Lincoln between 1209 and 1235, on the presentation of the prior and convent.

William, about 1260.

Ascer de Standeford, priest, 12 June 1265.

Henry de Daventre, chaplain, 20 Sept. 1293.

Thomas le Spicer, about 1341.

Philip de Muston, priest, 15 Mar. 1345-6.

Simon Baxtere of Daventre, priest, 28 June 1359.

Peter de Longdon, who resigned for the vicarage of Norton in 1361.

William Yong of Flore, priest, 29 Sept. 1361.

William Prees of Daventre, priest, 24 Mar. 1395-6.

Sir Philip Kyrkeby, priest, 27 May 1406. He resigned for the vicarage of West Haddon, and was succeeded by Thomas Nassyngton, priest, 16 Feb. 1422-3. On his resignation,

John White, priest, 13 Oct. 1428. His resignation introduced the rector of Islip,

William Dyce, priest, 26 Aug. 1431. He resigned, and Henry Hervey, priest, succeeded 30 May 1435. He is the last vicar whose institution can be found in the episcopal registers at Lincoln. From his time the prior and monks nominated one of their own body to serve the cure, who being debarred by the vow of poverty from the personal application of the revenue of his benefice, it was thrown into the common stock of the convent. This practice, thus established, operated as a precedent after the dissolution, and the absence of episcopal institutions occasions an hiatus in the names of the incumbents till the commencement of the present parochial registers in 1560, when

Thomas Mariatt occurs, who died 21 Mar. 1615-6, and was buried here the following day[b].

Richard Mariatt occurs in 1617[b].

Nicholas Cartmell, A. M. instituted to the "vicarage "of Daventre" 10 Mar. 1622-3, on the presentation of the king by lapse[c].

Robert Ladbroke signs the parish register in 1630[b], and Simon Wastell (of whom some account will be given under NORTHAMPTON) in 1631[b].

Thomas Easton, A. M. was instituted to the "vicarage "of Daintre alias Daventree" 22 Sept. 1631, on the presentation of the dean and chapter of Christ Church, Oxford, vice the last incumbent, resigned[c]. He died in 1635, and was succeeded by

John Wheatley 1637[b].

William Loveledge 1638 and 1639[b].

Richard Farmer, probably the same person who was rector of Charwelton. He was buried here 27 Feb. 1648-9[b], and succeeded by

Samuel Crofts[b], called Craftes in the parliamentary survey. During his incumbency, Timothy Dod, son of the celebrated John Dod of Fawsley, was publicly ordained in this town, and appointed afternoon lecturer, for which service the inhabitants raised him an annual salary of £40, a sum equal to the estimated value of the living. He was a popular preacher, but towards the close of his ministry, became so corpulent that he could not get into the pulpit, and was obliged to officiate in a pew. After the restoration in 1660 he retired to private life and was much respected, being of an humble affable disposition, though tinctured with melancholy. On the approach of the plague in this place he removed to Everdon, where he died in 1665, as appears from a brief memorial of him in the chancel. Mr. Crofts was buried here 19 Dec. 1666[b], and

John Frauncis signs the register in 1667[b]. He was buried here 3 Mar. 1686-7[b]. His successor was

Charles Allestree[b], A. M. vicar of Cassington near Woodstock in Oxfordshire, son of William Allestree, of Derby, gent. He published a sermon preached at Oxford 26 July 1685, being the day of the thanksgiving for the defeat of Monmouth's rebellion; on Judges 5. v. 31. Oxon, 1685. 4to. The desire of all men: a sermon preached at Daventry March 5, 1694-5 (being the day of interment of the late queen), before the bailiff and burgesses of the said corporation and other gentlemen of the county, and published at their request; on Numbers 23. v. 10. London, 1694-5. 4to. The life of Eumenes, translated from the lives of illustrious men by Cornelius Nepos. Oxon, 1684. 8vo. He was buried here 28 Mar. 1707[b].

Samuel Hartman, A. M. his successor, was buried here 22 June 1716[b].

William Tayler, A. M. master of the free grammar school in this town was appointed in 1717. He was rector of Staverton from 1723 to 1726, and obtained the rectory of Malpas in Cheshire in 1728, which he continued to hold with this benefice, but resigned the free-school in 1732. He died at Bath 11 July 1750, and was succeeded here by James Affleck, A.M. who in 1757 was instituted to the vicarage of Finedon; both which livings, with a prebend in the cathedral of York, he enjoyed till his death in Nov. 1784. He was succeeded by Alexander Akehurst, A.M. whose resignation in 1789 introduced

Samuel Humfrays, A.M. 1780, B.D. 1791. He published a pamphlet entitled "Observations on the illegality of Sunday Feasts;" Northampton, 8vo: which he afterwards re-printed under the altered title of "Reflections on the profanation of the Sabbath, in the "annual Feasts held on that sacred day." Northampton, 8vo. "The sword is the Lord's; a sermon preached at Daventry 19 Jan. 1794." Northampton, 8vo. He was ouried here 27 Feb. 1795[p], and the vacancy was supplied in May ollowing by Samuel Smith, A.M. eldest son of the late rev. Dr. Smith, master of Westminster school. He has since proceeded B.D. and D.D.; prebendary of Southwell in Nottinghamshire, 1800; of York, 1801; chaplain to the House of Commons, 1802; canon of Christ Church, Oxford, 1807; rector of Dry Drayton in Cambridgeshire, 1808; and Dean of Christ Church, 1824.

The Communion Plate consists of a silver paten and chalice, two large silver flagons, two silver plates for the alms, and a small paten and chalice for the communion of the sick.

The Old Church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, was taken down in 1752; but, judging from the engravings of it in Bridges, and in Buck's views, the antiquary has no reason to regret its demolition. Bridges describes it as consisting 'of a body, north and south ile, leaded. Part of the body is allotted for a chancel, and inclosed with a 'wainscot partition, and the roof of it is repaired by Mr. Farmer of Kingsthorp, who owns the site of the priory. 'The steeple is built with a tower, with a pinnacle and weather-cock at each corner, and is taken out of the north 'ile. The number of bells which hang in it is five. Upon the first and fifth is inscribed Nicholas Salter Bayliffe 'of Dantre the 4th of June 1596. The second hath inscribed on it ✠BROSE[q].' These gave place to a peal of eight bells cast by Mr. Eayre of Kettering in 1738. 'The length of the church is sixty foot two inches; the 'breadth fifty four foot two inches. The length of the chancel is twenty seven foot eleven inches; the breadth of 'it twenty three foot. The whole length of church and chancel is eighty eight foot one inch. The tower is four-'teen foot long, and seventeen broad[q].'

The present Church is a handsome edifice from a design by Mr. Hiorn of Warwick. The first stone was laid 8 April 1752, and it appears by the vestry book 9 Nov. 1758, that the whole expence, including hanging the bells, clock, and chimes, amounted to £3486. 2s. 5½d. There are no entrances, except at the west end, where the vestibule is the width of the front, and is divided into three entrances corresponding with the nave and aisles. The nave and aisles are 69 ft. 7 in. long; the nave 23 ft. 4 in. and each of the aisles 14 ft. 5 in. wide; and the chancel 16 ft. 4 in. long, by 24 ft. 3 in. wide. The interior is very neatly fitted up, and has north, south, and west galleries. The nave is divided from both aisles by four lofty doric pillars supporting low circular arches and a coved roof. In the east chancel window are introduced the arms, supporters, crest, and motto of the earl of Winchilsea, then lord of the manor, quartering within the garter, 1. G. three lions rampant O. Fitzherbert; 2. G. a mule passant within a border Ar. Moyle; 3. O. a greyhound courant S. between three leopards' heads Az. within a border engrailed G. Heneage. GUILD. There was a guild or fraternity in the chapel of the holy Trinity, but when, or by whom founded is not known. On the dissolution of chantries John Chamberleyne, the officiating priest, had an annual pension of £5 allowed him, and which he continued to enjoy in 1553 s.

NONCONFORMITY took early root in this parish. After the Bartholomew-act in 1662, secret meetings for worship were frequently held late at night, and conducted only occasionally by ministers, at a house in the hamlet of Drayton, in which was a back door opening into the fields, to facilitate retreat in case of detection—no unnecessary precaution in those days of persecution.

The immediate rise of the present congregation is thus related by Dr. Ashworth, as communicated to him about the year 1747 by Mr. Thomas Porter, one of the members, then upwards of 80 years of age. "An aged minister, "who lived some considerable distance beyond Daventry, in his way to London lay at the Swan inn (formerly the "principal inn) in this town, where he was taken ill and confined for a week or longer. Mr. Lindsay, who kept "the house, and all his family, behaved to him with much kindness, and it appears to have been a remarkably "regular house. The minister, on the evening before he departed, desired the family to come into his room, "where he particularly thanked Mr. Lindsay and each of his family for their civility to him, and expressed much "satisfaction in the good order of the house; but, said he, something leads me to fear there is not the fear of "God in this house. It grieves me to see such honesty, civility, economy, and decency, and yet Religion is "wanting, which is the one thing needful. On this he entered into a close conversation with them on the nature "and importance of real and inward Religion, which he closed with telling them he had with him a little book, "lately printed, which he would give them, and wished them to read it carefully. On which he gave them "Baxter's poor man's family book. This fixes the date to 1672, or later, the year in which that book was printed. "It is not certain who the minister was, or that Mr. Lindsay ever saw him again, or knew his name, but it is "suspected that it was Baxter himself. Mr. Lindsay read the book with pleasure, sent for others of Mr. Baxter's "books, and he and some of his children became excellent characters. Upon this he grew weary of the inn, "and, being in plentiful circumstances, retired to a house in the middle of the High street *, which had a small

s Br. Willis's Abbies, 2. p. 162. * Now in possession of Mr. Mollady, hat manufacturer.

"close behind it, at the extremity of which, upon the Back lane [opposite the Inlands], there stood some out-"buildings, which he converted into a Meeting house. The people enjoyed it during his life, having now got a "settled minister, and formed [themselves] into a church. This was probably after the revolution. He always "intended, and often promised to settle it in form; but dying suddenly it never was done. The heir at law was "well inclined to it, but melancholy; so that the people durst not trust to a settlement from him. At length they "purchased it of those in whom it was vested, repaired it, and it continued to be used till 1722, when Mr. Mattock, "then the minister at Daventry, built the present place." The original licence granted to Mr. Lindsey, or, as he is there called, "Linzey," in pursuance of the royal declaration of indulgence, with the autographs of the king, and lord Arlington the secretary of state, is now in my possession; and being the only document of the kind known to be extant in the county, a copy of it is subjoined.

"CHARLES R.

"By His Majesties Command, ARLINGTON."

This society now ranks with the Independent or Congregational, and not the Presbyterian denomination; and the latter term, adopted in the licence, has, by an unrecorded change of discipline or church government, ceased to be applicable.

The pastoral charge of this Congregation was first undertaken, but in what year is not known, by

Andrew Barnett, of Trinity college, Cambridge, who had been ejected from the rectory of Roddington in Shropshire by the act of uniformity in 1662. He was esteemed "a solid man, and a sound preacher; and "most valued by them that knew him best." He published a funeral sermon on the death of queen Mary, from Ps. ii. 3. 4. dated Daventry, May 21, 1694, and entitled "the Helmet of Hope; Christ in us the hope "of Glory." 1694. 4to." His successor was

Thomas Flavell, eldest son of John Flavell, an eminent non-conformist divine. He was succeeded by

..... Mason, son of John Mason, the enthusiastic rector of Water Stratford in Buckinghamshire, and father of John Mason, author of the well-known treatise on Self-knowledge. He did not remain here more than a year or two, when he removed to Spaldwick in Huntingdonshire, where he died. The vacancy was supplied by John Cambden, who published "A funeral sermon "upon the death of Madam Mary Thornton, the pious "relict of the late truly virtuous and honourable John "Thornton, esq. of Brockhall in Northamptonshire. "Who departed this life June 19, 1713. Preached at "Daventry. With some account of her life." On Ps. lxxix. 48. 1714. 8vo. 2nd edition. The dedication to the lady Katherine Combs, of Daventry, (widow of sir John C. chief justice of Chester, Mrs. Thornton's son by her first husband,) has the following complimentary allusion to her liberality of sentiment: "Tis "no mean Instance at this Day, of your Ladyship's "Temper and Goodness, to take Notice of one that has "the Unhappiness not to agree with your Ladyship, "nor with the Established Church (on which your Lady-"ship reflects a great deal of Honour), in every point "and Circumstance of Worship." On his death or removal,

..... Jelly was introduced, but gave place before 1720 to

Daniel Mattock, who raised the interest so much that the old meeting house became too small, and the present one, as already stated, was erected in 1722. He had been settled here nearly 14 years, when he accepted an invitation to Birmingham, to the deep regret of the congregation, which was consigned to the neighbouring ministers, or probationary candidates, for about two years;

James Floyd, their next pastor, not being ordained till May 6, 1736. At midsummer 1746, Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Ashworth was chosen his assistant; in Sept. 1746, his co-pastor; and in a few years after, Mr. Floyd wholly resigned in favor of his colleague; but continued to reside in the town till his death 24 July 1759, in his 55th year. His successor preached his funeral sermon, and "at the desire of the family and congregation," published it, under the title of "Hope, the Christian Mourner's Relief." 8vo. 1759.

Caleb Ashworth, D. D. was born in Lancashire in 1709, and educated for the ministry at the Northampton academy under the celebrated Dr. Doddridge, who recommended him in his will for his successor; and the trustees ratifying his nomination, the academy was removed to Daventry in Nov. 1752. He was presented with an unsolicited Scotch diploma of D. D. in 1759. On the 18th of July 1775 he died of a dropsy in the chest, and was buried in the church-yard, where an altar tomb is placed to his memory. Mr. Samuel Palmer, one of the doctor's pupils, published "The "want of labourers in the gospel harvest considered and "improved;" a sermon preached at Hackney on occasion of his death. Several others, in different publications, have eulogized their tutor in the highest terms; and one of them, in a memoir of a fellow student, observes, "Dr. Ashworth was a man who, though not distinguished by that acumen of genius, and vigour of "imagination, which some have possessed, yet by strong "sense, inflexible resolution, and indefatigable labour, "acquired a store of theological learning, not often exceeded, and through a long train of years discharged "the office of Divinity Tutor, with a respectability and "a success which have seldom been equalled[t]." Dr. Ashworth was author of "Reflections on the fall of a "great man;" a funeral sermon on 2 Sam. iii. 38. for

rev. Isaac Watts, D.D. 1749. 8vo. 2nd edit. "Hope, "the christian mourner's relief;" a funeral sermon on 1 Thes. iv. 13. for rev. James Floyd. 1759. 8vo. "The "regards a christian congregation owe to their deceased "ministers represented and urged;" a funeral sermon on Hebr. xiii. 7. (preached at the Old Meeting in Birmingham) for rev. An Hebrew grammar; with complete paradigms of the verbs. An easy introduction to Plane Trigonometry. On his decease the joint charge of the congregation and academy was, by the unanimous invitation of the society, and the trustees, consigned to

Thomas Robins. He was born in 1732 at Keysoe near Bedford, and on the completion of his studies under Dr. Doddridge, settled, about 1756, at Stretton in Warwickshire; from whence he removed in 1761 to West Bromwich in Staffordshire, where he continued till 1775; when, his natural diffidence yielding to a sense of duty and the importunities of his friends, he was prevailed on to retract his first determination, and accept the double appointment to Daventry. After discharging both offices with increasing reputation and success for six years, his ministerial usefulness was suddenly destroyed by imprudently preaching three times one Sunday to a large congregation at Kettering whilst laboring under a severe cold, by which exertion he irrecoverably lost his voice; and being thus incapacitated from exercising the duties of the pulpit or the lecture room, he relinquished his public engagements, and with great humility and contentment passed the remainder of his life in the secular employments of a bookseller and druggist. He edited a judicious abridgement of Matthew Henry's MS. "treatise on Baptism." 1780; and drew up a memoir of the rev. Thomas Strange of Kilsby, which was afterwards prefixed to a volume of his posthumous sermons. He died May 20, 1810, and was buried on the 25th in the church-yard, where, on an upright stone, is recorded a high but merited eulogium on his character from the pen of his pupil and successor

Thomas Belsham, who had been assistant tutor here in metaphysics, mathematics, and natural history, till 1778, when he settled at Worcester, which he quitted in 1781, and returned to Daventry, at the solicitation of the congregation, and the trustees, in the double capacity of pastor, and principal or theological tutor. His religious views having gradually receded from calvinism to unitarianism, he honorably apprized the trustees of the change, and in 1789 resigned both the congregation and the academy. On the establishment of the new college at Hackney he was appointed professor of divinity, and retained his connexion with that institution till its dissolution in 1796. He succeeded Dr. Priestley at the Gravelpit meeting at Hackney in 1794, which he vacated in 1805 for his present situation of minister to the unitarian chapel founded by the late rev. Mr. Lindsey, in Essex-street, Strand. Besides numerous controversial tracts, and single sermons on particular occasions, he has written "Elements of the doctrine of the "human mind and of moral philosophy;" to which is prefixed a compendium of logic. 1801. 8vo. "A calm "inquiry into the scripture doctrine concerning the per-"son of Christ;" including a brief review of the controversy between Dr. Horsley and Dr. Priestley, and a summary of the various opinions entertained by christians on the subject. 1811, 8vo. "Memoirs of the late rev. "Theophilus Lindsey, M.A.; including a brief analysis "of his work; together with anecdotes and letters of "eminent persons, his friends and correspondents; "also, a general view of the progress of the unitarian "doctrine in England and America." 1812. 8vo. "The Epistles of Paul the Apostle translated, with an "exposition and notes. 1823. 4 vol. 8vo. His resignation introduced

Thomas Willis Paterson, who had recently completed his course of studies here, and who in 1796 accepted an invitation from the congregations of Bardon Park and Ashby de la Zouch in Leicestershire, when he went to reside at Donington on the Heath, where he died in Aug. 1812.

John Morell, now LL.D. and minister of the unitarian chapel at Brighton in Sussex, was chosen in 1796 or the beginning of 1797, but removed in about two years; and George Watson was appointed in October 1799. He was a native of Kettering, and entered a student of this academy in 1773; on leaving which in 1778 he settled at Horwich in Lancashire, where he continued till 1797, when he became assistant preacher to the rev. Thomas Tayler at Carter lane meeting in London; from whence he was invited to this congregation, over which he presided till 1816, when he resigned, and died at Birmingham 1 Aug. 1817, in the 66th year of his age. He published "Liberality to the poor and sick recom-"mended," in a sermon preached at Horwich for the benefit of the Manchester infirmary. Preston, 1792. 8vo. "A brief memoir of the rev. Thomas Robins, late of "Daventry; with a sketch of the sermon preached "May 26, 1810, on occasion of his death, and some "biographical additions." Lond. 1810. 8vo.

John Whittenbury, the present minister, was ordained here 8 Feb. 1818.

The congregation purchased a house in Sheaf street in 1728 for the residence of the minister, which was re-built by subscription at the time Dr. Ashworth erected the adjoining house for the academy. The minister is also entitled to £26. 9s. 9d. per ann. being the interest arising from bequests by Mr. Walsh, rev. Mr. Floyd, rev. Dr. Ashworth, and Mrs. Linnell. Mr. Walsh bequeathed the interest of £700 S. Sea Annuities, which produces £21 per ann.; but £9 only is appropriated to the minister, and the remaining £12 towards the support of a charity-school for boy and girls.

The Meeting House, which stands in the minister's yard, is approached from the street through a gateway, and is a substantial stone building, 42 ft. long, by 40 ft. wide. It is neatly pewed, and has three deep galleries, two of which have been recently added.

The Dissenting Academy, supported by the trustees of the late William Coward, esq. of London, who bequeathed a considerable fortune for the promotion of the dissenting interest, was removed to Daventry after the decease of the rev. Dr. Doddridge, and flourished there nearly forty years under the successive superintendance of the rev. Dr. Caleb Ashworth, the rev. Thomas Robins, and the rev. Thomas Belsham.

On the resignation of the latter gentleman in 1789 the institution returned to Northampton under the rev. John Horsey, who resigned in 1798; when it was transferred to Wymondley house in Hertfordshire, a large mansion, which, with a convenient quantity of land, has been since purchased by the trustees, and where it still continues. During the period of its continuance here, about two hundred and eighty divinity and lay students were admitted. The first who entered was the celebrated Dr. Priestley; and amongst those who reflected most honor on their alma mater, by eminence in religious or literary attainments, were Henry Moore, of Liskeard; Nathaniel White, of the Old Jewry, London; Radcliffe Scholefield, of Birmingham; Thomas Tayler, of Carter lane, London; Francis Webb, secretary of legation after the peace of Amiens; Richard Amner, of Hinckley; Samuel Palmer, of Hackney; William Enfield, LL.D. of Liverpool; William Bull, of Newport Pagnell; Samuel Henley, D.D. F.S.A. late principal of the East India college at Haileybury; Robert Gentleman, of Kidderminster; Habbakuk Crabb, of Royston; Thomas Belsham, afterwards Tutor; Hugh Worthington, of Salters' Hall, London; Benjamin Carpenter, of Stourbridge; Thomas Northcote Toller, of Kettering; John Bowles, the political pamphleteer; Timothy Kenrick, of Exeter; Joseph Bealey, of Cockey Moor in Lancashire; Joseph Fawcett, of the Old Jewry, London; Nathaniel Highmore, M.D. D.C.L.; William Broadbent, of Warrington; Samuel Catlow, of Mansfield; Eliezer Cogan, of Walthamstow; Edmund Butcher, of Sidmouth; John Kentish, of Birmingham; William Shepherd, of Gateacre near Liverpool; John Edwards, of Birmingham; Israel Worsley, of Plymouth; David Jardine, of Bath; William Field, of Warwick; John Reid, M.D. of London; Arthur Aikin, F.L.S. &c. &c. &c.

The Wesleyan Methodists have recently opened a new chapel in Cow lane. It is 41 ft. long, by 43 ft. wide, neatly pewed, and galleried on three sides.

Benefactions (p. 239). The Grammar School was endowed by William Parker the elder, citizen and draper, of London, a native of this borough, who by will dated 6 Apr. 1576 devised his manor of Upwick Hall, with all lands thereto belonging, in Aldbury, Storford, and Little Hadham, in Herts, and Farnham in Essex, to Agnes his wife, for her life, on condition that she should provide an honest discreet man to instruct 50 scholars freely in the "liberall scyence of Gramer and the understanding of the Lattyne tonge in Davintree," and pay yearly, at the four usual feasts, by equal portions, £20 to the schoolmaster and usher; viz. £15 to the schoolmaster, and £5 to the usher; and the further sum of £10 yearly at the times aforesaid, to the relief of six poor persons in Daventree. In default of these payments he devised the manor and lands in fee successively to William Parker the younger, to Robert Dickenson, and to the bailiff of Daventry and his successors for ever, subject to the above conditions. A suit in chancery was instituted in 1602, at the relation of the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty of Daventry, plaintiffs, and Humphry Corbett and Agnes his wife, William Parker the younger, and Robert Dickenson, defendants, complaining that after the marriage of Agnes, widow of the testator, with Humphry, they and the other defendants had confederated together to conceal the boundaries and particulars of the manor and lands from the plaintiffs, insinuating that after the death of Agnes they would not be bound to continue the payments to the schoolmaster and poor persons in Daventry; and for "the better effecting of their "unconscionable purposes" Humphry had bought in, the contingent right and title of William Parker the younger, and had also compounded or agreed with one John Crosse, heir general to the devisor at the common law, who it was pretended was to take benefit of the condition at the common law for non-payment of these bequests: and further complaining that Humphry and Agnes had appointed one Anthony Marshall to be schoolmaster, who neither took half the number of scholars which the devisor proposed, nor taught them gratuitously, and by his negligence and insufficiency those who had children to be instructed were driven to provide another master at their own charge. The defendants put in their answer, and the plaintiffs in their replication maintained their complaint, and further stated that they had bought a piece of ground, and had thereupon "built a verie faire "schoolehouse, with needfull rowmes for the schoolemaster and usher of the same school, to the charge of the "complainants twoe hundred pounds." The cause being "fully and deliberately heard," and it being doubted that John Crosse, the heir at law, who was present at the bar, might impeach the charitable intent of the devisor, he was appealed to, and "gave his full consent and good lyking." Whereupon it was decreed in Michaelmas term 44 Eliz. (1602), that in future the lord of the manor of Upwick Hall for the time being should nominate the schoolmaster to the bishop of Peterborough, on whose approval the appointment should continue until death or reasonable cause of removal; that so often as a vacancy arose in the six poor persons (or beadsmen as they are now called) the bailiff and recorder should send the names of three poor persons of Daventry to the lord of the aforesaid manor, who should nominate one of them to supply the place of the person deceased or removed; and that the complaint against Anthony Marshall should be referred to the bishop of Peterborough to examine and determine [a].

The appointment of the schoolmaster and beadsmen is now vested in the co-lords of the manor of Upwick.

John Farrer, of Daventry, gent. by will, 29 Mar. 1729, gave £400 to five trustees to purchase lands of inheritance, and pay the rents to the master of the Grammar School at Daventry, if he should be in holy orders, upon the express condition that he should read morning and evening prayers every Sunday in the year (though an holiday), and also read, every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday in the year (except when either of those days should be an holiday), morning prayer in the parish church of Daventry, according to the usage of the church of England prescribed by the book of Common Prayer; and on condition also that he should at all times assist the minister of Daventry in administering the holy sacrament, as often as such minister should think fit to administer the same; but if there should be no schoolmaster, or such schoolmaster should not be in holy orders, or should neglect or refuse compliance with these conditions, then he directed his trustees, during such time, to find such person or persons as they should think fit, to read prayers and assist the minister as aforesaid, and pay to him the rents of the lands so to be purchased; his will being, that prayers should be read in the church of Daventry in manner as aforesaid, the minister reading prayers on all holydays, Wednesdays, and Fridays; and that the salary of the schoolmaster be augmented, and the minister of the parish be in some measure eased, in regard that he thought the duty of the place was too hard for one minister to perform without prejudice to his health. In 1738 the trustees purchased about 22 acres of land at Cosford in Warwickshire, and afterwards sold a small portion to the proprietors of the Oxford canal for £125, which is invested in the 3 per cent. cons. and produces £3. 15s. per ann. The estate is now let on lease for £39. 14s. 9d. per ann.

John Sawbridge, of Daventry, gent. by will, 11 Aug. 1740, bequeathed £150 to buy or build a house for the master of the grammar-school. With this sum, and £100 added by his brother, Edward Sawbridge, gent. and £30 by the corporation, a house was purchased in 1768, but being found inadequate and inconvenient, it was sold in 1779 for £367, which is invested in the 4 per cent. cons. and produces £16 per ann.

The school-house is situated in Cow lane, and is built on ground purchased of Richard Farmer, who in 1692 conveyed it to sir Robert Spencer and others, in trust for the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty.

The Beadsmen, besides the £10 yearly under Parker's will as above, receive £9 yearly from Mr. J. Sawbridge's bequest of £100, vested in the Cosford charity-school estate; £9. 18s. yearly from £200 bequeathed by Mr. John Watters in 1762, and £100 by Mrs. Mary Watters in 1762, both now secured in mortgage on the Moot Hall; £5 yearly from the Boddington estate, hereafter noticed, arising out of Mrs. Mary Walford's will in 1765; and £30 yearly from the said estate arising out of Mr. Edward Sawbridge's will in 1772.

The English Charity-School was instituted early in the last century. Nathaniel lord Crewe, of Steane, and bishop of Durham, by will, 24 June 1720, settled a yearly rent-charge of £6 out of a house in Hull, on the minister and churchwardens of Daventry, towards the maintenance of a charity-school there.

By indenture dated 1 May 1745, reciting that

William Sawbridge, of Daventry, gent. by will, 20 Feb. 1718-9, gave £10 to the charity-school at Daventry for teaching one poor boy, which sum was then in the hands of his son and executor Edward Sawbridge, as also a benefaction of £10 to the school from Thomas Wilson, of Newnham, gent.:

That Edward Maynard, late of Boddington, D.D. by will 21 Dec. 1726, gave to the corporation of Daventry £300 towards settling and maintaining a charity-school there for teaching poor children to read, write, and cast accounts:

That Peter Sutch, late of Daventry, gent. by will, 7 July 1731, gave to the bailiff and burgesses, and trustees of the charity-school there, £100, the interest to be applied annually to placing a poor child apprentice:

That Eleanor Bromwich, of Daventry, widow, in her life-time, at the desire of her daughter, Shuckburgh Bromwich, deceased, gave £40 for the benefit of the charity-school at Daventry:

That Thomas Thornton, of Brockhall, esq. in his life-time, gave £300*, in order to promote so good an undertaking, and in aid of the purchase of the hereinafter-mentioned estate:

That John Sawbridge, late of Daventry, gent. by will, 11 Aug. 1740, gave to the corporation of Daventry £50, to be applied for the benefit of the English charity-school there, at their discretion; £100, the interest to be annually divided between the parish clerk and sexton, for their constant attendance at the morning prayers daily throughout the year; and £100, the interest to be annually paid by the chamberlain, in equal portions, to the six poor men called the beadsmen, at the same time they receive Mr. Parker's charity, reserving to himself £1 for his trouble:

That Frances Thompson, late of Daventry, widow, and daughter of William Sawbridge, gent. by will, 24 June 1738, gave to the bailiff and the four eldest burgesses of Daventry £100, the interest to be annually divided on the 9th of February amongst 15 poor widows there, as the majority of the said trustees should think fit:

That John Snart, late citizen of London, by will, 1744, gave to the parish of Daventry, where he was born, £100, the interest to be distributed in bread every Sunday to such poor people of the parish as shall come constantly to church:

And reciting also, amongst other reasons for consolidating the above charities, that it was conceived the intended purchase would be very advantageous and beneficial, in regard the estate intended to be conveyed was then of the value of, and actually cost the said Edward Sawbridge (the vendor), at the time he purchased it, £1500, and the above legacies and benefactions amounted to no more than £1210; and that Edward Sawbridge was willing and desirous to add and contribute the surplus or over-value of the estate for the above charitable purposes, and especially towards augmenting the revenues of the charity-school; it was witnessed, that in consideration of £1210, the said Edward Sawbridge, of Daventry, gent. conveyed a freehold estate of about 75 acres, at Cosford in the parish of Newbold on Avon, Warwickshire, by appointment of the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty of Daventry, to seven trustees, in trust to apply the rents in certain proportions for the support of the charity school, and to the specific uses of the miscellaneous bequests of Mr. John Sawbridge, Mrs. Thompson, and Mr. Snart. The trustees were empowered to make from time to time such orders for the management of the school as the majority of them, in conjunction with the bailiff of the borough and the minister of the parish of Daventry, who were to be considered additional and standing trustees, might deem proper; in pursuance of which power several judicious regulations were introduced into the last trust deed executed in 1821; and it is further agreed that the trustees shall yearly, on the last Sunday in October, procure some gentleman in holy orders to preach a sermon in the parish church of Daventry for the benefit of the said charity-school; and that two or more of the trustees shall collect at the church doors, after both the morning and afternoon service, the voluntary contributions of all charitable and well-disposed persons.

The Cosford estate is now let on lease for £125 per ann. of which £89 is appropriated to the school; to which is to be added £4 per ann. under the will of Mr. Edward Sawbridge in 1772, and a fund of 1100 3 per cent. red. cons. producing £33 per ann. arising from charity sermons, &c.

The present finances of the trustees enable them to clothe and educate 24 boys and 6 girls.

The boys' school is kept in a part of the old priory, and is now combined with a Bellian or National School established in 1813, and supported by donations and annual subscriptions.

* Stands under the name of Catherine Combes in Abstract, p. 239.

The trustees of the Cosford estate allot £9 to Mr. J. Sawbridge's gift to the parish clerk and sexton; £9 to his gift to the beadsmen; £9 to Mrs. Thompson's gift to the widows; £9 to Mr. Snart's gift to the poor, for their respective shares of the rent, and the surplus after the school payment is distributed.

Bryan Abbey of Daventry, yeoman, by will, in 1624, and Mrs. Hannah Slough of Oxford, a native of this town, by will, in 1684, gave £60 each to the poor of Daventry; with which a close of about 3 acres in Daventry has been purchased, and the rent, now £12 per ann. is distributed weekly in bread.

Timothy Newton of Middleburgh in Zealand, born in Daventry, by will, in 1656; and Erasmus Dryden, esq. brother of sir Robert Dryden, bart. of Canons Ashby, by will, in 1708; gave £100 each to the poor of Daventry. These sums were laid out in land, which was re-sold to advantage, and the money vested in the 3 per cent. consols*. It is now placed in Mortgage on the Moot Hall, and the interest annually distributed.

Richard Farmer of Daventry, gent. by will, 18 Sept. 1662, directed that after the decease of his aunt, Mrs. Dorothy Norwood, and his cousin, Edward Farmer, or any other person to whom the term for years of his messuages, lands, &c. in Daventry and Drayton, holden of Christ Church college, Oxford, should be conveyed and assigned by his executors, pursuant to his will, the executors, administrators, and assigns of such devisee should, not only during the residue of the term, but also during every future term granted by the college, pay out of the rents and profits, to the bailiff of Daventry and the three senior burgesses of the corporation, £30 yearly, in trust, within one week after receiving the same, to pay two parts thereof to the vicar of Daventry and his successors, and distribute the other third part among the poor of the parish of Daventry, according to their discretion.

He entreated and desired the college of Christ Church to assist his charitable intention whenever they made a new lease or grant of the said premises, by providing, in any way most apt and convenient, that they should be charged with the aforesaid payment of £30 yearly; and conjured the bailiff, burgesses, and the rest of the parishioners of Daventry, not to shorten their allowance to the poor hereafter by reason of his gift, but rather enlarge it, that what he had given might be, as he intended, for the advantage of the poor, and not of the rich. The rent-charge continues to be paid by the lessee of the college.

Mrs. Mary Watters of Daventry, by will, 5 June 1762, gave £100 for the relief of the poor of Daventry, to be applied at the discretion of her executors, who appointed the bailiff, justice, and three senior burgesses, to distribute the interest annually, in 5s. each, among poor widows or other necessitous housekeepers.

Mrs. Eleanor Bromwich of Daventry, by will, in 1762, gave £42, the interest of which is also annually distributed amongst the poor widows and necessitous housekeepers.

Mrs. Mary Walford of Daventry, by will, in 1765, gave £200 for the benefit of the poor of Daventry, and £100 to the six beadsmen there. By deed of 20 Jan. 1777, reciting the purchase of the Boddington estate (hereafter mentioned), and that the above legacy of £100 was part of the consideration money, and that the other legacy of £200 was expended in building on and improving the estate, the trustees covenanted with Henry Sawbridge, esq. nephew of the testatrix, to pay two seventeenth parts of the clear annual rent to poor persons of Daventry, of his appointment, or, in default, at their own discretion; and another seventeenth part to the six poor beadsmen there.

Edward Sawbridge of Daventry, gent. by will, in 1772, gave £1400 for charitable purposes in Daventry, to be invested in land, in trust, to pay yearly £4 to the master of the charity school; £2 to the recorder; £1 to the town clerk; £5 to the sergeants at mace; £1 for a sermon on Good Friday; £10 for placing a poor boy apprentice; and the surplus to the poor. With this legacy, combined with Mrs. Walford's, a freehold estate of about 73¾ acres at Boddington was purchased in 1776, and conveyed to the bailiff, recorder, and town clerk, and six other trustees. It is now let on lease for £90 per ann.; and, after the stipulated payments, £30 is appropriated to the beadsmen, and the residue is distributed on St. Thomas's day, in sums not less than 5s. nor more than 7s. 6d. each, among the poor.

Henry Holland, a learned papist, was born in this town towards the middle of the sixteenth century. From Eton school he was elected in 1565 scholar of St. John's college in Oxford, where he took one degree in arts; but renouncing the protestant religion, quitted the kingdom, and having been admitted into the english catholic college at Douay in Flanders, was ordained priest, and became bachelor of divinity. He removed with that college to Rheims in 1578, and was one of the most active and able associates in the english translation of the scriptures called the Rhemish Testament. His zeal then prompted him to undertake a missionary tour to England, but the number of his converts being more than counterbalanced by the inconveniences and dangers of his situation, he returned again to Douay, after an absence of some years, and resumed his academical employments. He subsequently accepted an invitation to lecture on divinity in the neighbouring monastery of Anchine, and died there at an advanced age in 1625. He was buried in the cloisters, and an epitaph placed over his grave, beginning

Dantria me genuit, me clara Vigornia fovit,
Ætonia me docuit, post docet Oxonium.

On the breaking out of the civil war, he was compelled to desert his see, and retiring to London, lived there in great obscurity till October 1648, when he died, and was buried in the church of St. Clement Danes near Temple Bar.
